Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not informed how he would vote if he were present. However, I find I can transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. I do so and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is necessarily detained. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE and Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are unavoidably detained.

I announce the following general pairs: The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]; the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]; the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]; and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am not advised how he would vote. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 34, as follows:

So Mr. McKELLAR's motion to adjourn to Monday was rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Thomas Parran, of New York, to be Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for a term of 4 years (reappointment).

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Jonas W. Graber, of Kansas City, Kans., to be Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to fill an existing vacancy.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Paul R. Leake, of Woodland, Calif., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 28, with headquarters at San Francisco, Calif., in place of Charles O. Dunbar, deceased.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, March 9, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose compassions fail not and whose loving kindness reacheth unto the world's end: Help us day by day, under the direction of Thy wisdom, to ordain for the governance of this Nation only such things as shall be pleasing unto Thee. Let Thy fatherly hand be over our beloved country with its manifold gifts of Thy bestowal. Where it is corrupt, purify it; where it is in error, direct it; where in anything it is amiss, reform it; where it is right, establish it; where it is in want, provide for it; where it is divided, reunite it. All of which we ask in the name of Him who bade us pray for the coming of Thy kingdom—Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, March 8, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. GLASS, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, read the following letter:

UNITED STATES SENATE, March 9, 1940.

To the Senate:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the act approved May 17, 1928, I hereby appoint Senators THOMAS of Oklahoma and ADAMS of Colorado, to represent the Senate Appropriations Committee on the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy during the remainder of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

CARTER GLASS,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman and secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report covering operations of the Corporation for the fourth quarter of 1939, and also for the period from its organization on February 2, 1932, to December 31, 1939, inclusive, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Niagara County, N. Y., favoring adoption of the so-called Kennedy and Harter resolutions, relative to the proposed St. Lawrence seaway and power project, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BARBOUR presented the following resolution of the House of Assembly of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas on September 17, 1796, George Washington, the father and first President of these United States, delivered his farewell address to the people of his beloved country; and

Whereas in that address George Washington outlined certain suggestions for the guidance of the people of this Nation, among which was his opposition to more than two terms for a President of the United States; and

Whereas his determination not to seek reelection for the third time established a precedent and tradition which has been held sacred and unbroken by its successors in office; and

Whereas this tradition of the first President of the United States not to seek reelection for a third time forms a steadfast bulwark protecting the people of this Nation against the serious threat of the establishment of a dictator form of government in replacement of our present representative Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this House of Assembly for the State of New Jersey do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States of which our State of New Jersey is an important part, to enact proper and suitable legislation that will prevent any President from seeking a third term; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, signed by the speaker and attested by the clerk be forwarded to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress, and to each Member of Congress from the State of New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARBOUR also presented the following resolution of the House of Assembly of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolution requesting the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, of Culver City, Calif., and urging Mr. John W. Considine, Jr., to arrange for the premier showing of the motion picture Edison the Man in the municipalities of the Oranges and Maplewood, in the county of Essex, this State

Whereas Thomas A. Edison by his inventions contributed greatly to the advancement of science and was a foremost citizen of our State; and

Whereas it is fitting and appropriate that he should be signally honored: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, of Culver City, Calif., and Mr. John W. Considine, Jr., are urged and requested to arrange for the premiere showing of the motion picture Edison the Man in the municipalities of the Oranges and Maplewood, in the county of Essex in this State; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by the speaker and attested by the clerk, be forwarded to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, Mr. John W. Considine, Jr., and to the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Medford, Mass., favoring the elimination to certain questions from the 1940 census questionnaire, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the elimination of certain questions from the 1940 census questionnaire, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts praying for the consideration of proposals tending to a limitation of existing war and making for sound and enduring peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Council of the City of Lynn, Mass., protesting against the enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1299) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 3551. A bill to authorize the erection on the battlefield of Sackets Harbor, N. Y., of a monument to Maj. Gen. Jacob Brown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

On page 80, line 5 (Senate subcommittee print), after the words "Agricultural Adjustment Administration" and before the colon, insert: "except that, within the total limitations imposed by section 392 (b) of said act for administrative expenses in the District of Columbia, regional offices, and in the several States, such limitations may be interchanged, in whole or in part, during the current fiscal year, between the District of Columbia, regional offices, and the several States."

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed. (For amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

INVESTIGATION RELATING TO THE PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 241), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to matters relating to the administration of public lands with a view to determining, among other things, the extent to which—

(1) the so-called emergency powers conferred upon various governmental agencies in connection with the administration of such lands have been abused;

(2) purchases of privately owned lands have been made by the Government through the Resettlement Administration, the Farm Security Administration, the Soil Conservation Service, and other agencies for the alleged purpose of withdrawing "submarginal" lands from production and without regard to the adverse effect of such purchases upon the State and local tax systems or the proper balance of livestock units;

(3) the Federal bureaus and agencies administering the public lands have been enlarged and extended and bureaus within bureaus have been created for such purpose;

(4) Federal bureaus and agencies have interfered with water rights established and legally recognized under State laws;

(5) public lands have been improperly diverted under section 15 of the Taylor Grazing Act to areas classified by the Government as "marginal areas" without due regard to the effect upon the proper balance of established range and livestock units previously leasing the lands so diverted;

(6) administrative rules and regulations have been established under the provisions of section 2 of the Taylor Grazing Act which have resulted in extending the authority of the administrator of such act and which have evaded the limitations and restrictions placed upon such administrator by other specific provisions of such act;

(7) administrative authority has been abused for the purpose of circumventing the jurisdiction of the courts in which the legality of such authority is being determined, by attempting to coerce the Federal courts or to use such courts for coercive purposes in connection with such determinations, or by attempting to coerce individual litigants with respect to matters pending in the courts;

(8) representatives of the Department of the Interior have attempted through coercive tactics to bring about the reversal of views expressed collectively in regularly called representative meetings relating to the creation of grazing districts; and

(9) there has been interference with the established principles relating to supervision of the livestock industry which have long been applied by governmental bureaus and agencies charged with administering public lands, and there has been a disregard of the principles which are essentially necessary for the purpose of providing stability to the range-livestock industry which is in competition with non-range-livestock operations not under Government supervision.

The committee shall report to the Senate the results of its investigation at the earliest practicable date, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT ON THE FARM SITUATION

[Mr. BANKHEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the President of the United States on March 8, 1940, to the farmers of the country assembled at the A. A. A. farm dinner, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WALSH AT THE DEDICATION OF TABLET TO PRESIDENT THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him on the occasion of the dedication of a tablet to the late President Theodore Roosevelt at Montauk, N. Y., on August 13, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY EDWARD A. O'NEAL ON AGRICULTURE

[Mr. TRUMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered today by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which appears in the Appendix.]

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

[Mr. CONNALLY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Greenville (S. C.) News entitled "Weak Lynch Bill Argument," which appears in the Appendix.]

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington (D. C.) Daily News of Friday, March 8, 1940, entitled "Hatch Act Resignations Are 'Final,' Says Jackson," which appears in the Appendix.]

BETHLEHEM STEEL CO. 1939 INCOME—ARTICLE FROM ST. LOUIS STAR-TIMES

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the St. Louis (Mo.) Star-Times with reference to the annual statement of the Bethlehem Steel Co. for 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES BILL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I find in looking over my amendment that the penalty provided for violation of section 12, which my amendment modifies, could not apply. I therefore have prepared and present a perfecting amendment, which I should like to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Michigan modifying his amendment? The yeas and nays have been ordered on the original amendment, and, therefore, unanimous consent is required to modify it. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be modified according to the desire of the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I will say that the modification of the amendment simply provides that any person violating the provisions of the section shall be subject to the penalties provided in the original Hatch Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator speaks of the penalties provided in the original act. There is a criminal penalty in the original act.

Mr. BROWN. The loss of funds, of course, could not apply to the persons who are prohibited from political activity by my amendment. I, therefore, have provided that the penalties set forth in section 8 of the act of August 2, 1939, which are criminal penalties, shall apply.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely want to say, when the Senator speaks of applying the criminal penalties provided in section 8, that the section provides for both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, we have been discussing the Hatch bill for several days, not without a great deal of earnestness and ardor, and possibly some heat; but, to my mind, the most important effect of the Hatch bill as a long-range proposition has not been mentioned.

I have always believed in the two-party system of government, and I fear for what will happen to our country if that system is once destroyed, because its destruction will inevitably lead to a bipartisan control such as we had in Pennsylvania for many years.

For 30 years I battled in Pennsylvania, with a few other sincere and earnest Democrats, to break up that combination. We were unable to do so entirely until we carried the State in 1934 and passed a bill known as the party-raiding bill, compelling voters to register in one party only, and providing that candidates for office could run only on one ticket, with the exception of those who were candidates for the judiciary.

Thirty years ago I became very much interested in the bipartisan control of Pennsylvania. I had been voting for a few years before that and was a member of the county committee; but in 1910 the late Senator Penrose, with his organization, took indirect control of our State convention and nominated a stooge as the Democratic candidate for Governor. A third ticket was organized and came within 15,000 or 18,000 votes of victory. The same thing occurred again in 1918 and in 1926.

At the present time the Democrats of Pennsylvania, and not the Republicans, control the Democratic Party; but during the time to which I have referred it was chiefly because of the large financial contributions to which the Republicans had access that they were able, with a bipartisan county control and a bipartisan control of the city of Philadelphia, to accomplish this purpose.

In 1884 the first steel man took an active part in national politics. I refer to B. F. Jones, who was chairman of the Blaine and Logan campaign committee. Prior to that time the railroads and the Standard Oil group had controlled the politics of the State. As the steel industry expanded and grew those connected with it became much more active in politics, and it is common knowledge in Pittsburgh that in 1896 Mr. Frick furnished the sinews of war that secured the Presidential nomination for William McKinley, of Ohio, from the late Speaker Thomas B. Reed, of Maine.

From the time when the steel corporation was formed it was quite apparent that the president of that corporation, the late Charles M. Schwab, took charge of financing the Republican organization in Pennsylvania. He was in my office on February 15, 1938, trying to assist a W. P. A. project in his native county of Cambria, Pa. While he was there, for an hour and a half or 2 hours, he reminisced a great deal and gave me much interesting information. It was in no way confidential, because there were in the office two other persons whom he had never met until that day.

He said, "Senator, I used frequently to come to Washington. I never received a telegram from the late Senator Penrose without dropping everything and coming to Washington. He never asked for less than $250,000 on each visit, and sometimes more. It reached the maximum in one Presidential campaign when I raised the sum of $8,000,000; and, as Max Leslie, the former city leader in Pennsylvania, would say, most of that was free money." By "free money" in Pennsylvania, I presume as elsewhere, is meant money that does not have to be accounted for.

We know now, from the people the Republican National Committee has put in charge, that the money for this campaign is going to be raised by the same steel and oil group. With Joe Pew, of Pennsylvania, and Ernest Weir, of Pittsburgh, and Moe Annenburg with access to all the corrupt funds of the system of gambling, and Joe Grundy's manufacturers' organization, we know what to expect this fall; and there will be more "free money" available than ever in the history of our State and Nation.

The passage of this bill is going to stop the small contributions, as the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] said yesterday, and prevent the "two-bit" and the $2 contributions. The result will be that the only financial assistance anybody will get in either of the large parties will be from those who wish to secure something. Of course, we all know why the steel people have contributed so much in the past. It was entirely due to the high protective tariff; but I fear for the State and the Nation when these men get going.

I voted against the first Hatch bill when it was before the Senate, and tried to bring it back on the Senate floor; but the author of the bill, with some indignation—possibly rightly so—thought I took advantage of his absence in obtaining permission to recall the bill. I later yielded, much to my regret, to the position he took. He kept faith with me, however, in what he promised to do. I think this is going to be the most destructive piece of legislation for the two-party system of government—in which I am a thorough believer—that has ever been put on the legislative books of our country.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield. I desire to yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to ask a question, but I did not want to disturb the Senator during his remarks. Why does the Senator say that the passage of the bill will prevent $2 contributions? Will he elaborate upon that subject? How is it going to destroy the two-party system?

Mr. GUFFEY. We had the original measure in effect last summer, and it did stop the small contributions. The persons who ordinarily would have made them were afraid to contribute. They were afraid to contribute either in their own names, or, in some cases, even in the names of any members of their families. I am talking from the experience of one campaign.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator understands that under the bill which was in effect last fall, to which he refers, the only persons prohibited were persons actually receiving relief.

Mr. GUFFEY. I know that; but their fear of the bill affecting them caused them to refuse and decline to contribute. I do not say they were solicited, but a distinct falling off took place in every classification.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the Senator does not refer to the workers on relief when he refers to contributions.

Mr. GUFFEY. I did not refer to the workers on relief in any sense of the word.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, we have been discussing the pending bill for some time, and I feel quite certain that every Member of the body knows exactly what he is going to do when the vote comes on the passage of the measure.

Irrespective of that, it seems to me the question which should be settled now is whether or not the bill should pass. I am going to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] in order to be consistent. I think every Member of the body knows that I was against the original Hatch bill, and I am against this one; but it seems to me the Senate has sufficient information on the measure to take action upon it.

I have always been against including additional groups in the provisions of the so-called Hatch bill, and that is the reason why I am against the amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan. Irrespective of our desires, however, irrespective of what we think of the pending measure, it seems to me the time has arrived when we should vote "Yes" or "No."

I hope that after the Senate disposes of the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, without trying to prohibit any other Senator from submitting any amendment going to the vitals of the legislation, we may have a vote on the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I intend to vote against the pending amendment. My primary reason for voting against it needs some explanation, because some thoughtless person might assume that a vote against this amendment would be a vote condoning the large donations of persons connected with great and powerful corporations. The real reason why I am opposing the amendment is the fact that I have presented an amendment to the Hatch bill, which lies on the table, to be called up at the proper time; but an explanation of that amendment seems to me to be the very best argument which can be offered at this time against the pending amendment, so that I shall make the explanation now.

I wish to make it clear in the beginning that I have supported the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in his ever-difficult fight for reform in the relations between elections and patronage, and that I have resisted with him every effort to destroy or to weaken the Hatch Act. Unless my amendment is to be a contribution in the same direction as the Hatch Act and on the same plane, I do not want it to be considered even at the proper time.

President Cleveland in his first inaugural address said in better words than I could command that which I would say today in support of broadening the Hatch Act. President Cleveland on that occasion stated:

> Our citizens have the right to protection from the incompetency of public employees who hold the office solely as the reward of partisan service, and from the corrupting influence of those who promise—> and the vicious methods of those who expect such rewards, and those who worthily seek public employment have the right to insist that merit and competency shall be recognized instead of party subservience or the surrender of honest political beliefs.

And this is the point I should like to emphasize—

Mr. President, I should like to say at this point to those who are interested in the various reforms attempting to overcome what is termed "pernicious political activity" that if they will read the speeches which have been made in this body against those reforms from time to time they will realize that everything that has been said against the Hatch bill here is merely a reiteration and a repetition of that which has heretofore been said. It is now about a hundred years since the spoils system was at its most rampant stage in the history of our country. It is now over half a century since Senator George Washington Plunkett said what was later said by the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the gold clause, that civil service means the end of the Constitution of the United States; that civil service means the end of the Declaration of Independence, and therefore every American who thinks well of his country is opposed to this innovation and this supposedly reform act.

Because of these things, consequently, we have witnessed the development of civil service affecting the old-line departments; we have seen opportunities for corruption in elections taken away from corrupt candidates and bosses bit by bit, and have passed the Hatch Act, which was to begin a new era in politics and government as enacted in the beginning, and as it is to be extended within the next few years—few hours, I hope—all of which mark the beginning of the end of a long period during which men have been able to perpetuate themselves in office merely by keeping obedient machines under their control.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I like the Senator's expression "mark the beginning," for he understands, I am sure, that I have never contended that the act did anything except make a beginning.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator has been interrupted, will he permit another interruption?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator said something about political machines perpetuating themselves in power simply because they are machines controlling State machinery and Federal machinery at the same time. But the Senator must know that the Democratic machine in Pennsylvania was defeated in the last election. They held the State offices in Pennsylvania and they had the Federal offices. The Senator must also know that the Democrats lost in Ohio, that the Democratic organization had control of all of the offices in the State of Ohio, and had control of the Federal offices, yet the Democratic Party was turned out.

In my judgment, two things entered into the result, but chiefly it was the money that was spent in Ohio—and we all know about it, because we read about it in the reports of campaign expenditures and the money that was spent in Pennsylvania. We know that money was the thing which controlled those elections, and that it is the thing which is the corrupting influence in politics in this country. It is not the little fellow who holds a piddling job somewhere that is threatening clean politics. That which, in my judgment, threatens politics is money, and I desire to ask the Senator whether he does not think that the results in Ohio and Pennsylvania were inconsistent with the statement he just made, that the machines perpetuate themselves in power merely because they have control of the offices.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the answer of course can be yes or no. When the Senator from Indiana asks me to call attention to pernicious activities other than those mentioned in the bill, it would not be hard to go into the whole story. The use of money is extremely bad. In answer to his illustrations, I say yes, the use of money can always be defeated in the United States of America if we are able to get to the people, and I feel that I am qualified to testify to the fact that men can fight against odds and can succeed against odds which seem utterly insurmountable even to all of his own associates in his own party, if he is able to go out and get in front of the people.

The question which the Senator from Indiana propounds has no bearing at all upon the merits or demerits of the pending bill, because the Hatch bill is not a catch-all to overcome and destroy every pernicious activity that is resorted to in politics. It is very specific in its nature, and it is because it is specific in its nature that the simple amendment which I intend to offer will be a contribution to it, and wholly within its spirit, for the Hatch bill does in its practical aspects operate against political parties. My amendment would make it possible to make the Hatch bill in its practice, regardless of the way in which it is worded, operate against wrongdoers, whether they represent the party in power or whether they represent the party attempting to gain power.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MINTON. My interruption a moment ago was prompted by the Senator's statement that the people who are in charge of political organizations perpetuate themselves in power by their control of the political jobs in their States. I merely wanted to call his attention to the fact that they did not perpetuate themselves in power in Ohio and in Pennsylvania.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The best answer to that would be for the Senator merely to get the financial statistics of the two major parties in 1936. The Republican Party spent nearly twice as much as the Democratic Party spent, and it had to its credit 2 States, while the Democratic Party had to its credit 46 States. That should be a lesson to anyone. It should be the type of lesson which would make the American people feel happy to realize that, after all, they cannot be bought and they will not be bought, and the American people will not be moved by money in great abundance if the candidates representing the people of the United States are able to get before the people. That is my only point.

Everyone knows that there is an opportunity for abuse under the present system, and the Hatch bill is an attempt to foreclose that opportunity. The address made yesterday by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] gave proof of the kind of thing that is done, which actually can be remedied, and the sort of thing which no one in this body likes and upon which no one wants to be dependent. I would not like, and I know the Senator from Indiana would not like, to have to announce to the people of the United States that he or I was a beneficiary of the sort of thing which was made open here by the speech of the Senator from West Virginia last evening.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Would not the Senator dislike to be the beneficiary of the things the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] exposed?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Certainly I would.

Mr. MINTON. We will, of course, grant that both of them are bad; but which, in the judgment of the fair and able Senator from Utah, is worse?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] exposed yesterday is damnable. That which was exposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was bad. Do I make my degree plain?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. The argument of the Senator from Indiana is to the effect that if one thief is loose we should open the jail and let all the thieves loose.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] for his courage and persistence. I share his views.

There is an invisible enemy to good government which still remains. That enemy operates in the field in which the Senator from New Mexico is attempting to bring about certain corrections, and attempting to bring about certain political habits which, when once adopted, the people would like. That is why I have brought into the picture the statement of Senator George Washington Plunkett—not a United States Senator, but New York State Senator George Washington Plunkett—probably the most picturesque man in the history of the United States, who opposed any kind of civil service, and opposed it in the most picturesque way. Any student of politics would love to spend an evening over the little book which is attributed to Senator Plunkett. The point is that every reform which is brought about is, in its conclusion, merely habit-forming. It does not overcome actual abuse, and it may drive abuses deeper. I doubt very much whether there is any way to correct the evil will or actions of a group of men who want to gain unjust political advantage in the Government of the United States. They will find a way in time, if that is their idea. But at the same time habit-forming acts, such as the Hatch Act, do lay down a standard to which honest men adhere, and which earnest men are willing to accept.

There is at least in every political campaign an army of opportunists who seek to get into a position to dispense patronage, and the larger army of opportunists who wish to jockey themselves into position to accept it. These groups are delighted with the Hatch Act because in it they see those entrenched in office hamstrung, those not entrenched free to use any device known to carry elections, except to promise openly an office as a reward for a campaign, and in the presence of adverse witnesses, for I know, as other Senators do, that it is written into the statute books that candidates may not promise patronage as a reward for services. It is difficult to be caught at making promises in violation of the statute—a statute which will be of much more worth if my amendment is considered favorably.

The groups who are not in office, the outs, or call them what you will, are delighted with the Hatch Act. This time they happen to be the Republicans. They are delighted with the Hatch Act, and the consistent way in which they support or have supported the Hatch Act so far shows just how delighted they are. I wonder if they will express as much delight when the time comes to vote on my amendment. If the Republican Party lines up for my amendment, as it has lined up for most of the Hatch Act so far, then we shall have the honest answer of a sincere endeavor on the part of a great political party to bring about a reform even to its own disadvantage. That will be unique in the history of the United States and unique in the history of politics and probably unique in the history of politicians in this body.

The groups which represent the outs are delighted with the Hatch Act, not because they are interested in keeping men from building corrupt machines, for they themselves are building corrupt machines, as was shown by the remarks and the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and as was shown by the actions of that very party in the kind of appointments it makes. Being not a part of government, they are not controlled by the Hatch Act. They are only potentials. And may I emphasize that word "potentials," because a potential office seeker has probably just as bad an influence on the body politic as has an actual office seeker.

There is nothing to prevent their covering a whole State of the Nation, making speeches, sitting on platforms, handing out literature, raising money, and planning for the day and the hour when they may take over in a body. While a lawyer speaks, hoping thereby to become United States district attorney, the United States district attorney himself is silent, afraid of the penal provisions of the Hatch Act, afraid of the disgrace of being a law violator by contributing his talents to his beliefs and party principles. I believe he should stay on the job, prosecuting his cases in the name of the Government, and let those who do not have a monetary and personal interest in the result do the work for the campaign of his party. By the same token, so should the lawyer who hopes to become district attorney by making a speech for a candidate for President, a candidate for Senator, or a candidate for the House of Representatives. We have muzzled the United States marshal and all his staff. By the same token, campaigns of others should be carried on without the valiant and selfish efforts of those whose sole interest in the outcome is to succeed them in their jobs.

Let me read my amendment. It is short:

SEC. —. (a) Hereafter no person shall be appointed to any position or employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or in any agency or department thereof, if, during the 2-year period immediately preceding such appointment or employment, such person has taken an active part in political management or in a political campaign for the purpose of affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession.

(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to persons appointed to the Cabinet or to persons appointed to the office of Ambassador or other public minister.

Is it not evident that this is the other half of the Hatch Act; that the Hatch Act, important as it is, is half an act, and this is its natural corollary?

I shall not take time to trace the history of the merit system, or the shocking election scandals of a prior generation, leading to such extreme measures as expulsion from the United States Senate. I am convinced that as representatives of good government we are gradually getting better, and as the Senator from New Mexico said yesterday we must never turn back; we must never turn our faces in the wrong direction; and I do not believe we shall. The Hatch Act and the amendments of the Senator from New Mexico to his own act of today are here to stay. They may be improved upon; they may be broadened; but America will not turn back; the United States Government, having achieved something fine, will not cheapen herself with repeals and nullifications.

No party should lose an election because of patronage. No party should ever win an election because of patronage. The Senator from New Mexico was nauseated over some aspects of the report of the committee of the Senator from Texas, as was I, yet they were not so tarnishing as the stained record of an older generation. It is to the credit of this body that, despite the fact that its predecessors never seemed to be able or willing to do anything about it, this Congress did most earnestly attack the problem of elections, under the leadership of the Senator from New Mexico; and at a great personal sacrifice, were he to become again a candidate, the President of the United States happily affixed his signature and praised the act.

The Hatch Act standing alone protects employees of the United States Government, and, as proposed to be amended, those who are employed by their States but paid in part with Federal funds, from being compelled to engage in political activities, and denies to them any form of substantial political activity. It does not, however, confer upon them any civil-service status and does not protect them from any change in administration. They remain patronage employees, just as they were, with the added feature that they may not be compelled to do anything, and they are not permitted to do much. Their tenure of office depends upon the success of their party at successive elections. Every fair-minded person recognizes this to be so.

It is not sportsmanlike, however, that those who want to deprive them off their jobs should be able to tour the country, raise and spend money, attack their records, prepare and publish newspaper articles, and choke the radio waves with oratory for the sole purpose of succeeding the Hatch mutes in office. It may be argued that any attempt legally to control them as private citizens would be unconstitutional. But no one will argue that to set qualifications for office, one of which is that one may not be appointed who has taken part in political activity such as is denied officeholders under the Hatch Act, is unconstitutional. The Secretary of Agriculture has made a rule differentiating between members of the bar from grade A schools and members of the bar of equal standing before the bar from grade B schools. This is setting up standards of employment in his department, and it will take an act of Congress to make it otherwise. Will anyone argue that Congress may not here and now set up standards of employment, one of which is that a person must not have dedicated his political activities toward pointing for the job? Of course, the Civil Service Commission has gone farther than either of these illustrations.

Potentials are as important as actuals. Tomorrow's official must be as pure as today's. If it is wrong to preserve one's self in office, it is wrong to seek the office. Let all parties and all candidates, incumbent or otherwise, be equally high-minded. If the only persons who are privileged to work for the Democratic Party in the coming campaign are to be those who do not hold office and are interested only from the standpoint of good citizenship, then it follows that the only persons privileged to work for the other parties should be those who have no interest in acquiring office, and whose only interest is in good citizenship. Let us make the Hatch Act equitable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, am I to understand that the Senator from Utah has been discussing the pending amendment, or has he offered an amendment to the Brown amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. As I explained in the opening of my remarks, my amendment has been lying on the table for some days. It will be offered at the proper time. I explain it now because it is an argument in favor of the way in which I shall vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator's amendment meet the approval of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think the Senator from New Mexico has not, as yet, considered the amendment. I do not know.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Michigan in reference to his amendment. Are there any exemptions or exceptions in his amendment? I have in mind the fact that both the original Hatch Act and the pending measure except certain executive officials, such as Governors. Are there any exceptions in the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, my amendment does not change the Hatch Act or the Hatch bill in any manner whatever, with regard to the exceptions.

Mr. ADAMS. If one of the enumerated high officials should happen to be the holder of 10 shares of stock in a corporation which enjoyed tariff protection, would not he be prevented from taking part in any political campaign?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; he would.

Mr. ADAMS. Regardless of whether he held the office of President, Secretary of State, or any other such office?

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is correct. I had hoped that the Senator from New Mexico would apply himself to that amendment, and take care of the matters referred to by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Holt	Pepper
Andrews	Donahey	Hughes	Pittman
Ashurst	Downey	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Austin	Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Bailey	Frazier	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	George	Lee	Schwartz
Barbour	Gerry	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead
Bilbo	Gillette	McCarran	Smith
Brown	Glass	McKellar	Stewart
Bulow	Green	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Byrd	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Hale	Minton	Truman
Chandler	Harrison	Murray	Tydings

Clark, Idaho	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Clark, Mo.	Herring	Nye	Walsh
Connally	Hill	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Danaher	Holman	Overton	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

EARNINGS OF INDUSTRY

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to read a brief statement into the RECORD.

Last Monday night I was privileged to engage in a debate with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] with reference to the accomplishments of the Roosevelt administration. I gave certain figures with reference to corporate earnings, but at that time I was unable to obtain figures concerning the year 1939.

Yesterday I received through the mail from Mr. Robert Vanderpoel, who is financial editor of the Chicago American, a copy of an article which was published in the Chicago American on March 6. Because of the fact that it deals very definitely with this question, and because I think it is of interest to the Members of this body, I wish to read the article into the RECORD.

Mr. Vanderpoel is financial editor of a newspaper which is not friendly to the present administration. Nevertheless, he is a very independent gentleman and is recognized as one of the outstanding authorities in the United States upon financial matters.

The article reads as follows:

INDUSTRY EARNED AVERAGE RATE OF 8.4 PERCENT IN 1939

(By Robert P. Vanderpoel, financial editor)

The first 960 representative manufacturing corporations to report 1939 incomes showed that they earned an average net profit, after all charges, including depreciation, interest, taxes, and reserves, equivalent to 8.4 percent on net worth, according to a compilation of the National City Bank of New York.

These corporations last year earned an aggregate net profit of $1,281,479,000. The total net worth on January 1, 1939, was $15,181,145,000.

Within the various groups earnings ranged from 19.2 percent down to 2.4 percent. The range of the individual corporations, of course, would be larger.

A LUCRATIVE RETURN

Once more these earnings figures prove definitely that despite the high burden of taxation, despite certain other difficulties, the large American manufacturing corporations have been able to earn very lucrative returns on invested capital.

It is true that this compilation takes in only a relatively few corporations, but it should be emphasized that these corporations comprise approximately one-half of the industrial wealth and earning power of the Nation. Consequently, while they are not representative of the smaller corporations, they are representative of industry as it exists in the United States today.

FOUR-YEAR AVERAGE EIGHT AND ONE-THIRD PERCENT

This profit of 8.4 percent on net worth contrasts with 4.2 percent in the preceding year for these same corporations, or a previously reported 4.4 percent for a slightly larger group, and with an average of 8.3 percent for the 3 years 1936, 1937, and 1938, inclusive.

In other words, for the last 4 years American industry, as represented by the upper half, has earned an average net return of slightly more than 8⅓ percent.

These figures, compiled by the National City Bank of New York, definitely disprove the assertion so frequently encountered that capital has not gone into productive enterprise because of lack of profit opportunities. Almost never in the history of this country has there been a period of 4 consecutive years in which industry has earned as lucrative a return as this.

CAPITAL SHOULD RUSH

As contrasted with the low interest rates prevailing and the enormous quantities of idle capital drawing no return at all, this profit return exceeds anything ever before witnessed.

Under the classical theory of economics, capital should have rushed into industry during this period. Industrial leaders, we believe, should explain why this has not taken place. The American system of private, competitive enterprise falls down when it does not function according to this classical theory.

Organizations such as the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, and others, should be concentrating their efforts on finding why excess capital has not flown into profitable endeavor.

Concerns engaged in the drug business last year, for example, earned 19.2 percent on their invested capital. Why has there not been a rush of stagnant capital into this business?

IN HIGH BRACKETS

Concerns manufacturing household equipment earned an average of 16.7 percent. Automobile manufacturers earned an average of 16.5 percent; producers of soft drinks, 17.9; brewers, 16.9; distillers, 13.7; chemical companies, 13.8 percent.

The American banks have billions of idle funds which they are anxious to loan at rates of 2, 3, and 4 percent. Why has not some of this money been absorbed by industries able to make profits at the rate of 13 to 19 percent?

American investors have more billions which they have been putting into life insurance, trusts, savings banks, and what not, earning from 1 to around 3 percent. Why does this money not flow into industry capable of earning an average return of 8⅓ percent over the last 4 years?

I hope that the facts contained in this article will dispel some of the fears which have been so widely spread during the course of the last 4 years.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to answer the question raised, I will say that the answer is simply that the American people have more trust in the Government of the United States than in any other thing in the world.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico because I intend to ask him a question at the end of a very brief statement.

No Senator in this Chamber has struggled against greater odds to accomplish a fine purpose than has the Senator from New Mexico. There is need for the legislation which he has espoused; and he has fought a good fight against great difficulties to accomplish the desired result. I have voted with the Senator and do not intend to desert him, and I am addressing him, therefore, on this occasion as one who has at heart the interest of the proposal he has advocated.

I have voted with the Senator sometimes under great misgivings that we were approaching this problem in the right way. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment further, I will try to show him what I mean. In a desire to end pernicious political activities and unfair political practices in campaigns we have, to a large extent, excluded certain persons from taking a part in campaigns rather than making the improper practices themselves illegal and criminal, if you please. In other words, in order to accomplish a reform which is needed and desirable, I am saying, as one who has been with the Senator in his fight, that I feel we have gone far afield in some respects by excluding American citizens from their civilian rights to a degree which is unnecessary, and that, if we would define the undesirable practices on the part of governmental officials in all branches of the Government, excluding not even the Senate or the President of the United States or members of the Cabinet, we would more likely accomplish what I know is close to the Senator's heart.

I do not want to go back over past history, but let me say to the Senator that the employees whom we have eliminated from political activities have not been the main offenders. They have, in some cases, been offenders, but, in my judgment, without making any concrete illustration, the pernicious activities, or I should rather say what I consider to be unfair and improper political activities, came to a large extent from sources which are not covered by the pending bill. I believe the Senator would be well advised, if he would take my words in the good faith in which I offer them and try to meet the problem on a broader front than it is met by this bill.

Naturally the Senator is concerned, and properly so, that if this measure should be delayed in any way it might be "lost in the shuffle," and that is a proper concern. He also can take the ground that, if we pass it, perhaps in another body some of the objections which I have just voiced may be eliminated. But I am of the opinion that the good of the country would be served and the Senator would accomplish his objective with more ease, if the other side who claim they want to revise this bill are in good faith, if he would consent to recommit it with a definite understanding in advance that it would be reported and taken up on some day in the future, so that the fears of the Senator, which would be justifiable in the absence of such an agreement, could be allayed and eliminated.

I am asking the Senator not to sabotage his effort and, of course, I am not trying to "shoot him in the back"; I am talking as one who has stood by him and has thought somewhat of the wisdom and philosophy of what we are doing, and am suggesting that if he could secure an agreement to recommit the bill, have it rewritten in line with what I hope would be a broader bill, going further than his bill goes so far as the elimination of unfair activities is concerned, and have it reported here at a definite date, I do not believe he would lose any advantage. If, however, the Senator should be unable to secure such an agreement, then I should not think he would be meeting from the opposition that degree of good faith which my suggestion implies.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Maryland, I first wish to say that I appreciate the good faith of the Senator from Maryland and the spirit which prompts his suggestion. However, I cannot agree to the suggestion, in part, because of some of the things he himself has mentioned. The time is getting short. Furthermore, realizing what transpired on a previous occasion in the case of similar legislation, if this bill were recommitted to the committee, even for a short length of time, and then brought back on the floor a stronger and better measure, which I should like very much to have, I am entirely certain that the same opposition we have today would meet that bill, and probably would be greatly increased.

My reason for that statement is that the bill we are now considering is about the mildest bill which could be presented to the Senate, and if a bill of this nature evokes the bitterness and the opposition which have developed here, I can see no hope of strengthening the bill and getting anything easier, although I should very much like to do it.

I want to say to the Senate that daily there comes to my attention things which ought to be corrected that we do not think of today. That is the reason why I said to the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] that this measure is just a beginning. I know that each succeeding session of the Congress will present new problems. For instance, yesterday I learned that one of the departments in Washington is using Government money to broadcast over the Nation appeals in behalf of certain legislation. I do not believe in that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator knows, of course, as I know, that the elimination of employees of the Government in the categories he has expressed, while perhaps the price we will pay of taking away their civil rights is a great one, may conduce to a result which to some extent will make elections fairer. The Senator likewise knows, as I have heard him say, that the big sources from which this influence usually comes are untouched by the bill. I can appreciate that the Senator realizes the difficulty of approaching this question, and that he took the avenue he did because of that fact.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it is a most difficult task.

Mr. TYDINGS. But in our effort to cure the defect we have left the activities themselves untouched by the legislation.

Mr. HATCH. Some of the activities.

Mr. TYDINGS. And we have simply excluded the employees in certain lines.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. The bill we passed at the last session reached some of the activities themselves.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish the thought. After having put in some study on this problem I have the very definite feeling that the Senator will render the country a service even greater than that which he has already rendered if he will define what any person, Senator or executive, may or may not do with, say, P. W. A. funds, W. P. A. funds, agricultural funds, or any other moneys of the Federal Government, and not confine the bill to the smaller employees. I think the opponents have pretty good ground there, in that they say we are only excluding a few of the persons who occupy the smaller positions, and are letting the heads escape.

While I am with the Senator, I am trying to accomplish one purpose, and that is this:

If those in opposition to the Senator's proposal are acting in good faith—and I assume they are—it seems to me an agreement could be reached to rewrite the bill and make it encompass the whole group of Senators, Representatives, and everybody else, and bring it here on the floor with an understanding that it would be reported and there would be a vote on it on a definite day, so that there would be no chance at all of its being lost in the shuffle. In that case we should have a code applying to everybody, rather than segregating these employees, State and National, and what not.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have a proposal to make which will not interfere with anything. Let the pending bill pass, I say to the opposition. It will go to the other Chamber, and manifestly it cannot and will not be reached for action over there for several weeks; and if the opposition will appoint any group of men—I do not care whether they are from this side or the other side or both sides of the Chamber—I will work with them to bring about the kind of a bill the Senator is talking about, get a report as quickly as possible, bring it here to the Senate, and pass it if we can; and I will go with the Senator to the Representatives on the other side of the Capitol and say, "Take this bill and throw the one we passed today into the wastebasket." I should be glad to do that. Then nobody would lose anything.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure the Senator would do just what he means to do; but I have the feeling that if we should adopt the alternative he suggests the bill would be pretty much as it is now, only not so good, probably, and it would be whittled down so that there would be nothing but discriminations in it, and the great improprieties against which the Senator is so valiantly contesting would still remain.

In my opinion, the chance to write a law of this kind will not soon come again. I believe a majority of this body now are for the kind of law the Senator would like to have—a law that deals with practices rather than with persons. I have the feeling that we can secure the cooperation of both the opposition and the proponents of the pending bill in bringing a revised measure to the floor, and getting a vote on it long before this session is over, so that the body at the other end of the Capitol can act on it. If we will do that, I think we will have done a better job for the country than the present bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator I desire to say that nothing would give me greater pleasure and greater delight than to work out such a bill, and I shall be glad to do so along the lines I have suggested; but why tie the effort we have made so far with this bill to something that may not come about? I should be perfectly willing to take the steps I have suggested; and we all know as a practical matter that it would be 2 weeks or 30 days before there could be any action on the bill in the House, and in 1 week's time or less we could work out a bill such as the Senator suggests.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, of course, sometimes, we all have to vote for things we do not completely like, because we like a large part of them. That is an unavoidable situation, but as a general rule, I feel that it is bad policy to pass a bill with which we are not pretty well satisfied when we are really for what the bill seeks to attain. A number of men who are in the opposition—at least, two or three to whom I have talked—would vote for such a bill as I have suggested, but they cannot bring themselves to vote for the pending bill. I think the Senator would whittle away some of the opposition, and lose none of his support, if the plan I have suggested could be adopted.

I have made that suggestion with no idea of sabotaging the legislation of the Senator, but in the hope that it would lead to the Senator getting what I know is close to his heart.

LAND AND NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, our Government has in the past turned to the land as a means of taking care of the unemployed who periodically accumulate. Every time there was a depression the Government would open a new frontier for settlement and drain off the disinherited; but today there are no new frontiers to open. Therefore our Government must provide means of helping the family farmer to purchase and pay for a farm of his own.

At the present time big-scale farming is sweeping the family farmer from the land and sending him to town to seek employment on the relief rolls. Big landowners are discharging their tenants and farming their land with power machinery, but the family farmer who farms only a small unit cannot do this. The size of his farm will not justify power machinery. Therefore he either goes broke and moves to town or else he buys power machinery and rents the farms of his neighbors and they go to town. In either case the present tendency is for the family farmer to be crowded off the land and start his trek down the highway with the sharecroppers.

This threatens the very security of our Nation. Today 42 percent of all the farms in the United States are farmed by tenants. In Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, and the deep South the percentage is almost two-thirds; that is, two-thirds of the land is farmed by tenants. But the most alarming fact about it is that tenantry in the United States is increasing.

I am convinced that the Government can solve this problem, first, by reducing the farm-benefit payments to the big-scale operator and correspondingly increasing them to the small-unit farmer; second, by giving the tenant farmer a chance to own the land he tills.

By insuring the mortgage, the Government can give these tenant farmers an opportunity to buy farms of their own. This can be done without taking money out of the Treasury, but by simply extending the Government's credit to the farmer in the same manner that it is now being extended to the city dweller through Federal housing. Give the farmer easy terms, so that he can make the farm purchase itself.

Such a measure has already passed the Senate and is now pending on the House Calendar. Such a program as this offers permanent relief from unemployment. Place a family on the farm with the hope of becoming the owner of the farm, and you have started a self-sustaining program.

Such a program would increase our national security. Put people on pavement and they will starve, but put them on the land and they will live. The best way to help a man is to help him help himself. This program will do just that.

We must not only find jobs for unemployed men but we must rehabilitate the men themselves. We can do that only by giving them an incentive. There is nothing that will rekindle the fires of hope as will the opportunity to own land.

In the past we have been wasting the two greatest assets in America—men and soil. One is indispensable to the other. The erosion of the soil and the erosion of character are simultaneous processes. With the washing away of the fertile virgin soil of America, we have also suffered tremendous erosion in human character. A great nation cannot be maintained on eroded, unfertile land. Neither can the fertility of the soil be conserved when it does not belong to the man who runs the plow.

A great nation cannot be maintained when the majority of the people own no property. Many of our farm tenants and sharecroppers have already lost hope, and are now in a fit mood to listen to the dangerous doctrine of "isms." There is no fall so dangerous as the fall of those invisible towers of faith. The answer is to make possible a farm for every farmer and a home for every family.

William C. Bullitt, former Ambassador to Russia, tells this story: A few years back he attended a dinner in Moscow with some of the old Bolsheviks who subsequently were purged. They were talking about the early days of bolshevism, when Communist Russia was struggling for its existence. They were conferring with Lenin about the menacing drive of the White Russian armies when he surprised them by saying that he believed the peasants ought to be allowed to own their farms, just as they did in capitalistic countries. Several of the old Bolsheviks present replied, "Oh, no. We couldn't vote for that. It would be contrary to orthodox Marxism."

Whereupon Lenin retorted, "You fools; don't you understand? Let the peasants feel the land, hold it, run it through their hands. Then they will fight for it against the returning landlords and win. Afterward we can take it away from them and communize it."

Which is just what Lenin did. The peasants, fighting for their own land, put up a magnificent battle. The "Whites" were stopped, and Russia became a great power, whereupon the farms were collectivized.

Today the Finnish-Russian War presents a parallel. The Finns are fighting for their own land. But the Russians are fighting for their collectives, and, consequently, fighting with a remarkable lack of zeal.

The love of Americans for the land is one of our great national traits.

There is something inspiring and majestic about the feel of ownership. As a man walks on his own soil and gets the feeling that there is something firm and substantial under him, it makes him a better man, willing to die, if need be, for that small plot of earth, but, which is even more important, it makes him willing to live, work, suffer, and sacrifice in order that he may continue to own that land.

This desire to own land is one of the most powerful motivating influences inherent in humanity. Because of it, America was settled in an unbelievably short time. This urge to own land pushed our frontier farther and farther west in the face of the dangers and hardships of frontier life.

Fifty years ago teeming thousands of land-hungry people awaited the signal on the Kansas-Oklahoma border. They awaited the signal which would open new land to settlement in the Territory of Oklahoma. Every one of these new settlers had dreams of an empire, and that empire was 160 acres of land, and the ruler of that empire was the settler himself.

As these settlers became homesteaders, the feeling of ownership was strong upon them. They became rooted to the soil. They became a part of the community. They lived on little and did without much. Their sacrifice was cheerfully made because of the hope of full and complete ownership of that tract of land. No matter whether the soil was rich, fertile bottom land, or whether it was thin, unproductive hill country, that pride of ownership, that feeling of possession, was the same.

But many of these farms have been deserted. The families have moved to town to get on W. P. A., and the farms have been taken over by big-scale operators who farm them with power machinery. The trees in the small family orchards have died. The yard and garden fences have been moved to make way for the tractor. Only a few landmarks tell the story of a farmer who once made a home there for his family and farmed that land with the help of his family, but finally was forced to leave the land because of economic conditions over which he had no control.

We must make it possible for the real dirt farmers to own the land which they till. Then these deserted homesteads will be rehabilitated. Once more the family orchards will become snowy white with blossoms in the springtime, and hang low with a burden of fruit in the harvesttime. Once more the farmer's children will sing and whistle as they go about their chores, and we will have rekindled the fires of patriotism in the hearts of men.

The best answer America can give to communism is home ownership. We must launch a Nation-wide back-to-the-land program. The family farmer is the bone and sinew of America. We must save him in order to save ourselves.

It is when the great mass of our people own no property that we are in danger. It is only in misery and distress that people turn to communism. Consider our tenant farmers, who move from one place to another. Consider our sharecroppers, who drift along the highways without food, raiment, or shelter. How much patriotism could we expect of them? They camp on some plot tonight, but they have no loyalty for the land on which they camp because they move on tomorrow; but give them a chance to own a small plot of that land and see what a miracle it will work.

If we want our people to sing, "My country, 'tis of thee; I love thy rocks and rills," then let them own some of those rocks and rills. When a man tills his own soil he is twice fed by it. In addition to the fruit it produces there is a spiritual manna that feeds his soul and inspires him to noble deeds. When a man leans up against the forks of his own apple tree you cannot persuade him to plan the destruction of his own country.

Mr. President, I suggest that two things are necessary in order to keep the family farmer on the land. One is to decrease the Government benefit payments to the big-scale operator, and correspondingly increase the payments to the small-unit farmer. Three years ago the Senate adopted an amendment to the farm bill placing a ceiling on the amount of payments which could be made to any one farmer. As I remember, that ceiling was $300, the payments then graduated above that. The House adopted an amendment placing a ceiling of $10,000 on the amount which any one farmer could receive. In conference that amendment was accepted. Since that time the House has adopted an amendment—I believe it is House bill 3800—placing the ceiling at $5,000 for all farmers except those landlords who have tenants, and graduating the payments above $1,000, that is, allowing the first thousand dollars to be paid, and then above that the payments reduced by 25 percent, then placing a ceiling of $5,000 on the amount which any farmer could receive, except that those landlords who have a number of tenants would be allowed to receive their proportionate share of the payments without any ceiling at all. This in effect would repeal the law which we now have on the books, and allow payments to go on up to those unreasonable sums which we were paying to big-scale farmers, big-scale operators, and big landlords.

I have presented an amendment which would retain the over-all ceiling of $10,000 we now have, regardless of whether the amount is paid to tenants, or in what form it is paid. I think that is too much, but if we could get that enacted into law, we would, to that extent, help the small farmer.

I am told that last week an article appeared in the New York Times telling how the biggest farmers—and the insurance companies are the biggest farmers—were receiving, according to my informant, up to $200,000 payments from the Government as Government benefit payments.

The purpose of our farm legislation is to help the man who needs help. I contend that such a program is not helping the man who needs help. Most of these insurance companies are unwilling owners of the land. I have no criticism of them. They made loans upon farms or they purchased farm mortgages, and they found themselves the unintentional and unwilling owners of a number of farms.

One life-insurance company is the biggest farmer in the United States. One life-insurance company owns three-tenths of 1 percent of all the farms in the whole Nation. One life-insurance company owns over 7,000 farms. Now, then, add and cumulate the amount of payments of like character to the one made to this one "farmer," so to speak, and it will be found that out of our Treasury we are paying hundreds of thousands of dollars to these big-scale operators.

I say we ought to limit those payments. Ten thousand dollars is a certain sum of money, and I think we should certainly not go beyond that. I think we should limit the payment to $300.

Three years ago, when I had the figures at the tip of my tongue, 96 percent of the farmers received less than $100 each. Ninety-six percent of all the farmers of the United States received less than $100 each in Government payments, benefit payments, and in the other group of 4 percent we found the big-scale operators, some of whom received over $200,000 in Government payments.

If the amendment to House bill 3800, which passed the House, is adopted by the Senate, we will again take off the ceiling. Under the guise of lowering the ceiling, it will again take the ceiling off the payments, and so long as those landlords who are operating their big plantations can get families to pose under the guise of sharecroppers or tenants they can collect their payments and the payments will continue to be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is that amendment, Mr. President?

Mr. LEE. It is a separate amendment to House bill 3800, which is now before a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, the chairman of which is the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO].

Mr. President, I believe we ought to reduce the payments below $5,000. Perhaps that is as far as we can go. The Department of Agriculture has defended these big payments on the ground that if they do not pay to the big-scale operator on the same basis that they pay to the small-family farmer the big-scale operator will not cooperate with the reduction program but will increase the production and upset the apple cart so far as the farm-reduction goal is concerned. I suppose that is to some extent true, but I do not grant that it is entirely true. I am inclined to think he would continue to cooperate if we put a ceiling on payments.

Mr. President, that simply proves what I have advocated ever since I became a Member of this body, and before, that fundamentally we must shift our agricultural program from one of controlling the acreage, and thereby the output, in order to raise the price, over to the domestic-allotment plan, which would guarantee simply a fair price on each farmer's share of the domestic market. I have been hoping that the Democratic Party would advocate that program.

Yesterday I read to the Senate the farm program advocated by Thomas Dewey, one of the candidates for President on the Republican ticket. The eight points set out by him are simply a rehearsal of the farm plan we now have, and which has been in operation for some time.

Another candidate for President on the Republican ticket, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], one of our own colleagues, has, in effect, advocated about the same thing.

I should say that another of our colleagues, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], has, however, indicated that he would be very friendly and receptive to the domestic-allotment plan for a farm program. In his speech of February 13——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that speech was made at St. Paul.

Mr. LEE. Yes. I thank the Senator. In the speech the Senator from Michigan made at St. Paul, he advocated a program of guaranteeing the American market to the American farmer at a price level equal to the American standard of living. He also referred to the old McNary-Haugen bill, which in my opinion was also a sound approach to the farm problem.

I should like to see my own party advocate a program for the farmer which is sound and can be defended. I have supported our farm program, and I am still supporting our farm program on the ground that it is all the program we have; that it has saved the farmer from bankruptcy, and that it has much more good in it than that portion with which I do not agree. Nevertheless, I do not believe it is sound to reduce the American production enough so as to raise the world price level. We do not produce all the farm commodities in the world. We produce only a portion of them. That program is based on the principle of reducing that portion which we produce enough to raise the level of the whole world price. That is like trying to raise the water level in a lock without cutting it off from the main body of water. It is not fundamentally sound. But if we separate that which we want to raise from the world production and the world market, then we can raise the price level. The domestic-allotment proposal is that we allot to each farmer his share of the domestic market and for that share guarantee him a parity price.

We cannot be sure of any market except the domestic market. The only market of which we can be absolutely certain is the domestic market, and in view of the fact that we can be sure of it, I think we would be on safe ground if we were to say to each farmer, "We will guarantee you your share of the domestic market."

As it stands, the Senate Committee on Appropriations has just favorably reported the Department of Agricultural appropriation bill, and they have, I am glad to say, included an appropriation of $212,000,000 for parity payments. Two hundred and twelve million dollars will not pay full parity payments. We have been talking about parity payments, but each year it would be two-thirds of parity payments, or three-fourths of parity payments, or a portion of parity payments. The farmer has done his part, but we never have paid him parity for any portion of his crop. We could place his program on such a basis that we could guarantee full parity, but the only way to do that is to separate the domestic market from the world market, and have a two-price system guaranteeing him a parity on that portion of his commodity which we consume in this country and allowing him to sell above that all he wants to, but place him on notice that what he raises above his domestic allotment he will have to sell on the world market, or else keep it; put him on notice there will be no Government loans on it to cause it to stack up in warehouses and become an embarrassing surplus to the Government. If we will launch a program such as that we can guarantee the full parity.

In my opinion, a farmer, except on rare occasions, has never enjoyed parity. Cotton at 16½ cents a pound is not parity, because cotton has always been a crop which is produced by low-priced and low-paid labor, and it has always been below parity. Colonel Westbrook, of the Work Projects Administration, has figured out that it takes 1 man-hour of labor to produce 1 pound of lint cotton. If we put the the cotton farmer on the same basis that we put the industrial worker, then we would put a value of 25 cents a pound on every pound of cotton we consume in this country; we then would be willing to guarantee him the same justice that we guarantee the industrial worker in our wage-hour law, limiting wages to 25 cents an hour.

If we should guarantee the farmer 25 cents a pound for the cotton we consume in this country, we could close up every relief roll and every W. P. A. program in the cotton-raising districts of the country, and we should have a surge of prosperity which would be surprising.

The domestic-allotment plan is found in Senate bill 2787. It is a self-financing program. Secretary Wallace has been trying to "sell" the committees on the income-certificate plan. I would support that plan, because it, too, is a self-sustaining program. But I understand he is having trouble, because the Treasury Department says it is an invasion of the functions of the Treasury Department. I am not quoting the Treasury officials, but in effect it is their opinion that it is an invasion of the function of the Treasury Department, because the income-certificate plan would work in this way: Each farmer would be given so many income certificates, and the income certificates would be purchased by the manufacturer as a sort of license for doing business. They would be sold by the Agricultural Department. The money would go into a pool, and out of the pool the Agricultural Department would pay the benefit payments, which would cause the Agricultural Department to perform a function intended to be performed by the Treasury Department—namely, the collection of revenues of the Government and the paying out of funds of the Government. Therefore the income-certificate plan has run into trouble.

We should not have that trouble with the proposal I am discussing. It would be a self-financing plan. The manufacturer of cotton goods for use in the United States is faced with a choice. He must either pay a tax equal to parity, or he must buy from the Commodity Credit Corporation or through the Commodity Credit Corporation the cotton which he manufactures for domestic use, using the Commodity Credit Corporation as a kind of clearing house. If he buys through the Commodity Credit Corporation he is given credit for 99 percent of the tax levied upon him. Consequently, he would buy through the Commodity Credit Corporation and be given a credit of 99 percent of the tax. The Commodity Credit Corporation would sell him the cotton at parity price, and in turn pass that on to the farmer, who previously had sold his cotton to or through the Commodity Credit Corporation, leaving 1 percent tax collected.

The purpose is twofold. One is that the manufacturer would have to keep books. The other is that the plan would provide a little fund to pay for the administration of the act. In that way we should have a self-financing program without invading the function of the Treasury Department. We should have a program which would finance itself, and hold up the price without direct price fixing. We should have a self-operating, automatic farm program, an all-weather farm program, which would stand on its own feet.

The way matters are today, if we take our hands away from the program it falls over, with the result that every year we have to come back and sweat, beg, plead, and work in order to obtain a partial parity payment, because we depend upon the system of appropriating and paying out, which would not be necessary with a self-financing program such as the one I am describing.

I shall try to explain the domestic-allotment plan. In the first place, each farm would be given a production base. That production base would be based on scientific agricultural data which the Department of Agriculture now has. Such a program would support our soil-conservation program.

For example, let us consider three farms—A, B, and C. The soil-conservation officials and the officials of the Department of Agriculture know that farm A has 80 acres, and that under good farm management farm A should have 40 acres in pasture. That leaves 40 acres for cultivation. Twenty acres should be used to raise feed and food. That leaves 20 acres to be put in a cash crop. According to good, sound farm management those 20 acres may be devoted to crops year after year without depleting the fertility of the farm. Therefore, we have 20 acres of that farm which may be devoted to soil-depleting crops. Cotton is a soil-depleting crop. If the average production of cotton in the vicinity is half a bale to the acre, the production base of that farm would be 10 bales of cotton. In other words, on a sound farm management basis, with balanced agriculture, that farm could produce 10 bales of cotton year after year without depleting the soil. That record would be written down in the county office at the county seat. The farm production base is 10 bales of cotton.

Let us say farm B is a farm of 160 acres. Sixty acres should be in pasture. One hundred acres may be in crops. Let us say 40 acres may be in soil-depleting crops. Let us say that the yield in that community is one-fourth of a bale to the acre. That would mean that that farmer would also have a production base of 10 bales. But if the yield were half a bale to the acre, he would have a production base of 20 bales, which would be recorded in the county office.

Farm C is a farm of 200 acres. One hundred acres may be put in cotton. It is a fertile farm. Let us say 1 bale to the acre can be raised. If the farmer had 100 acres in cotton he would have 100 bales. However, there are other considerations. He might have a big family. Perhaps he himself could farm the land, but more than likely he would have a number of tenants on the farm. Then each tenant would receive an allotment on the same basis as that applied to the other 2 farms.

Suppose that the total amount of cotton the United States can produce year after year is 12,000,000 bales. We can produce 12,000,000 bales every year without depleting the fertility of our soil. The fact is recorded in Washington as the cotton-production base.

Suppose that at the beginning of a crop year the Secretary of Agriculture announces that we need 6,000,000 bales of cotton for domestic consumption. Then the Secretary will announce that 50 percent of the cotton-production base of the United States will be needed for domestic use that year. Every farmer can figure out his own allotment without a group of people coming to his farm, measuring his land, and in other ways disturbing the farmer. Farmer A will know that half of his production base, which is 10 bales, is 5 bales. He will know that he has a domestic allotment of 5 bales of cotton. Farmer B, who has a production base of 20 bales, will know that his domestic allotment for that year is 10 bales of cotton.

According to the bill, there is a floor of 20 cents a pound under domestic cotton. I did not have quite enough courage to go all the way and put the farmer on the same basis as the industrial worker and put a floor of 25 cents under cotton, because it takes a man-hour of labor to produce a pound of lint cotton. I should have done so, but I did not. But even if he receives 20 cents a pound, Farmer A will know that he will receive $500 for his 5 bales of domestic cotton. Farmer B will know that he will receive $1,000 for his 10 bales of domestic cotton. Farmer A and Farmer B may raise all the cotton they wish above their allotments with certain limitations.

The soil-conservation program is a limitation on the amount of cotton that may be produced, or the amount of soil-depleting crops that may be planted. We have considerable control under the soil-conservation program. However, within the limits of the soil-conservation program Farmers A and B may raise as much cotton as they wish; but they are put on notice that all the cotton they raise above their allotment will have to be sold on the world market, and that there will be no Government loan with respect to the amount above the allotment. Therefore Farmer A says to himself, "The world price has gone to 6 cents a pound." He will say, "Well, I might have a bad year; I might be better off by raising my full quota." So he plants more than it would normally take to make his quota of 5 bales of cotton. Let us say he has a good year and raises 10 bales of cotton. Very well. He has a choice then of taking the surplus 5 bales to town and selling it on the world market, or he can store it in his shed and the next year he can turn it in as his domestic allotment, if he wants to do so, and get parity payment for it, or 20 cents a pound; or, if the war should continue and cotton should go up to 10 cents a pound, he could go to his shed and take his bale of cotton, carry it to town, and sell it. He would get $50 for that bale of cotton. He might sell it all or he might sell part of it, but if he keeps it it is better than a bank account, because when the next year comes around he can sell it at the Government price of 20 cents a pound. He cannot spend it until that year comes around.

Now let us see how it would work with respect to the 5 bales allotted to him. The county agent will give Farmer A a 5-bale certificate and Farmer B a 10-bale certificate. Today the Commodity Credit Corporation operates in this way: The Commodity Credit Corporation in the little town of Pottsville, let us say, goes to the banker and makes arrangements with the banker. It says, "Whenever a farmer brings you in his cotton and he has the ginner's certificate showing the poundage, make him a Government loan at a certain price on that cotton." That loan amounts to a sale; it amounts to a purchase today, because the loan price is a little higher than the world price. The banker makes that arrangement. The Commodity Credit Corporation does not have an agent located in the town, and it simply makes arrangements with the local banker to attend to the transaction.

Under this proposed plan, the procedure would be the same. The Commodity Credit Corporation would simply make arrangements with the local banker or the local cotton buyer or finance group to do that which they are already doing. So Farmer A would take his bale of cotton, the ginner's figure showing its weight, and his bale certificate, and go to the banker, or whomever had been designated to represent the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the banker would make him a price of 20 cents a pound, or whatever price was fixed as the domestic price for that cotton.

That would be the end of it so far as the farmer and the Government are concerned. That cotton would then flow in the channels of trade just like it flows today. There would be no change at all. It would go to the warehouses just as it does today, and manufacturers of cotton and millers would have a chance to have their buyers at certain spots to buy the different kinds of cotton they want. The cotton would go to the warehouse and be cataloged. Farmer B would follow the same course as that pursued by farmer A.

Some asked, Suppose the manufacturers want some cotton which has not been brought to the market with the tags? That is a good question, because sometimes cotton manufacturers want the whole field from which to choose. Under the provisions of this measure, just so they made their purchases through the Commodity Credit Corporation, they could purchase any cotton. The cotton, in other words, on which the domestic price is paid would not necessarily be earmarked. The miller would have the whole crop from which to choose. The bill simply uses the Commodity Credit Corporation as a kind of clearing house, and that would make it possible for the manufacturer to have the whole field from which to choose his cotton for manufacture for domestic use.

Let me point out why the manufacturer then would be willing, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, to pay 20 cents a pound. If he did not, if he brought on the world market at 6 cents a pound, then he would have to pay a tax equal to the domestic price, which would be 20 cents, and, therefore, he would have to pay 26 cents a pound for the cotton which he manufactured for domestic use. Of course, he would not do that; he would buy through the Commodity Credit Corporation and pay the domestic price for all of that which he manufactured for consumption in this country.

Another question asked is, How would you keep books on it in order to prevent the manufacturers bootlegging? In the first place, the Commodity Credit Corporation is the bottleneck through which the cotton flows, and there would be a check on it there. Then the inspector would go to the manufacturer and the miller and say, "Let me see your books." Remember, he has to pay a 1-percent tax on all that he manufactures for domestic use, and that causes him to keep books. The inspector says, "Let me see your books; how much have you manufactured for domestic use?" On this side of the ledger is the amount that the manufacturer has manufactured for domestic use. Then the inspector would say, "Let me see your bale certificates." If they correspond to the amount of cotton which the manufacturer was manufacturing for domestic use, his books then balance. If he is short certificates, then it shows that he has undertaken to manufacture for domestic use some cotton which he purchased at the world price. With that device there could be kept, in my opinion, a better check on it even than it was possible to keep under the processing taxes, which most people said were a success. There would be little or no opportunity for bootlegging. Let me say, to the credit of the manufacturers, it is my experience that the bigger the manufacturer the more sincerely he tries to carry out the law of the Nation. So I anticipate no trouble on that score.

The bill provides that the manufacturer may purchase in the world market cotton for the export trade, or, if he sells abroad some cotton for which he originally paid the domestic price, the bill allows a rebate or a readjustment, so that he will be protected in his competition abroad.

With a device such as this we would have a farm program that would continue. We would not have to take action in Congress in order to make it succeed. On the contrary, the Congress would have to take an aggressive attitude and perform an overt act in order to keep it from succeeding.

At present, whenever Congress fails to appropriate sufficient money from the Treasury to meet the parity payments, the whole program falls. I want a self-sustaining and self-financing program that it will take an act of Congress to keep from working. Then we will have a greater guaranty through the hard years that the farmers will have a program.

The question is raised, "If you do this, if you raise cotton to 20 cents a pound, will it not also raise the price of cotton goods the farmer has to buy?" Yes; to some extent, but not greatly, because the raw product does not constitute a large part of the cost of the commodity. For example, as nearly as I can ascertain, on a pair of overalls that now cost, say, $1.25, the increase in the price of cotton would increase the cost of the overalls 12 cents a pair, which is not unreasonable. Of course, there might be those who would try to use it as an excuse to "jack up" their prices and increase the spread between the raw and finished product, but we have the Sherman antitrust law to take care of that and to give protection on that score. The price of the finished product would not be greatly increased, but the farmer would be vastly helped and his purchasing power would be so much increased that he could buy the things which he needs today.

Every farmer needs something on his farm. I dare say that today every farmer needs an extra hired hand. I have a farm. I need some new barbed wire; I need some metal roofing; I need harness; I need a new cream separator; I need a tractor; I need other farm machinery; I need all the farm equipment replaced; and if the income from the farm justified it I would purchase all those things. I would put on another hired hand; I would have him repair the barn; I would assign another to painting the house, which would cause me to buy paint. That would increase the market in this country. But the farm income does not justify such expenditures.

This plan embodied in this particular bill applies only to wheat and cotton, because they are the two heavy export crops. It is possible it could be applied to some other crops, but I have made a special study of the two particular crops, because they are the ones that now cause us the most trouble. They are our heavy export crops, and our export market has dwindled. We have lost much of our foreign trade in cotton and some in wheat.

If our Government would adopt a program of domestic allotment it would not cause, as some fear, a great and unholy increase in farm production, as I propose to show. In the first place, the farmer is no fool. He does not like to do hard toil at a loss. But always in the past he has had to increase his production whenever the price went down because he has certain fixed charges which he must meet, and in order to meet those fixed charges, instead of being able to reduce his production with the hope of running prices up, he has always increased his production because he had to. He has to meet his taxes. They must be met in cash, and that is an expenditure that does not vary up and down.

He has had to meet his interest charge. That is in cash, and it does not vary up or down. Consequently he has increased his production when the price was low.

Now, let us see what this plan would do:

Farmer A, with as low an allotment as five bales, would know that he would have a cash income of $500 for his share of the domestic market. If he wanted to sell two or three additional bales on the world market, and get $30 a bale for them, he would have that choice. He could do it, but I do not believe he would deliberately plant and raise cotton to sell at 6 cents a pound when he knows that that is below the cost of production. Therefore he would just allow enough for a margin. He would not increase his production when he had an opportunity to reduce it voluntarily. This plan would give him that opportunity because, on the basis of $500, most 80-acre farmers in my part of the country would have more income than they have had since the World War. Five hundred dollars would be heaven on earth for them.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Assume that the enactment of the measure advocated by the Senator would increase production. That, of itself, is not an argument against the passage of the bill. Let me submit this thought to the Senator:

Regardless of the amount of production of cotton by the farmers of this Nation, it would not interfere with the amount of domestic consumption. That income would be fixed, and the economics of this Government or our people would not be interfered with whether we produced 25,000,000 bales or whether we produced 15,000,000 bales. The surplus would move on the world market for whatever it was worth, and would be governed by the world price. Therefore, even if production would be increased, that is not an argument against the enactment of this measure.

Mr. LEE. That statement is absolutely correct. I never could understand the fear expressed by those who oppose this legislation that the farmer is going to produce too much. As I say, this statement applies to wheat also.

Doctor Seiberling, who was in the Department of Agriculture, made a survey of the United States; and, as a result of that survey, he reported that if every family of the United States were on a balanced menu—a class B menu, so to speak—42,000,000 more acres in cultivation would be required to supply the necessary food for the families in the United States. The greatest opportunity for a market is here in the United States.

Suppose a farmer of Class A raised twice his allotment. What would he do with it? He would either have to keep it or sell it on the world market. If he sold it on the world market, America would be regaining her place in the sun so far as being an exporter of cotton is concerned. If he kept it, it would be his. Every time he passed it, he would say, "That is my part of the surplus." Do you think he then would deliberately increase and increase his part of the surplus, when he would know all the time that the only part for which he would receive the domestic price would be his allotted quota, and he would know that on every fair scale that would be his share of the American market?

So far as I can see, there is no legitimate objection to allowing the farmer the right to produce what he wants to produce. Incidentally, it would restore to him the feeling that he is lord of all he surveys. Why is the farmer out there scratching the face of the earth? Because he is an individualist, and he is about the last individualist left; because he wants to be the boss of his land; because he does not want to be regimented; because he wants to farm his farm as he wants to farm it. Give him that opportunity, and I say you will rehabilitate him, make him feel better, and make him a better American.

Thomas Jefferson once said, "If we are told from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we shall soon want bread." Apparently that day has come.

I say, give the farmer his chance. Give him his share of the American market. Tell him, "For that we will give you an American price which is in line with the price of the things you have to buy."

Take the Montgomery Ward catalog today; take the Montgomery Ward catalog of 1913; lay them down one by the side of the other, and see the difference in the prices of the articles the farmer has to buy. Then compare the price the farmer received for his commodity in 1913 with the price today, and you will see what has happened to the American farmer. You will see what a licking, what a beating he is taking. Then you will understand why there is the present exodus from the farm.

Then you will know what has happened to the family farmer who uses 160 acres of land, more or less, to raise a family. He farms it with his family and for his family. He educates his family there. He is the bone and sinew of America. What has happened to him today? He has been swept off that farm. He has been moved to town, and has gone on the W. P. A. rolls. He cannot help it. He has joined the trek on the highway with his sharecroppers, and they are a pitiful group, too.

Can we build patriotism in the hearts of men who have no hope? Patriotism itself is the hope of home and security of life. Patriotism cannot be stimulated in the heart of a man who camps here today and moves on tomorrow.

There are two things that are absolutely necessary if we are to save agriculture. One is a more permanent farm population—and that means home ownership of the land—and the other is better farm prices. We are not going to attain those results in this piecemeal way, appropriating a little dab every time we deal with the matter. We shall have to appropriate enough money out of the Treasury to pay the farmer parity. I doubt if we can do it. That is not the proper method in which to do it, anyway. I say give the farmer a tariff. For 150 years the manufacturer has had a tariff, and he has waxed rich and wealthy on account of it. Do you find any millionaires on the farm? Do you find any millionaires in the ranks of labor? Do you find any millionaires among those who produce the wealth of the country?

There is a difference between producing wealth and accumulating wealth. We have plenty of wealth in America—more than any other nation has. This is a wealthy Nation, but the wealth is not property distributed. We have it here, but it is in lumps. We shall have to level it out. We shall have to take it from the big lumps and put it down in the valleys if we are to have buying power; and we shall never have security in this country until we do.

The land—Mother Earth herself—is the foundation of every nation. National security is based on the soil. If we separate men from the soil, we shall not have men who will fight for the soil. Let a man own a piece of land, and he becomes rooted to it. He wants to live there. He wants to raise a family there. We see the churches improve. We see the schools improve. Show me a community where people do not own the property and I will show you a community that is run down at the heel. Show me a community of home owners and landowners and I will show you a community of men who will fight for their land.

Give us home owners. They are better citizens in times of peace. They have more to live for. Give us landowners. They make better soldiers in times of war. They have more to fight for. We shall have to start at the grass roots, and that means the family farmer.

A great and prosperous nation cannot be built without being based on the family farmer, the man who tills the soil, the man who runs the plow; and we shall have to bring about that condition in this country.

I am tired of our piecemealing along. It is like trying to cure a case of smallpox by putting a plaster on each pimple, one at a time. We shall have to get at the source of the thing, and that is the farm population. Get buying power in the hands of 130,000,000 people in this country at one time and watch that buying power come to town. When the farmer comes to town with money, the merchant sells; and then the merchant buys from the factory, and the factory sells; and the wheels turn, and the hitchhikers commence to get back their jobs, and the country is back on the road to prosperity.

We have enough wealth in this country. There are five spokes to the wheel of prosperity:

One is the producer of the raw product, the farmer.

Another is the laborer who develops the product.

Then there is the consumer.

Then there is capital.

Then there is management.

In the past where have the profits of industry gone? They have gone to the last two named. Capital has drawn too much and management has drawn too much. The investigations reveal that men like Mr. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., are drawing unconscionable sums for salary and then unconscionable sums for bonuses. A vice president, the lowest-paid one, received $34,000, and he drew a quarter of a million dollars bonus, thereby hiding the profits of his industry.

I say those profits should be distributed to the producer of the raw product; they ought to be distributed back to the laborer, the man who performs the toil. Has he gotten rich? Show me a laboring man who ever accumulated a fortune. But the interests, the fellow who has loaned money and drawn high dividends, has gotten rich. I am not trying to punish them; I merely would like to see justice done in this country.

We can start out together a young man and $10,000—which is what the Government said during the war one man was worth—start $10,000 and a young man out together, let this young man toil every day for 30 years, until the best of his substance is gone, and let that $10,000 run on current interest for 30 years, and at the end of that time what will you have? You will have a man whose health usually is impaired; you will find a man who does not have enough rations to run him a week. On the other hand, you will find that the $10,000 has grown into a veritable fortune. It is a certainty against an uncertainty, and the high rates of interest the farmers have had to pay on their mortgages are ridiculous.

We finally transferred the Farm Credit Administration to the Department of Agriculture, so that they could humanize it. I am glad to see it moved over into the Department of Agriculture; and if they do not humanize it, I will favor moving it again.

Farmers have been paying high interest rates. Some years ago I was in Omaha, Nebr. There I talked to a very fine young man, a Mr. Clark, president of one of the biggest banks in the whole country. I said, "Mr. Clark, for what rate will you lend money to the Swift Packing Co. of Omaha?" He said, "One and a quarter percent." I said, "How much will you charge a farmer, a good-risk farmer, for money?" He said, "Six percent." I said, "What is the difference?" He said, "One is a surety, the other is a gamble. One is slow, the other is quick."

Mr. President, that may well be. A while back gamblers on the stock market could borrow call money with which to gamble on the market at less than 1 percent.

But can a farmer get money for that? We have been trying to get the farmer's interest rate down to 3 percent, and the 7 years of the New Deal have made 3 percent pretty good interest. I am glad to say we are trying to get it down to 3 percent, and yet in the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives they have jacked it up another percent, and made the rate in the farm benefit bill 4 percent, on the ground that the farmer has to get it.

Tell me where you can get 4 percent today on anything that is better security than is offered by a farmer in the way of a mortgage, a first lien, on the very foundation of this country. You cannot find it. Where can you get even 3 percent for over $1,000? The Government will give you 2 percent on postal savings, and Government borrows money at less than 2 percent. But when it comes to the farmer, we have to raise the interest rate.

Mr. President, we must increase the farmer's income, and we have to make the farmer more secure on his farm. We have to give him a chance to buy it back.

Fifty years ago thousands of land-hungry men and women assembled on the northern border of a Territory called Oklahoma. They had assembled from all through the States. As a result of increasing labor-saving devices they were the disinherited. They were seeking land; they lined up along that border waiting for the signal which would give them a chance for a home in the West. At 12 o'clock noon a United States cavalry trooper lifted his watch and looked at it; he lifted his pistol and fired a shot heard round the world, a cannon flamed, and thousands of land-hungry people swept down across a new State and staked out farms. That night the savory odor of frying bacon rose from every quarter section in that Territory. That night those homesteaders dreamed dreams of a future. There they were, willing to pit flesh and bone against all the hazards of a pioneer life.

I saw them dig into the ground. We lived in a dugout. I saw them live on alkali water. We had "gyp" water so strong you could hardly sink an ax in it. I saw them live on white gravy. In the East I have seen people live in log cabins where there was timber. In the West I saw them pick up the sod behind the plow and build sod shanties and live in them.

Then they started the fight against the drought and flood, against windstorm and duststorm, against heat, against cold, I saw them endure the hardships of pioneer life in order that they might have a little plot of earth on the face of this terrestial globe which they could call their own.

Then the years passed. I saw these pioneers as they plowed up a little bit of ground and sowed a few seed in the sod. The first few years were kind to us. Mother Nature was good. The rains came, and the virgin fertility of the soil, which had not been depleted, was good to us. Then came the drought. The hot winds swept up from the south and the southwest. The little orchards we had set out died one after another.

I saw those people as the interest rates overtook them, good years and bad, but the interest rate of 8 percent marched on. In some places there was a limit of 10 percent. Above that was legal usury. The homesteads were taken away from the farmers. They lost the farms because of four things. First, because of the high interest rate. We are beating that down. Again, they lost their farms because of low-priced farm commodities. We are trying to jack them up. Again, they lost those farms because of depleted yield or lost fertility. We are fighting back with the greatest soil-conservation program that has ever been launched. Again, they lost the farms because they could not meet the homestead tax, and some States are curing that situation. Our own State has passed a farmstead tax-exemption law fixing the limit at $1,000; Texas has a $3,000 State tax exemption, not local; Wisconsin has an exemption above $3,000, I believe, on State taxes and local, thereby making more secure the homsteads. We must rehabilitate these people.

Our Government has never faced the problem of unemployment. We have always postponed the solution by the land-opening method—merely by opening up a new frontier and draining off the unemployed. We are going to have increasing unemployment in this country as long as we have science, and I hope we will always have advancement in science. Science continues to give us labor-saving devices. Those labor-saving devices put men out of employment. I think it is progress when we can invent a mechanical robot which will lift the load from the back of humanity, and I favor it, but every time we do that it puts on the doorstep of the Government another problem for solution; that is, finding jobs for the unemployed of this country.

We have had the problem before, but we have never solved it. We have always postponed it by opening up a new frontier, as Oklahoma was opened up, and letting all the unemployed go out and seek a territory, and every time we would have another such problem we would open up another territory. Finally, we settled America from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and met ourselves coming back. Now we have no new territory to open. Therefore we have to stop and solve the problem of unemployment in some other way.

We are trying to do that. We passed a wage and hour law to cut down the number of hours of labor. We adopted a youth program to cut off on one end and an old-age-pension program to cut off on the other end. We have set up a works program to give employment to those who still could not find employment. Now we have to go a little further and do something permanent; that is, set up a farm-ownership program and a family ownership program which will give the farmer who farms the soil a chance to own the soil he farms. When we do that we will be getting somewhere.

I voted for the relief programs, and I intend to keep on doing so until we get something for the idle people to do. I know it is not good for a man, I know we bring about erosion of character, when we put a man on relief, but we cannot let these people starve. Under this program we feed a man a year, and at the end of the year he is still hungry, the money is gone, and he is not a dollar closer to self-support than he was before; indeed, he is further away, because he has learned to lean on the Government. I know that. I voted for that program merely because there was an emergency, and we could not put off meeting it. Men cannot go hungry very long without dying of starvation. But I think the time has come now for us to level off on some program which will bring about permanency of relief, and one solution would be to give the people who have been pushed off the land a chance to get back on the land and to own it.

No matter what we do under the farm-tenant program, no matter how many people we rehabilitate on the farm, unless we give them a program which will hold farm prices up, they are going to lose the farms again. Therefore we have to get some other farm program than one which depends upon appropriations year after year out of the Treasury of the United States. The fairest way to solve the problem would be through a plan based on the domestic allotment, which will be a self-financing plan, and will raise the price of what people consume everywhere.

Is there anyone in this country who does not want to pay the farmer at least the cost of production of what they consume? Ours are fair-minded people. One thing of which America boasts is sportsmanship. We do not want to eat the food and wear the clothes produced from raw materials raised by the farmer without paying him a fair price for them. All that is necessary is for us to get the device, to set up the machinery which will bring about the result, and we can do that if we are willing to.

The domestic allotment on a self-financing plan which would cause the consumer to pay the domestic price for the farm commodities which are used in this country would do just that for the farmer; and whenever we do, whenever we allot to each farmer his share of the wheat market and say to him, "Your share of wheat will be 1,500 bushels; that will be your part of the domestic wheat market next year, and on that we will guarantee you $1.25 a bushel, which is a fair price for wheat," the farmer would know what he would have to depend on.

The way we would help the little family farmer by a program like this would be through the allotment plan, when we allotted a farmer above a certain amount what was estimated to be fair to the family sized farm, then above that put a ceiling on which he gradually cuts down so that the big-scale operator will not be getting the advantage of all the domestic market. We would not be taking anything away from the big-scale operator. He has the world price. He still could have the world price. He could raise all he wanted to and sell on the world market. We could then be in an economic position to compete with the low-price labor of the rest of the world if we wanted to. We would regain our world markets.

I do not want to see us go backward. I believe in a long-sighted policy. Eventually, when the seas again become safe so we can do so, I want us to carry American products in American ships and take them to other countries, climb up their stairs, and sell our American products to the people of other countries. I want us to have an exportable surplus which we can send to other countries, and I want those countries to send to us the commodities we do not have in this country which we have to buy in other countries. We want to exchange commodities with them.

Mr. President, to me the most fundamental thing in our economic perplexities today is the farm problem. In my honest opinion, if we will simply guarantee the farmer his fair share of the American market today, and American price, and then let him raise above that all he wants to, and put him on notice that he will not get a parity or bounty on it, he will not get a loan on it, we will have solved the farm problem on those farm commodities to which this system would fit; and it fits wheat and cotton perfectly, which are the commodities that are causing us the most trouble now, because they are the heavy export commodities.

A hundred years ago this thing started. It was argued then that the manufacturers wanted a tariff. They said, "If we are to compete with the manufacturers of old countries we will have to be protected." And it was argued, with good logic, that we should protect our American manufacturers with a tariff system until they got on their feet, with the belief among some that when they got on their feet these tariff walls would be reduced.

But just the opposite happened. The higher the tariff wall went the stronger grew the industrial group. The stronger the industrial group grew the higher the tariff wall went. All the time out there the farmer was paying the bill. The farmer was buying on a protected market and selling on an unprotected market. All the time the tariff wall was going still higher. What the farmer produced brought less, and what he purchased cost more.

The ever-widening gulf between the raw and finished product began to make a pauper out of him. The furnace fires of the East dazzled Congress to the extent that the farmer occasionally was handed a sop, but all the time the industrial group was making itself stronger by virtue of this tariff protection.

Today the tariff system is so interwoven with our economic fabric, it seems unwise to start out to tear it entirely down. I do not advocate that. On the contrary, I advocate putting the farmer upon economic stilts so he will be on a level, on a parity with the agricultural group. In other words, give the farmer a tariff. That is all it needs. It is just the reverse of the present situation. It just means turning upside down the tariff which has for 150 years made millionaires in industry and paupers in agriculture.

I am asking the Senate to consider the proposition that, without appropriation out of the Treasury, we adopt a farm program that will be a self-financing, self-operating, automatic thing that will work as automatically for agriculture as the tariff has worked for industry, and give the farmer his share of the American market.

Mr. President, we have a two-price system for industry. The manufacturers of automobiles, I am told—and I do not doubt it—sell automobiles abroad cheaper than we can buy them at home. I once saw the figures to the effect that the manufacturers of farm implements were selling mowing machines in Australia cheaper than we could buy them in Oklahoma. I have seen the statement that manufacturers would sell their surplus abroad at less than they received at home. If that is good for the manufacturer, why is it not good for the farmer?

Let us give the farmer a tariff guaranteeing to him his fair share of the American market, and let that fair share be determined by the ability of his farm to produce. That is scientific. That is based on soil preservation, on saving the fertility of the soil.

We can have experts go to a farm and say, "This farm can produce a certain amount of soil-depleting crops year after year under sound management." Then they have given us the basis for determining the amount of that farmer's allotment, determined on the ability of the soil itself to produce, and when that has been determined, then that becomes the production base for that farm. That is filed in the permanent record in the county and in Washington, and then of the total amount we can produce of wheat and cotton in this country, whatever percent we use in this country will be the percent of that farmer's domestic base. The same percent of the farmer's base will be his allotted quota. If we use 85 or 90 percent of the wheat we produce, then 90 percent of his production base of wheat will be his allotment, and he can figure it out himself. In that way we get away from all the friction that has resulted from our farm program.

Again I say it is not my intention in any sense to be found in the position of fighting our farm program today, only I believe this proposal is superior to it, and is in addition to it. Our farm program today has done much, in fact, it has saved the farmer from ruin, but I believe fundamentally we are on the wrong track when we undertake to reduce our production with the idea of raising the price level of the production of the whole world. I do not think that is sound. Neither do I think we should be afraid that the farmer is going to produce more than he ought to under this plan. What would happen if a farmer were given a quota of 5 bales, and suppose he produced 20 bales, what harm would the production of the other 15 bales do? The farmer can do with it whatever he wants. He can keep it or sell it. If he sold it at 4 cents a pound, that would be his headache. And if he kept it, it would still be his. What harm would that do? We would simply regain our world trade.

Two years ago the opposition that came with respect to that from certain persons in this administration was that it might cause dumping, and that might cause retaliation on the part of other countries. Since that time we have been paying to dump. We have been subsidizing exports. Therefore that argument does not hold any more.

Forty-two percent of our farmers do not own the land that they farm. Sixty-one and two-tenths percent of the farmers in Oklahoma do not own the farms they farm, in a young State which was settled almost in my memory, which ought to be fertile today, but we have been prodigal with that land. Some of our fertile soil has been washed away. We have been hillside farmers. It would take 3 acres of that land to raise an umbrella. Down South in Oklahoma, occasionally, the cotton boll weevil hits us and eats up everything but the mortgage. They never get that. Nevertheless there we are. Sixty-one and two-tenths percent of the people of the State are tenant farmers, and are moving away.

Mr. President, I have not read the book, The Grapes of Wrath. In self-defense perhaps I shall read it. But I am told it is the story of what the ownership of land means to men. I am told that the book tells the story of what happens to men when they cannot keep their land. It tells the story of the character erosion that comes to men when they become separated from the land. Land is fundamental to society. It has everything to do with our social and economic life.

At one time Palestine itself was a flourishing country of trees and grass. Today it is a waste land. The Bible refers to the arbors and the forests and the cedars of Lebanon, and refers to the Israelites as a pastoral people who followed the grass. But they pastured it too close, and they cut down too many of the trees. Today what kind of a country is Palestine? What society is there? Very little grows.

Mr. President, show me the type of farm country, and I can guess quite close at the type of economy existing in that country.

When our people lose possession of the land, they lose interest in the country. You cannot generate patriotism in their hearts then. The sharecroppers are a pitiful group. They go along the highway; I have seen families of them, the father carrying some bundles, the mother carrying a babe in arms. The rest of the family—and they are usually a large family—follow along behind. I say to myself, "I wonder what they will eat for the next meal." I say to myself, "I wonder what they ate for their last meal. I wonder where they will stay tonight."

Our Nation is young. We cannot build a great nation on a shifting population any more than we can build a great building on a shifting foundation of sand. It is a danger signal when our people become uprooted and the masses start marching.

You say, "Must we take from one to give to another?" I say, "Yes." You say, "Why should I pay taxes to help another fellow?" I say, "To keep his fall from pulling you down."

We must save the family farmer in order to save ourselves. Look at the Russians. What a lack of zeal there is in their fight against Finland. Their farms have been taken away from them and collectivized; but the Finnish patriots are fighting for a homeland. It makes all the difference in the world. The long fight of life to own a little plot of ground makes all the difference in the world.

It has been said that the difference between a Communist and a patriot is a job. Perhaps it is; or perhaps it is the ownership of a bit of land.

Farmers cannot own the land unless they receive adequate prices for what they produce. We have been eating their commodities, but not paying our debts. I hear those who criticize our effort to restore parity payments. They talk about it as a bonus. It is not a bonus. It is the payment of a debt past due for what we have already consumed, and are consuming, of what the farmer produces. It is not charity. It has been charity on the part of the farmer to feed us all these years and receive only partial payment for what he has been giving us. As a result, he is losing the farm from under his feet and the roof from over his head in order to feed us below the cost of production.

We are trying to restore a pittance in the agricultural appropriation bill. If we get the full amount of $212,000,000 for parity payments which the committee has reported, we still will not pay the farmer parity, but only partial parity. We still will not be out of debt to him.

The farmer feeds the Nation today. At the long banquet table there sits the banker; there sits the lawyer; there sits the businessman; there sits the school teacher; there sit the professional people; and at the head sits the host—the farmer. He feeds us all. We ought to be willing to pay our debt to him. I have no patience with those who say we are giving the farmer charity in parity payments when we are paying him only the debt we owe him.

Parity payments are only a temporary expedient. We must set up an all-weather program that will stand the repercussions of the post-war swing-back which we shall have. There is no use in deceiving ourselves. The temporary upturn in business is due to the war. When the soldiers in Europe and Asia stop fighting and go to farming, what will our farmers do if we have no farm program to fall back on, one which will guarantee them their share of the American market? What will our wage earners do if they have no unemployment program to fall back on? Let us not relax and decide that things are all hunky-dory now simply because a war in Europe is producing a temporary upswing in business.

The very foundation of it all is the land—the farm. Mother Earth is good to her children. When they wander from her bosom they get into trouble. When they come back to Mother Earth they are coming back to fundamentals. We must return to the land. I should like to see us make a start. We could start a crusade back to the land by passing the domestic-allotment plan, guaranteeing each farmer his share of the American market at an American price. It is sound, it is logical, and it is simple. The simplicity of administration argues in its favor. It works automatically. It avoids appropriations out of the Treasury. Business would be improved because of the great upswing in purchasing power of the greatest spenders and the best circulators of money we can find—the farmers. The farmer does not hoard. He spends. He expands. He increases his efficiency and lowers the cost of production as he sells his commodities when prices justify it.

We do not need markets abroad if we will develop the ones we have at home. Just think how many farms in this country ought to have electric lights; how many farms ought to have bathrooms and bathroom fixtures. Think how much business such improvements would create for the manufacturers, the retailers, and the laborers.

What good will it do to build power projects and extend rural-electrification lines if the farmer is still selling his cotton below what it costs him? If he cannot pay the electric rates, what good will it do the farmer? If he is selling his product for less than the cost of production he is gradually going into debt. Does anyone think that a man who does not own a farm will invest anything in rural electrification in order to provide electric lights?

We are a modern Nation? Every family ought to have modern conveniences. Think what it would mean throughout the length and breadth of America if in every domicile we had a bathroom with bathroom fixtures. Think what a tremendous increase in business it would produce in this country. Then add to that electrical equipment, with electric power, to light up the dark rooms and dark corners, to turn the mill to grind the farmer's feed, to turn the jack to raise his hay into the loft, to grind his ax, to pump his water, and to saw his wood. The manufacturers of electrical appliances would have a tremendous increase in business, and there would be a tremendous demand for electricity.

Inventions sometimes lead to other results. The Rust brothers, of Memphis, Tenn., have invented a cotton picker. Some day it will be perfected. When it is perfected and put on the market it will throw out of employment 3,000,000 people who depend upon cotton picking for their seasonal employment. What shall we do with those 3,000,000 people?

If we had our system of farm tenancy and fair prices, those 3,000,000 people would go back to their landlords, buy little plots of land, and start homes. They would take root in the soil. Pretty soon the little old shanty would change from a shanty which today is an outrage into something more habitable. Sharecroppers live in sheds that are not fit to house the stock they work. But if the fellow who is today a tenant without hope, a sharecropper without ambition, were converted into even a potential owner, he would be a different man. We should thus not only rehabilitate the farm but also rehabilitate the man. Pretty soon we should see the little shed being worked over. Then it would not surprise me if some day the farmer took a bucket of paint and painted the little shed. Soon screens would be put on. There are no screens now. The cracks in the wall would be nailed up, and there might be attractive paper on the wall inside. Perhaps, as years go by, if he receives the domestic price for the cotton he raises, he might even add a bathroom, and his children would grow up in the atmosphere of an American home instead of the atmosphere pictured in the book, The Grapes of Wrath.

What kind of a citizen can we grow in that atmosphere? I do not admit that all that atmosphere is found in any one family. No doubt the author concentrated all the scrapings into one book to call attention to them. However, the fact remains that too much of such an atmosphere exists among that type of people.

Suppose such a family were given an opportunity to buy a corner of the landlord's farm. It would be given such an opportunity if we should give a little advantage in making the allotments of the American share of the market to the small farmer, with a ceiling on the amount we allot to the landlord. Pretty soon some of the landlord's land will be for sale at a fair price. Much of it is now for sale. The tenant will then come back. He will buy a little corner of land under the provisions of our farm-tenancy bill which I hope the House will pass.

As time goes on, his interest in that home will increase with his equity in it, and his family will grow up in the proper atmosphere. His children will be sent to school. They will join the 4–H Club or the Future Farmers of America. They will learn to farm. They will learn how to apply modern methods; and the family, as well as the farm, will be rehabilitated. Pretty soon, instead of the ragged bunch of nondescript chickens which do not produce and do not lay, we shall see a better breed of chickens. Pretty soon the old dilapidated fence, which has begun to rot and decay, will be straightened up; and soon the family orchard, which long ago has quit bearing, will be replanted with young trees. One day we shall see a purebred animal in the lot. We shall see a milk cow that pays for her board. Instead of keeping a milk cow, the family will finally learn enough, through the 4–H Club and the Future Farmers organization work, to get a cow that will help to keep the family.

So gradually the whole farm will be rehabilitated. Instead of putting all their land into one big 13-month cotton crop, which means poverty to the family, they will begin to raise a nice little family vegetable garden, because the boys and girls in the 4–H Club and in the Future Farmers organization will learn what it means to raise food and feed first. Then, the first thing we know, one of the boys of the family will have a prize pig. He will have learned how to raise hogs and make it pay. He will become ambitious and learn how to raise hogs profitably, for sale as well as for home consumption. That family that today is picking cotton, the worst drudgery in the world, in order to buy salt pork, will be raising its own hogs, and, instead of having sow belly, they will have something that is of a better flavor; they will have ham and sausage and spareribs and backbone and other good things to eat, because they will raise their own hogs, do their own butchering and their own preserving. They will have a vegetable garden and raise all kinds of vegetables grown in the particular section; their orchards will begin to bear; the wife will get a pressure cooker, and they will have a little private cannery of their own. They will raise all they can eat and can all they cannot eat, and will really make themselves secure. They could not be induced to go on relief because they would be supporting themselves; they would have made Americans out of themselves. Something must be done to arrest the downhill tendency, the down-the-road tendency of the sharecropper and of the tenant farmer who has lost hope and lost ambition and has lost patriotism.

I am not in a position to judge him nor to condemn him, for it is only because of the conditions in which they find themselves that the disease germ of communism can grow. No one can talk communism to a family such as the one I have pictured; no one can talk communism to a man who has a stake in the country; but let him lose hope and the situation changes. In the sharecroppers' camps—if they have anything which can be called a camp—communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and all the other "isms" of the world may take root, because those people are desperate and are grasping for a straw.

The best answer to communism is to remove the cause that brings on communism. Communism is like the tuberculosis germ in that it only strikes its victim when he is in a run-down condition; but, like the tuberculosis germ, turn the sunlight of prosperity on communism and it dies, just as the tuberculosis germ dies when the sun's rays are turned on it.

I say remove communism by removing its cause. Remove the danger of all the other "isms" by getting at the root of the evil conditions and uprooting it there. The germ of communism will not find lodgment in a family such as I have described, whose members are self-respecting and self-supporting, whose children go to school wearing clothes which are fit to wear to school. In the hearings down in Texas a poor old farmer came in in rags.

He was out at the knees; his trousers had been patched several times; in fact all his garments were patched; he was out at the elbows. He had on jeans; he did not have on wool. He said, "I and my family have raised enough cotton to make a wide belt of cotton that would girdle the globe, and yet I do not have decent clothes to wear—not even those made out of cotton." He could not help it. This body can help it. Give those people an incentive to want to live; give them an incentive to want to be Americans. This is the greatest nation on the face of the earth, and the spirit of the American people has made it that. I do not want to see any erosion of that American spirit. The farmer has held onto his individualism, but when he starts the trek down the road in an old ramshackle car that will not hold together, or else afoot, he has lost his hope; and unless he shall be rehabilitated soon he is going to turn to some of the vile "isms" as a cure for the disease; and then he is lost.

The "Okies," as they are called, migrating from Oklahoma to California, or at least some of them, could be rehabilitated. I realize that not everyone could be rehabilitated, but some of them could be. Strike the spark of hope in their hearts and you will see them respond.

Give them a chance to own a piece of land and insure them a price for that part of their crop consumed in this country, or their share of it, and we will rehabilitate them.

There are several laws that never change. One is the law of gravity. Another law which does not change is that of the tendency of money to accumulate in the hands of a few. I am not saying this in a radical or a caustic way; it is merely true. It is just as natural for money to gravitate toward the hands of a few as it is for water to run downstream. Tonight, if we divided all the money in the United States equally, tomorrow night some people would be rich and many others would be poor.

The second night the rich would be richer and fewer in number and the poor would be poorer and more numerous.

This would continue on and on, and, if the condition were not arrested, it would lead to the inevitable, which is a crack-up. A few governments have ignored the danger signals until a crack-up occurred. I am not alarmed that our Government will do it, but the danger signals are now appearing. When communism begins to thrive, it is time for us to take steps to remove the cause.

The best place to hand out communistic propaganda is in the camps of some of the "Okies" who go to California and in the soup lines and charitable institutions in this country. That is where communism takes root. Let a man have an incentive to own a piece of property, let him feel that he is the potential owner of property, and he will not have any time for communism or any of the other "isms."

Our soil-conservation program is failing on some of the tenant-operated farms and succeeding on others. Why? Because the tenant says to himself, "I will not be here next year, I suppose, and why should I endeavor to preserve the fertility of this land? I will get all I can out of it and then move on." But let him be the potential owner of that piece of land and the fertility of the soil has a different meaning to him. Home ownership, ownership of the land, is the last block in the jigsaw puzzle we are trying to put together in a pattern that will spell prosperity.

Yes; communism is showing signs of life in this country that I do not like. We can root it out, but we cannot root it out when two-thirds of our farmers do not own the land they farm. We must rehabilitate them. The Senate has already passed a bill that will go a long way in that direction, provided we will raise farm prices. We will not do it even if we adopt the parity program calling for $212,000,000.

We still will be very far short of parity. That amount will not be sufficient to provide an income for the farmer which would enable him to purchase a farm or to begin purchasing a farm. We have got to go further and put him on full parity. Why should he get only a partial parity? Why should he not have full parity? We can provide it by the simple device of saying to the manufacturer, "You must pay the farmers a domestic price equal to parity for that portion of the goods consumed in this country which you manufacture for domestic consumption." It can be done; it could be done now, this year. Then we would remove any cause, so far as I know, for the inroads of communism. That is one of the "isms" I do not fear, though I do not like it. It is antigod, antichrist, antipatriotic, and anti-everything-else, the vilest and the most cruel form of despotism that is known. But I do not fear it, because all we need to do is to expose it and remove the cause. When a man is earning a living for himself and his children you cannot talk communism to him, but let his children tug at his coat, begging for bread and asking him to give them something to eat and he has nothing to give them, then he begins to turn to the "isms."

The farm program is about to come before the Senate—I do not know just when—and so far as I know it is the only thing we can get right now. I hope we can pass it. I should like to increase the amount to be provided. Perhaps we cannot do that, but at best it is merely another temporary means of meeting this problem; certainly it is not means of solving it.

How much longer the farmers will be patient, I do not know. Many of the farms in western Oklahoma have changed hands. Today the insurance companies are the largest farmers in the United States. I am not saying that critically. They did not intend to be the owners of farms when they loaned on them or bought the mortgages. They simply had to take them over in order to protect themselves. Those farms would be for sale at a fair price, and we can establish the machinery to bring about the sale. We can give the farmer a low rate of interest which he can afford to pay, because what would be greater security than the fertile soil of America that produces wealth, that really creates wealth? There are other forms which are accumulative or have a tendency to accumulate. What can the Government do to prevent money from accumulating in the hands of a few? Do Senators believe that the Government should prevent money from accumulating in the hands of a few? What happens when it accumulates? There are two blood streams in the body. One carries the blood to the heart and the other carries the blood from the heart. When those two blood streams are equal the body usually is healthy. When one blood stream is greater than the other the result is congestion, and, if the condition is not relieved, the result is death.

That is just as true in the two blood streams of finance—the blood stream that goes from "grass roots" into the financial center and the blood stream that comes from the financial center back to the "grass roots." If those two are not equal, there is disaster. They are not equal today, and they have not been for years; and that is the reason why we have come to the present impasse. That is the reason why in 1931 and 1932 we came to the impasse which then existed, because the financial resources had accumulated in the financial East. The prices we paid for the things we bought were too great in proportion to the prices we received for the things we produced. There was too much difference in the blood streams. America was suffering from a financial blood clot at the heart. There was only one remedy; that was to break up the congestion and set up circulation.

There had been a fast game of "hull gull," and the big boys had all the chestnuts. If the game was to go on, there were only two remedies—either to bring new chestnuts into the game, which was inflation, or else to distribute the chestnuts that already were there. We chose the latter method. By the process of taxing from those most able to pay and giving jobs to those least able to buy we again attempted to equalize the flow of money going out with the flow of money coming in. To a certain extent that can be done. There are, however, limitations on it.

The Government is the only power that can set up automatic machinery that will serve to equalize the blood streams of finance, that will serve constantly to redistribute the national income in order to continue the purchasing power of the weaker class. Otherwise we have another cycle of accumulation of wealth and unemployment and have to start all over again. Personally, I do not believe it is inevitable.

I believe it can be prevented by setting up for the farmer the same type of automatic machinery that now accelerates the accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few. The tariff walls accelerated the accumulation of wealth in the hands of industry. I say, give the farmer a tariff that will serve in a mechanical and automatic way to offset the accumulation of wealth in the hands of industry, and to that extent it would then be unnecessary to take money out of the Treasury and distribute it back to the poorest corners of the earth. To that extent we should have Government machinery serving automatically to do what otherwise we should have to do by appropriation and expenditure.

Mr. President, I never was more serious about anything in my life than I am about the farm problem today. The farmer is the bone and sinew of America. We are an agricultural Nation. In Oklahoma we are an agricultural State. We have oil. Nature has been good to us. It has placed in our State hidden pools of wealth. I have seen oil volcanoes spout up and darken the sky, but our greatest wealth in Oklahoma is in the first 6 inches of soil. In the same year in which we produced our greatest mineral wealth we produced $250,000,000 more in agricultural wealth than in mineral wealth.

America is by nature an agricultural country. I want to say, in credit to the Senators and Representatives who represent industrial States, that I have always found them perfectly willing and glad to listen to Senators and Representatives who represent agricultural States, and to go along with them in an effort really to solve the problem of agriculture, because they realize that when the farmer suffers the city suffers.

This is indeed a national question. It is not going to be solved by piecemeal legislation. It is not going to be solved by appropriations out of the Treasury. It must be solved by setting up a system—a system that will work—and that is the domestic-allotment system.

Is it not sound to say that since we can be sure of only one market, and that is the American market, on that market we will guarantee the farmer a fair price? Is not that fair?

Is not that sound? We cannot raise the whole world price level. If we reduce, other nations increase. That is what happened during the past few years, with the result that we have lost much of our foreign trade, particularly in cotton. This other plan, however, is sound. It is on a firm basis. It is American. The American standard itself is on a high plane. Our wage earners receive more than the wage earners in any other nation in the world. Why should not our farmers receive more than any other farmers in the world? But they do not. What they receive is the same price that the lowest-paid pauper labor in the world receives. Why should we not put up their prices on an artificial basis?

We must do one of two things. We are at the crossroads. We must either repeal all tariff law—which, in my opinion, would be wrong—and put all prices on the world-price basis, or we must artifically stimulate the price level of agricultural products so far as the American market is concerned.

That proposition is so fundamental that I do not understand why anyone can fail to see it. Every rule of logic argues for it. Every rule of justice and fairness argues for it. If we will do that, we can thereby open a new frontier for the unemployed.

Today I suppose there are 15,000,000 unemployed persons in this country. It would take a mighty big public-works program to put all of them to work, and yet everybody you talk to admits that they must be put to work. We have cut down the hours of labor about as much as most persons think we ought to. We have gone about as far as our Treasury can stand in the way of public-works appropriations. We have taken a long step toward the employment of youth to take it out of competition with the breadwinner. We have gone a long way toward furnishing a subsistence income to old age in order to take it out of competition with the breadwinner. What is our next step? To get the farm people back on the land, and give them a chance to own it, and let them become self-sustaining and self-sufficient. It will teach them to produce their own food and their own feed.

Put people on pavement and they starve to death. Put them on the land and they live, and communism is answered at the same time.

When a man tills his own soil, he is twice paid by it. There is a spiritual manna that permeates his being and makes of him a better man. When the farmer who once was a sharecropper walking the highways and a fit subject for "isms," becomes the owner of land, go out to his farm some day when he is working in the orchard; find him leaning up against an apple tree in full bloom, his own apple tree, and try to talk communism to him, and see how far you get.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate further. At this time our farm program is coming up. I give notice that I am going to do everything I can for the farmer that the committee has recommended, and I should like to do more; but, at the same time, that is not the domestic-allotment plan, and before we solve this problem we are going to come to that plan.

Mr. President, I thank you.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Connally	Gibson
Andrews	Bulow	Danaher	Gillette
Ashurst	Byrd	Davis	Glass
Austin	Byrnes	Donahey	Green
Bailey	Capper	Downey	Guffey
Bankhead	Chandler	Ellender	Gurney
Barbour	Chavez	Frazier	Hale
Barkley	Clark, Idaho	George	Harrison
Bilbo	Clark, Mo.	Gerry	Hatch
Hayden	Lucas	O'Mahoney	Stewart
Herring	McCarran	Overton	Thomas, Idaho
Hill	McKellar	Pepper	Thomas, Okla.
Holman	McNary	Pittman	Thomas, Utah
Holt	Mead	Reed	Truman
Hughes	Miller	Reynolds	Tydings
Johnson, Calif.	Minton	Russell	Vandenberg
Johnson, Colo.	Murray	Schwartz	Van Nuys
La Follette	Neely	Schwellenbach	Walsh
Lee	Norris	Shipstead	Wheeler
Lodge	Nye	Smith	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask to have it read, printed, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the proper place the following amendment:

Amend section 9 by striking out the period at the end of subsection (b) and adding "Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to officers or employees of the Federal Government residing and voting in any State where State laws do not forbid the officials and employees of the State or local agencies of the general class above described from taking any active part in political management or political campaigns."

Amend section 12 (a) by striking out the period at the end of line 6, page 5, inserting a colon, and adding "Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to officers or employees of any State or local agency where State laws do not forbid other officers and employees of the State or local agencies of the general class above described from taking any active part in political management or political campaigns."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], as modified, to the committee amendment.

OPERATIONS OF THE AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL PLANT

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the data which the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD showing that business enterprise has not been throttled in the United States during the last 7 years. I thought it might be pertinent, in connection with the data, to refer to a remark made a few days ago by Mr. Thomas Dewey, prosecuting attorney in the city of New York, I believe, who has served in that jurisdiction ably and well for several years and, no doubt, can be counted upon to continue to render valuable service to the people of his city in the years to come.

In the course of some remarks a few days ago that very estimable gentleman made the statement that the American productive plant was running down at the heel at the rate of a billion dollars a year. From the newspaper account which I observed, it seemed that Mr. Dewey did not take the trouble to indicate the source of his authority for that rather startling statement, so, of course, we are not able to verify the figures which were given so as to determine whether he made a mistake in the quotation of the figures, or whether he might, perhaps, in the haste of departure for some speaking engagement, have really missed the point which his advisers intended to relay to him.

At any rate, I thought it might be pertinent to refer to pages 40 to 48 of a volume called National Income and Capital Formation for the period between 1919 and 1925, on page 2 of the bulletin entitled "Capital Flow and Capital Formation," published by the National Bureau of Economic Research, and call attention to the following figures, which seem to be contrary to the announcement made by Mr. Dewey.

Gross capital formation declined from $11,489,000,000 in 1929, to $2,987,000,000 in 1933, or 74 percent. That was in Mr. Hoover's day, if I may interpolate.

Net capital formation declined from plus $4,355,000,000 in 1929 to minus $1,904,000,000 in 1933.

By 1937 gross capital formation had recovered to $9,383,000,000, a rise of 214 percent. That was under Roosevelt, if I may interpolate.

Net capital formation, then, has been transformed from a negative figure in 1933 to a positive figure of $3,148,000,000, in 1937.

In the period 1933 to 1938, inclusive, net capital formation was not a negative figure of $7,000,000,000, as Mr. Dewey would have us believe, but a positive figure of three and one-half billion dollars, a trifling error of $10,000,000,000 in Mr. Dewey's statement; and the positive figure occurred under the Roosevelt Democratic administration.

Steel-ingot capacity increased from seventy and two-tenths million gross tons at the end of 1932 to seventy-three and one-tenth million gross tons at the end of 1938. The percentage increases in capacity for the more important of these products between the end of 1932 and the end of 1937 were as follows:

Seamless pipe and tube, 17.7 percent; tin plate, 27.3 percent; sheet, 35.7 percent.

These figures were compiled by the American Iron and Steel Institute.

According to the Wall Street Journal of February 16, the steel industry expects to spend $140,000,000 for new equipment this year, which will bring the total spent, or to be spent, for new equipment since 1934 to about $1,000,000,000.

Petroleum refining capacity increased from 3,890,000 barrels per day at the end of 1932 to 4,509,000 barrels per day at the end of 1938.

Paper and paper board capacity increased from thirteen and seven-tenths million tons per year at the end of 1932 to sixteen and two-tenths million tons at the end of 1938. The gross during 1938 exceeded the gross during any previous year on record.

Electric power generating capacity increased from thirty-three and nine-tenths million kilowatts at the end of 1932 to thirty-seven and five-tenths million kilowatts at the end of 1939. The industry predicts that the increase during 1940 will be the greatest in 10 years. Everybody knows that American farm capacity has steadily increased since 1932. In fact, in 1937 expenditures for new farm machinery and equipment greatly exceeded any previous years of expenditures since 1920, and has remained at a high level since.

Not only has our manufacturing machine not run down at the heels in the last 6 years; it has steadily increased in efficiency. The National Research Project made a most careful study of this question. Their analysis of 59 manufacturing industries show the output per man-hour increased each year since 1932 up to 1936. In that year, 1936, production per man-hour was 18.1 percent greater than in 1932, an average gain of 4.3 percent per year. Checks on recent data indicate that manufacturing output per man-hour today is 25 to 30 percent higher than in 1932, 30 to 35 percent higher than in 1929.

It is estimated from the best statistics I have been able to obtain that every year 500,000 men and women are thrown cut of employment by reason of technological improvements. It has never been denied, to my knowledge, that we have an industrial plant in this country capable of providing goods worth $90,000,000,000 a year in value, whereas the output of our industrial machine is actually now only $70,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, I wanted to give those figures and the sources of those figures in rebuttal of the statement which Mr. Dewey made, that our industrial plant was running down at the heel. The tragedy of it, as well as the good fortune for the country, is that the plant is becoming more efficient every year, and its growing efficiency makes it more and more difficult for people to find an opportunity to work, in spite of the expanding volume and quantity of the output of our industrial machine.

ALLOTMENT OF FEDERAL RELIEF FUNDS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in the issue of February 18, 1940, of the Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala., appeared an article, the main headline of which was:

Slim Share of United States Aid Given Dixie.

Then follows the subheadline:

South's relief total per capita revealed far under North, East.

Another subheadline:

Fifty-eight dollars spent where $94 or $100 was spent in other sections, check-up shows.

This article in the Montgomery Advertiser was based on the table of figures inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at pages 818 and 819, by the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. The table was captioned:

Allotment of Federal funds among three regions of the United States.

Mr. President, this table details in three columns, by States, the following information:

First. Population by State and region, based on Bureau of the Census 1937 statistics.

Second. Total emergency-relief expenditures from August 8, 1935, to December 31, 1939, by State and region, based on the President's report to Congress of January 15, 1940.

Third. Emergency-relief expenditures for the fiscal year 1939, by State and region, based on the President's report to Congress of January 15, 1940.

The table is concerned with funds expended from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts of 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939. Analysis by States discloses that from these relief funds only the 13 Southern States received $58 per capita during the 3½-year period, while 7 Eastern States received $100 per capita.

The article omitted a statement to the effect that the E. R. A. acts have provided funds principally for industrial relief through the W. P. A. and N. Y. A., and that only a small portion of the total was expended for agricultural relief. Such agricultural relief was disbursed through the Farm Security Administration.

Congress has made additional annual appropriations for agricultural relief and industrial recovery, but such appropriations have not been classified as relief. They include the funds allocated to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, Civilian Conservation Corps, Public Works Administration, farm-tenant purchases, and the like. For example, the A. A. A. disbursed $3,698,490 in New York State during 1939, and $21,965,155 in North Carolina. These expenditures do not appear in the article. On a per capita basis, this amounts to 29 cents in New York State, and to $6.29 in North Carolina. This one item alone, if included, would raise North Carolina's per capita share of Federal funds in 1939 from $9.08 to $15.37, while New York's per capita share would increase only from $19.84 to $20.13.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration is but one agency out of several which disburse more funds in agricultural areas than in industrial areas. A complete report showing the distribution of Federal funds by States during the fiscal year 1939 has been prepared by the Office of Government Reports. This report lists all Federal loans and expenditures obtainable on a State basis. Included in its columns are the funds quoted by the Senator from North Carolina from the E. R. A. acts. In addition, it includes every large Federal relief, work-relief, industrial, and agricultural loan or payment. It excludes only the expenditures of the regular departments and agencies, which, in general, are administrative, and the expenditures for national defense. Such expenditures are not obtainable on a State basis.

This over-all report shows that during the fiscal year 1939 the 13 Southern States received Federal funds amounting to $36.36 per capita, while the 7 Eastern States received $34.71 per capita, and the 12 Central States received $44.57 per capita. What is more, these per capita figures do not include the Federal loans. The disparity is occasioned mainly by the difference in the cost of living in the 3 sections of the country, and by the difference in the number of unemployed in the 3 areas.

Moreover, the continued drought in six of the Midwestern States have made enormous demands upon the Federal Treasury for both sustenance and rehabilitation. However, the disparity between expenditures in the Southern States and in the Eastern States is found to have been approximately $2 per person, and not $11 per person, in 1939.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] acknowledges his indebtedness to Mr. Voit Gilmore for the table inserted in the RECORD. In the explanatory notes accompanying the table there are listed, not three columns of figures but four. The fourth column purports to show "Total Federal expenditures for the fiscal year 1939, by State and region, based on the Consolidated State Report of the Office of Government Reports."

For the benefit of the Congress and the country, I ask unanimous consent to insert the fourth column in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total Federal loans and expenditures available on a State basis, fiscal year 1939

AGREEMENT TO VOTE ON SO-CALLED BROWN AMENDMENT

During the delivery of Mr. HILL's speech,

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote on the pending amendment, the Brown amendment, not later than 2 o'clock p. m. on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is agreeable to the Republican Members of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

After the conclusion of Mr. HILL's speech,

REPORT BY FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 7863, which merely extends the time within which the Federal Communications Commission may file a report previously requested by the Congress. The Commission found it impossible to complete the report in the time fixed by the existing law, and House bill 7863 simply extends the time within which the report may be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long is it proposed to extend the time?

Mr. WHITE. The House bill provides that the report shall be filed as soon as possible, but not later than January 1941.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Maine, and have examined the bill. I have no objection to its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7863) to amend section 602 (e) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to a study of radio requirements for ships navigating the Great Lakes and inland waters of the United States, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 602 (e) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended (50 Stat. 197; U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 47, sec. 602), is hereby amended by striking out the words "not later than December 31, 1939", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "as soon as practicable but not later than January 1, 1941."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jonas W. Graber to be Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Paul R. Leake to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 28, with headquarters at San Francisco, Calif.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Public Health Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

LYNN M'GRAW MOSES, POSTMASTER, ALTOONA, PA.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, at the time of the recess yesterday the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] was in the chair, and the Senate was in executive session. Immediately after the confirmation of the nominations of postmasters on the calendar I tried to obtain recognition so that I might enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the nomination of Lynn McGraw Moses to be postmaster at Altoona, Pa., was rejected on the 5th instant. Yesterday was the last opportunity I had to enter the motion.

I now ask unanimous consent that the President be requested to return to the Senate the resolution of rejection of the nomination of Lynn McGraw Moses to be postmaster at Altoona, Pa.

Mr. GUFFEY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In that connection the Chair wishes to make a statement. The present occupant of the chair was in the chair yesterday. As is always the case when the Senate proceeds to consider executive business, Senators proceeded to talk, crowd around, and cause confusion. Immediately after the recess the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] informed the present occupant of the chair that he had tried to obtain recognition. The Chair did not hear the Senator and did not see him. If the Chair had seen him, he would have recognized him. The Chair regrets that he did not see the Senator in time to recognize him. For that reason the Chair did not give the Senator an opportunity yesterday.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, is unanimous consent required?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. GUFFEY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 9 (legislative day of March 4), 1940

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Jonas W. Graber to be Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 11, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, who hatest nothing that Thou hast made and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent, create and make in us new and contrite hearts that we, worthily lamenting our sins and acknowledging our wretchedness, may obtain of Thee, the God of all mercy, perfect remission and forgiveness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, March 9, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On March 5, 1940:

S. 2868. An act to facilitate the procurement of aircraft for the national defense.

On March 9, 1940:

S. 643. An act authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington.

BENEFITS ADMINISTERED BY VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The Vice President laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for uniform apportionment of benefits payable under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORT OF FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES, INC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., transmitting, pursuant to law, the Annual Report of the Board of Directors of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., for the fiscal year 1939, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NORTH PACIFIC GRAIN GROWERS, INC. (S. DOC. NO. 163)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of the Court of Claims in the case of North Pacific Grain Growers, Inc., against the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

SOUTH DAKOTA WHEAT GROWERS ASSOCIATION, INC. (S. DOC. NO. 162)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of the Court of Claims in the case of South Dakota Wheat Growers Association, Inc., against the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE S. WOLBERT, RECEIVER OF NEAFIE & LEVY SHIP & ENGINE BUILDING CO. (S. DOC. 161)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certified copy of the findings of fact of the Court of Claims in the case of George S. Wolbert, receiver of the Neafie & Levy Ship & Engine Building Co., against the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas a bitter controversy arose in the First Constitutional Convention of the United States, in that the representatives of the smaller States as a rule claimed that the vote, and so the influence of the States in the proposed Government should be equal, and the representatives of the larger States as a rule claimed that their greater population and wealth were entitled to recognition; and

Whereas the controversy ended in the creation of a bicameral legislature; in the lower branch, the House of Representatives, the claim of the larger States found recognition, while in the upper branch, the Senate, the claim of the smaller States found recognition and each State having two votes; and

Whereas since the House of Representatives' seats were to be distributed in proportion to the population, the Convention, foreseeing the rapid changes of population, ordained an enumeration of the inhabitants and a redistribution or reapportionment of seats in the House of Representatives every 10 years; and

Whereas the Federal census began in 1790 and has been taken every 10 years since, under mandate contained in the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas the classifications for statistical information have increased in number from one census to another, so that it has now reached a point where the underlying purpose of the census has become secondary, and that some of the questions required to be answered in the present census are of a very personal nature; and

Whereas the Congress has also decreed that a criminal penalty be imposed upon persons refusing to answer said questions or who give false information: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized to amend this legislation so that the personal questions may be eliminated from the questionnaire, and the criminal penalty abolished; and be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That copies of this resolution be immediately transmitted to the President and to each United States Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives of the United States elected from the State of New York, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the convention of the National Cotton Council of America, at New Orleans, La., protesting against the taxation of margarine made exclusively of domestic oils and fats, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Civic Council of San Pedro, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation to authorize the Secretary of War, in the interest of the national defense, to make a survey of the proposed "T" tunnel as a means of communication between San Pedro, Wilmington, Terminal Island, and Long Beach, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the president and secretary of the Panama Canal Clubs of Southern California, assembled at Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the enactment of the so-called Pepper bill, being the bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. CAPPER presented a letter from the Kansas Bankers' Association, Topeka, Kans., signed by Fred M. Bowman, secretary, enclosing copy of a resolution adopted by the bank management commission of the association, favoring the enactment of legislation exempting the banking business from the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from E. W. Brown, Jr., and other citizens of Orange, Tex., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the Women's Republican Club of Cambridge, Mass., favoring the elimination of certain personal questions from the 1940 census questionnaire, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Citizens' Union Conference in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of certain legislation pertaining to civil rights, education, recreation, labor, unemployment, and social security, and housing, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Finnish-American Club, of Greater Boston, Mass., protesting against the shipment of war supplies to Russia and the buying of Russian gold by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PINK BOLLWORM

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have before me a concurrent resolution passed unanimously by the Mississippi Legislature, asking the Congress to increase the appropriation for the campaign against the pink bollworm. I am happy to say that the Appropriations Committee in its report to the Senate has increased this appropriation $382,808. The bill includes the name of a mysterious weevil. However, I understand this weevil has already been done away with, but there is some money to be used to further protect the farmers against this insect. The Legislature of Mississippi voices the sentiment of all the cotton producers in the South in the fight against the pink bollworm, and I ask that the resolution lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 31

House concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to appropriate funds to the Department of Agriculture to prevent further spread of the pink bollworm

Whereas the pink bollworm, recognized as the most destructive pest of cotton, is now spreading into Texas at an alarming rate and threatens to become established over the entire Cotton Belt unless checked; and

Whereas the general infestation of the Cotton Belt by the pink bollworm would be disastrous to the cotton industry and have a demoralizing effect on agriculture in all part of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be requested to make an adequate appropriation to the Department of Agriculture to prevent the further spread of this destructive pest; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the following: President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Director of the Budget, the Secretary of Agriculture, the subcommittees on agricultural appropriations in both House and Senate, and to the Mississippi Senators and Representatives in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 3097) for the relief of Katherine M. Drier, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1300) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3440) to amend the Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended, so as to change the title of the chief inspector and assistant chief inspectors of locomotive boilers, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1301) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 240) further continuing Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, authorizing an investigation of railroad financing and certain other matters (submitted by Mr. WHEELER on March 5, 1940), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1302) thereon.

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which were referred the following resolutions, reported them each without amendment:

S. Res. 213. Resolution authorizing the Committee on Enrolled Bills to employ a temporary assistant clerk (submitted by Mrs. CARAWAY on January 10, 1940); and

S. Res. 218. Resolution to pay a gratuity to Audrey Jones (submitted by Mr. NEELY on January 18, 1940).

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred, for examination and recommendation, 18 lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States, which appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HILL:

S. 3552. A bill to authorize the construction of works for flood control and other purposes on Autauga Creek at Prattville, Ala.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 3553. A bill authorizing bestowal upon the unknown unidentified American buried in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., the decoration of the Purple Heart; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. 3554. A bill to amend subsection (a) of section 60 of the Bankruptcy Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 3555. A bill for the relief of Walter Chwalek;

S. 3556. A bill for the relief of Guy T. Morris; and

S. 3557. A bill for the relief of James Morris; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH:

S. 3558. A bill for the relief of John Rutledge Holcombe; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BYRNES:

S. 3559. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to lease public property for periods not in excess of 20 years in certain cases where he is now authorized to lease such property for periods not in excess of 5 years; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. O'MAHONEY introduced Senate bill 3560, which was ordered to lie on the table, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MINTON:

S. 3561. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Mauckport, Harrison County, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HILL:

S. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim Citizenship Day for the recognition, observance, and commemoration of American citizenship; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

S. J. Res. 228. Joint resolution providing for an annual appropriation to meet the share of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts, and for participation in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and the commissions established by that committee; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, last week a number of Senators introduced a bill dealing with the Farm Credit Administration Act, Senate bill 3480, to provide for the establishment of the Farm Credit Administration as an independent agency of the Government, and for other purposes. The bill was referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization. It deals substantively with the Farm Credit Administration Act, measures concerning which have always been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency, from the inception of the act itself. Therefore, with the consent of the chairman of the Select Committee on Government Organization and the consent of the sponsors of the bill, I ask that the Select Committee on Government Organization be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AUSTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 40, line 19, to strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided further, That there is hereby reappropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for the same purpose as originally appropriated any balance of the appropriation, 'National forest protection and management,' contained in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939 (Public, No. 7, 76th Cong.), which remains unobligated on June 30, 1940."

HEARINGS BEFORE THE FINANCE COMMITTEE ON EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 242), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Finance of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 400 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter to him by T. C. Elliott, of Washington, D. C., on the subject of railroad land grants, which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLES BY RAYMOND CLAPPER AND STATEMENTS BY ERNEST T. WEIR

[Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two articles by Raymond Clapper and two replies thereto by Ernest T. Weir, published in the Scripps-Howard newspapers of February 27, February 29, March 2, and March 4, 1940, which appear in the Appendix.]

REVENUE AND GOVERNMENTAL COSTS IN WEST VIRGINIA

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by him relative to revenue collected and governmental costs in West Virginia, which appears in the Appendix.]

SALE OF NEWLY ISSUED RAILROAD BONDS BELOW PAR

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, a short time ago the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], on the floor of the Senate, directed the attention of the Senate to the fact that an issue of bonds being floated by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad had been bid on by a bond house for the full par value of the bonds; but, notwithstanding that fact, the railroad company proposed to and, I believe, did sell the issue of bonds to its banking connection in New York for less than par, and for less than an offer it already had in good faith.

There has been called to my attention another circumstance of similar import. It seems that the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway are offering an issue of $20,000,000 of their bonds. They likewise have been offered par for the bonds; but, notwithstanding the fact that they have been offered par for the bonds, they propose to accept 99½ from their bankers in Wall Street.

Mr. President, so long as the railroads of the country are asking the Government of the United States to help them solve their problem—and they have a problem—it seems to me they should be doing something about putting their own house in order. It seems to me the least they should do is to try to get for the bonds they sell all that they can get and not be favoring some Wall Street banker by means of a cut on their bond issues.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to take a portion of the time between now and the hour at which the vote is to be had in a discussion of the amendment, and particularly a discussion of the application of the Hatch bill to certain classes of our citizens. I desire briefly to point out some of the things my pending amendment does and some of the things it does not do; the latter particularly, because so much has been said over the week end about the prohibition of the amendment.

In the first place, it does not prohibit anyone from political activity, or from making political contributions, or from engaging in political management. Every man has the right so to conduct himself that he may be excepted from the provisions of the amendment by divesting himself of interest in a governmental financial benefit, just as every Government employee, if he desires to resign, may except himself from the provisions of the Hatch Act. The requirement of the amendment is that if a man's profits depend upon Government tariffs, if he desires to continue a contract he has with the Government, or to borrow from it, he may not, by pernicious political activity, attempt to influence the Government.

If someone says it is not pernicious political activity for a man to engage in the task of attempting to persuade others to join his political party or to vote for his particular candidate, then I reply that the Senator from New Mexico has made it pernicious political activity for a Government employee to engage in any manner, no matter how legitimate that engagement may be, in political activity. Under my amendment, if a man deals with his Government or has a controversy with his Government, such as an application for a tax refund, during the period for which he is so engaged but for no longer, he must not, because of his possible financial interest in the outcome, become a political manager for a candidate, become a member of a political committee or be a cash contributor or a cash collector, or be active politically.

Mr. President, this is not a new idea. On the same day that I submitted my amendment, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], without any knowledge upon my part that he was doing it, and, of course, without any knowledge upon his part that I was submitting an amendment, proposed the following:

No person, firm, or corporation entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, or performing any work or services for the United States or any department or agency thereof, or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by the Congress, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance or furnishing of, such contract, work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person, firm, or corporation for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years.

That is one of the things I intended to cover in my amendment, but perhaps is expressed in a better manner than I have expressed it in my amendment.

Not only is that proposition not new, but the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] some time ago proposed, with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], a similar prohibition.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I think this is the proposal submitted before, almost in the exact language.

Mr. BROWN. It may be. I desire to compliment the Senator from New Mexico on joining with the Senator from Virginia in that respect.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was wondering whether the Senator proposed to offer that amendment as a separate amendment.

Mr. BROWN. That amendment, in substance, is contained in my amendment. My amendment of course goes further, and includes the beneficiaries from the tariff; it includes those who borrow from the Government, and so forth. I do not intend to offer this amendment as a substitute for mine.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who, I believe, are experts on this subject, said upon the floor of the Senate that the evil which the Senator from New Mexico sought to reach by the amendment he proposed some years ago, and the evil which I seek to reach now, is far more to be condemned than the evil which he seeks to reach by the pending Hatch bill. The Senator from Utah, upon being questioned about the matter, made a statement which I desire to read. I refer to page 2596 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 9, when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] asked which was worse, contributions by State employees or contributions by great corporations seeking public favor.

The Senator from Utah replied:

That which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] exposed yesterday is damnable. That which was exposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was bad.

In other words, the evil which I point out—the contributions and political activity of tariff beneficiaries and others—and which I think is a part of the same general proposition about which we are legislating today—is considered by the very acute and able Senator from Utah to be much more to be condemned than are these petty contributions from Government and State employees.

The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment; and again I see in the amendment the idea which seems to permeate those who are favoring the pending Hatch measure. The Senator from Utah, I think very logically, proposes that no person who engages in political activity on the side of what we might call, for lack of a better term, the "outs," shall be appointed to any public office for a period of 2 years after the success of those whom he supported. But again, for some reason which I cannot fathom—though I can see a practical reason, possibly, for it—he excepts members of the Cabinet and excepts Ambassadors to foreign countries.

I say to fair-minded men if we are to enact a provision covering the political manager who is active in a minor capacity, in a county or in a State, to prohibit him from taking any appointive office from the successful candidate in an election because he participated in politics in an entirely legitimate way—not in an illegitimate way, but in a proper way—if we are to prevent him from being appointed to office, why should we exempt the great contributors who contribute tens of thousands of dollars instead of $10? Why should we not prohibit them from having positions as ambassadors or places in the Cabinet? I cannot understand why men who have studied this problem, as have the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Utah, exempt the "big shots" and continually legislate against the little fellow.

In this connection I desire to call attention to another matter. I have been a great admirer of the newspapers of Washington. It is rather surprising that newspaper owners who have the ideas entertained by Mr. Meyer or the owners of the Star should permit their columns to be used by a liberal, a sometimes extreme—I might even say radical—columnist. But they do it. They have been entirely fair in that respect. The Washington Post does not agree with Mr. Lindley's views, but they publish Mr. Lindley's views. The News does not always agree with Mr. Clapper's views, but they publish Mr. Clapper's views. The Star certainly does not agree with the somewhat radical views which are often expressed by Jay Franklin, but they publish Mr. Franklin's views; and probably all these gentlemen are paid for their contributions. Therefore in what I am about to say I do not mean to intimate that I criticize or that I have any idea of penalizing by legislation the newspapers either of Washington or of any other place.

I do not smart under criticism, but I think that the editorial in this morning's Washington Post condemning me for attempting to sabotage the Hatch amendment, now proposed, is picking on one who cast one of the two vital votes, which, if they had been changed, would have resulted in the adoption of the Miller amendment, which would have entirely eliminated from section 9 of the Hatch Act the prohibition against all political activity. If I had wanted to sabotage the Hatch bill or the present Hatch Act, I would have joined with those who I think had considerable ground for voting as they did against the provision in the law which condemns all legitimate political activity on the part of officers. But I did not do that.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I do not agree with the Senator that everyone who voted for the Miller amendment or the Adams amendment had in mind sabotaging the entire Hatch bill.

Mr. BROWN. I think that if the Senator will read what I have stated he will find that I did not make such a statement.

Mr. LEE. I listened very carefully. The implication was rather strong.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly if I gave that impression, I did not mean to imply, because I am rapidly coming to the point where I believe that I would now vote for a proposal which would eliminate the ban against all political activity as it is included in the original Hatch Act, if it is necessary to eliminate such a ban in the application of the Hatch bill to State employees, as to whom I contend we have no right to legislate at all under the framework of the American Constitution.

Mr. President, I stayed with the proponents of the Hatch bill when it was not easy to do so, when those with whom I am usually associated were urging upon me to vote the other way, because I hoped that we could leave the present law as it is, and not attempt to place upon the officers of the State of Michigan and of the other States of the Union what I conceive to be an entirely unfair provision, a provision which while not unconstitutional, insofar as section 12 of the bill is concerned, under the letter of the Constitution, I think is completely against the spirit and framework of the Constitution.

Mr. President, while I am on that subject I wish to read a part of this editorial:

> Because of the commendable purpose of the bill few Senators have attacked it directly. Most of its opponents, like Senator BROWN, prefer to saddle the measure with absurd amendments that would make its enactment unfeasible. * * *
> To be consistent the Senator should have included all farmers drawing benefits from the A. A. A. and veterans entitled to Federal aid.

I did not include either of those classes, and I do not think they should be included. I certainly would not include the class I am about to mention, but it was suggested to me by more than one Member of the Senate and more than one Member of the House that we might also include the newspapers of the United States, and prevent them from political activity, because of the fact that they are using the mails of the United States, and there is plenty of authority for that view, from the decision in the case of Lewis Publishing Co. v. Morgan (229 U. S. 288).

Mr. President, I do not care to go that far. There is no Member of the Senate who will fight more vigorously for the liberty of the press or for freedom of speech than I will. But we are tending in the direction suggested.

People talk about the Constitution preventing a "denial" of freedom of the press and a "denial" of freedom of speech. I have heard that word used many times. The Constitution does not say any such thing. The Constitution provides that the Congress shall make no law "abridging" the freedom of speech or "abridging" the freedom of the press, the word "abridging" being quite different from the word "denial." It means that we cannot chisel away, bit by bit, statute by statute enacted here, freedom of speech or freedom of the press. It means that we cannot condense, contract, curtail, diminish in extent. We have to leave the freedom of speech complete. That is what it means.

Mr. President, when we do what we did in the original Hatch Act, and what we are asking to do in the pending amendment, we apply an abridgement of the right of free speech, not as applied to all the citizens of the United States, but as applied to a certain class of citizens of the United States. How powerful is that attempt?

Take the case of a teacher in the University of Minnesota, which operates under the Morrill Land Grant Act, who has a position at, say, $5,000 a year as a college professor, and has no other income. The only way he can live, support his family, and maintain himself, is by hanging onto his job as a teacher in the university, because if he resigns to run for office, for example, he cannot get a job in any other university. He would be subject to the same penalty elsewhere. His life and his profession are that of teaching. We say to him that he cannot speak upon a political subject; that he cannot engage in any political activity.

The Senator from New Mexico admitted last Tuesday that under the provisions of his law that teacher could not even take part in an election upon a proposition to bond his community for the purpose of erecting a schoolhouse, or fire hall, or any other public building. If that is not in substance and in fact a denial of the right of the freedom of speech, an abridgement of freedom of speech, I do not know what those words mean.

We do not in this measure attempt to deny or abridge the freedom of speech of all citizens. We again enter into class legislation, and, Mr. President, how many people would be affected by the measure?

When we went into the public salary tax bill we found that there were in the neighborhood of 1,200,000 Federal employees, and we found that there were 2,600,000 State employees. So we would be taking about 4,000,000 citizens entirely out of circulation for engaging, not in pernicious political activity, but in legitimate political activity—the making of speeches for a candidate, the contribution of sums of money to carry out the idea a man may possess as to what should be the politics and the political trend of his country.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I think the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] takes the position that it would not be denying anyone his constitutional right of free speech or otherwise, but would merely be enacting into law the terms upon which he might be employed. In other words, a man could either quit making speeches for those in whom he believed, and for the cause in which he believed, or starve. He would have the choice of one or the other—giving up his right of free speech, or losing his employment.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; which, in the case of the university professor, is an absolute prohibition, unless he is a man of great wealth.

How far are we going in this matter, Mr. President? I call the Senate's attention to an editorial, or at least a statement, contained on the editorial page of the largest weekly magazine in the United States, the Saturday Evening Post, of March 9, the current issue. On its editorial page appears the heading:

> We see by the papers.

And under that the following:

> A special committee on economic conditions of the San Diego County, Calif., grand jury finding that relief is "fast becoming an intolerable burden to taxpayers"—

And they reached this conclusion:

> "Seeking any measure to divorce politics from relief, we suggest"—

And they say with considerable hesitation—and I want to commend them for that hesitation—

> "that the simplest and quickest way be to suspend the voting power of the relief client for the period of relief."

I am not saying that that is the view of the Saturday Evening Post, but they seem to quote it as a matter of news worthy to be placed upon their editorial page.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If I understand correctly the position of the Senator from Michigan with reference to the proposed legislation, it is that we have approached the solution of the problem from the wrong angle; that we are out fishing for the minnows while the sharks and the barracudas are left at large?

Mr. BROWN. Absolutely. I agree with the Senator from Indiana.

If we carry the ideas of the Senator from New Mexico to their logical conclusion, we can do a great many things we should not do. We can say to the able dean of the Senate that unless South Carolina entirely prevents lynching within the limits of the State of South Carolina, for the next ensuing fiscal year we willl not give the cotton farmers of South Carolina a cent of cotton benefits, or benefits of any other kind. If we start on this course, there is no limitation whatsoever upon us except the attitude, which ought to be sensible, of the Senators themselves—the brakes which they would put upon it. There is absolutely nothing to prevent the attempt being made to cajole or coerce a State legislature to do anything the United States Congress wants it to do, regardless of its own views, by a threat of withdrawal of Federal money. It does not need to be connected with the purpose for which the moneys are granted, although there is some remote connection in the present instance.

Mr. President, I was in discussion a few days ago with a very distinguished political scientist of the University of Minnesota. Without any solicitation from me—he came to me last Saturday morning and said, "I want to point out to you the effect of this Hatch amendment upon a considerable class of our citizens," and I think so much of what he said that with a few changes I am going to give to the Senate the substance of what he said to me.

The bill to extend the provisions of the Hatch Act to certain officers and employees of the State, taken up for consideration on March 4, would in all probability extend to professors, instructors, teachers, officers, and all employees of any educational institution receiving grants from the Federal Government for educational purposes. Certainly the bill would include all professors and employees of the 69 land-grant colleges throughout the country.

I take it that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] who, as we all know, was a distinguished professor in the University of Utah—I believe he was when he was elected to the Senate of the United States—would not be here today if the Hatch law had been in effect in 1932. He would have been prohibited from engaging in political activity, assuming that the University of Utah receives money under the Morrill Land Grant Act.

The Senator says that it does not. Well, one of the great schools of my State of Michigan, Michigan State College, receives such money, and sixty-nine-odd universities throughout the country receive it.

I do not know whether or not Princeton University comes within the Morrill land-grant group. But if it does, Mr. President, Woodrow Wilson could not have been elected Governor of New Jersey, and all the splendid men we have taken from various colleges throughout the country would not be here in Washington today. There would not be any "brain trust" for the Republicans to talk about, because all those gentlemen would be ineligible. Am I right or wrong?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Right.

Mr. BROWN. When the Senator from New Mexico was questioned by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], on March 5 he was asked:

> Would a professor in a land-grant university or college, for instance, be included within the prohibition of this measure?

The Senator from New Mexico replied:

> Yes; he would be. I think he should be.

The fact that the pending measure will extend to the land-grant colleges and universities was taken for granted by another Senator during the course of the debate. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] on the same day contemplated the possibility that the Civil Service Commission might, under some circumstances, take action to withhold some of the funds of a land-grant university or college. It would be difficult to say how many educational institutions in the country would be affected by this bill in addition to the land-grant schools. If the institutions receiving grants under the Morrill Act would be affected, then it would appear that all schools receiving grants under the Smith-Lever Act of 1914, the Smith-Hughes Act of 1917, and other similar acts relating to instruction and research in agricultural and technical subjects, would be equally affected.

During the first day of the debate in the Senate the Senator from South Carolina assumed that the bill applied to teachers in institutions receiving grants for vocational education. In the debate, on March 7, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] seemed to hold that all teachers serving in schools partially supported from Federal public funds would come within the scope of the bill.

The proposed law uses the words "any person employed in any administrative position." These words might be held to exclude teachers in universities and other educational institutions of all grades, just as I supposed there was a distinction between, I think it is, section 3 of the bill and section 9 of the bill.

But section 12 (a) of the pending bill extends the scope of the act by the use of language which is much broader and more inclusive. This section begins with the words:

> SEC. 12. (a) No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Not pernicious political activity, but any legitimate political activity, as heretofore understood.

These words are certainly sufficiently broad to include university teachers, professors, and other teachers throughout the country, including professors in State universities and other State-supported educational institutions.

I am now reading or using in part the words of the gentleman whose name I shall give later:

> Professors in State universities and other State-supported educational institutions do not ordinarily think of themselves as officers and employees of the State. They regard themselves, rather, as members of a profession with a high standard of public service.

Certainly they have maintained that position.

> They think of themselves as members of the community of scholars, owing allegiance first to their colleagues and the university hierarchy. Yet they are undoubtedly mere State employees, and are thus included in the present bill. They receive their salaries from the general funds of the State, under warrant of the State treasurer. They profited until 1940 from the general exemption of State employees from the Federal income tax.
> The Federal funds paid to the land-grant universities and colleges under the Morrill Act in aid of agricultural education are paid into the general funds of the institution. They are, of course, budgeted as belonging to the departments for which the grants were made, but there is no practical way to segregate the funds in order to say that the salaries of only certain professors, or the activities of only certain departments, are in part financed out of Federal funds. The whole institution and all the professors and employees may be regarded as in receipt of Federal funds.

If those assumptions are correct—and I take it from the statements made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that they are—all teachers and employees in the land-grant universities and colleges, the numerous State experiment stations, the State departments of education, and in practically all the secondary schools in the country, would be restricted in their right to participate in politics.

Perhaps the members of local school boards, trustees, and regents of the land-grant colleges would be included. According to the language of the bill they would be prohibited from using their official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. By the amendment offered the other day by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and accepted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], no appointed regent of a State land-grant college could run for office to succeed himself. Under the original proposal of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] they might possibly have been excluded; but under the Clark amendment every one of them is included. The amendment would not apply in my State, because we elect the regents of the University of Michigan, and we elect the State board of agriculture, which runs the Michigan State College. Those are large institutions, Mr. President. One of them has 12,000 students, and the other has approximately 6,000 students. None of those regents could be a candidate to succeed himself, because he would be engaged in politics—legitimate politics, I say. The Senator's bill makes them guilty of engaging in pernicious political activity.

By the language of the proposed law such teachers, college professors, and so forth, would further be prohibited from taking any part in political management. Many university and other teachers have long regarded such activities as legitimately belonging to them as intellectual leaders in the communities in which they live. Many professors have served with distinction as officers of political parties, members of party committees, and delegates to conventions. Probably one of the greatest engineers in the United States is the dean emeritus of the College of Engineering of the University of Michigan, Mortimer E. Cooley, a well-known man who has done much at the request of this administration. In 1930 Dean Cooley was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for the office of United States Senator. Dean Cooley could not have been a candidate for office if the provisions of the Hatch bill had been in effect. We are excluding from participation in politics the very highest class of our citizens; men who perhaps ought to interest themselves more in government than they now do.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. If the teachers and professors to whom the Senator has been referring were excluded from political activities, would we not be excluding practically the only persons in the various States who would be competent to discuss educational problems or problems with reference to bond issues for schools, and so forth?

Mr. BROWN. Yes. The Senator makes a telling point along that line.

The entire Department of Health of the State of Michigan is obtained from the department of medicine in the University of Michigan. If the present bill, as amended, is passed, the Governor of my State may not take a professor from the State university and put him into office as the head of the board of health and have him thereafter say anything whatever in favor of the Governor who chose him.

At times professors have rendered valuable public service as members of committees to advise political parties on matters of policy by giving educational lectures to assemblies on party measures. I do not understand that Mr. Frank now has any connection with the University of Wisconsin; but he is chairman of the policy-forming committee of the Republican Party, and it is a mere accident that he is not now president of the university. As president of the university he would be prevented from engaging in that kind of political activity by the provisions of the pending bill.

The scholar in politics is not as common a figure in America as in certain other countries, but there have been outstanding examples, such as Woodrow Wilson, and the revered Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. Many Members of the House and Senate have seen service in the teaching profession.

There are always some members of the teaching profession who value highly the right to participate in politics. They see no inconsistency between sincere partisanship in politics and impartiality in scientific judgment. There is in fact no contradiction between the two things.

The most inclusive organization of teachers in the higher schools, the American Association of University Professors, fully recognizes, in its statement of principles adopted in 1938, that the teacher has certain rights as a citizen which are essential to his professional achievement.

The college or university teacher is a citizen—

This association has declared—a member of a learned profession, an officer of an educational institution. When he speaks or writes as a citizen, he should be free from institutional censorship or discipline, but his special position in the community imposes special obligations.

While the association has never made an official declaration covering the specific issue raised by the proposed legislation, it is plain from the foregoing that scholars value highly their right to their own political ideas and hope to preserve the right to express and advocate those ideas in every way consistent with democratic principles.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Along the line suggested by the Senator from Michigan, let me say to the Senator that our State university is a land-grant college. We have two normal schools in our State which are land-grant colleges. Our school of mines is a State land-grant college. Our school for the deaf and blind is a land-grant college.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator's colleague states that all of them are subject to the provisions of the bill.

To note a specific example, a political scientist, as a part of a legitimate research program, might wish to serve as a watcher at the polls. Projects of this character have actually been conducted, in which both teachers and students have participated, with excellent results in exposing electoral malpractice. Again, a political scientist, in a genuine desire to assist his chosen party as well as to lend a touch of reality to his teaching and writing, might wish to offer his services for a time to the party headquarters.

Social scientists might, in genuine public spirit, feel disposed to offer their services in the research and educational activities which our political parties are beginning to sponsor. Some, if not all, of these perfectly legitimate enterprises would, under the proposed legislation, result in the end of the professional careers of those concerned.

In other words, under the Senator's bill, they could quit their jobs if they wanted to, but they must quit them if they desire to express their opinions where they will do some good in a political campaign. Certainly, as I said a while ago, Mr. President, that is an abridgement of the right of free speech.

The most important objection to the proposed legislation from the point of view of the teaching profession does not, however, arise from a desire to preserve the freedom of action of teachers in extra-mural affairs. The possible effect upon academic freedom within the classroom is much more important. Teachers—and I call particular attention to this—would be in constant fear that their remarks might be interpreted as advocacy of a particular party or candidate. Historians and political scientists would have to trim close in their discussions of political campaigns and party platforms.

Teachers in Michigan, for example, would be subject to the possible danger of having the Civil Service Commission come into the State of Michigan, and say that Professor So-and-So in November or October of 1940 expressed an opinion to his classes, some of the members of which may be voters, in which he indicated that one of the principles in the Democratic platform was right. Therefore, because he had done this, the long arm of the Federal Government would reach down and say to the college or university, "If you want to continue to get money from the United States you have got to discharge that college professor; he cannot teach there any longer." Who does that? A bureau here in Washington, the Civil Service Commission, that has no connection whatsoever with the University of Michigan. That, Senators, as nearly as I can recollect, is the most extreme proposal for intrusion of bureaucracy in the affairs of a State that I have ever seen seriously contemplated in a legislative body.

Since anyone can complain of an alleged violation to the enforcing authority, there would be danger of the development in every university and college of a system of espionage comparable to that which developed in the German universities after the national socialists came into power.

In other words, if the Civil Service Commission should do its full duty, that is, enforce the law, then it ought to have another group such as Edgar Hoover's operatives, to go to the University of Michigan and attend the classes conducted by professors who might be suspected of expressing political opinions in their classrooms.

Every disgruntled student, suffering, perhaps, a supposed unjust grade on an examination or essay, would be sorely tempted to tell tales out of school. The proposal has appalling prospects of promoting wholesale corruption of student morals and character assassination of teachers.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator from Michigan care to make any observation or express any opinion as to what he believes might happen to a political scientist in universities under this bill?

Mr. BROWN. It is my judgment that Prof. Charles E. Merriam, who headed the political science department of the University of Chicago, would have been pretty seriously handicapped in his campaign for mayor of the city of Chicago. I see no basis upon which any teachers of political science could express their own convictions. The great authority on the tariff, Professor Taussig, of Harvard, for years in Harvard University preached the doctrine of low tariffs and pointed out the danger of high protective tariffs to his classes and in his lectures outside the university and in all his works. If he, after this bill was enacted, protested against what he thought was a pernicious protective tariff, he could be condemned; he could not hold his job in Harvard, that is, assuming that Harvard is a university which is assisted by the United States Government.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator that I had the latter question in mind rather than the former. In other words, I think the teacher in a political science department would certainly be curtailed, if this bill should become a law, in expressing any opinion to those to whom he was teaching a certain type of political philosophy.

Mr. BROWN. Absolutely; the Senator is correct; and that is the main burden of my remarks.

Quite apart from the possible effects upon individuals, the proposed law contains an ominous provision for educational institutions. The prospect of the Civil Service Commission sitting in judgment over some great State university, with power to withhold some or all of the Federal funds provided by law, is not an inspiring one, to say the least. The university might be called upon to answer for the actions, perhaps, of some irresponsible underling. The institution—and, indeed, the whole people of the State—might be made to suffer because of the curtailment of funds. Moreover, the Civil Service Commission would have power to order the discharge of the professor or employee involved. This would be regarded by all concerned as an unwarranted invasion of the right of a university to control its own affairs. To discharge a professor because of political activity would be a violation of the long-settled rules and practices of academic tenure. If a university should accede to such a demand of the Civil Service Commission, it would be faced with bitter protests from its own faculty and would, undoubtedly, be "blacklisted" by the American Association of University Professors. The author of this measure probably did not perceive its probable ill effects upon educational institutions and the teaching profession.

Mr. President, much, in fact, most, of these remarks are the views of a well-known educator, Prof. Joseph R. Starr, department of political science of the University of Minnesota.

I wish to conclude with two observations: First, the activities of Government employees and of State employees, which we ought to condemn—and we, as the legislature of the United States, ought not to take such action in the case of State employees—is just what the title of the bill condemns—namely, pernicious political activities.

I think the author of the bill, in the interim which I hope is coming before we finally vote on the measure again, ought to search his mind and ask himself if he is not condemning an entire class of a million and a quarter Government employees, and possibly 2,600,000 State employees, because of the bad political activity of some few State employees? Everything that is pernicious in political activity is now specifically condemned under the laws of the United States. Most of such activities are specifically condemned by the Hatch Act, which was passed last August. But now the Senator goes way beyond that and throws out a great dragnet in which he seeks to gather every Government official, no matter how legitimate his interest in politics may be.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has been discussing an important phase of this measure with regard to its effect on land-grant colleges. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a bill which has been pending in the Congress since last July, Senate bill 2510, which has been introduced for the purpose of authorizing the appropriation of a certain amount of money to be paid to the various States of the Union for the purpose, as provided in the bill, of assisting the States to maintain kindergarten schools. The bill provides that when the money is put into the treasury of each State it is to be managed and controlled entirely by the State board of education.

I do not know whether the Senator has given any thought to the bill to which I have referred, but I am wondering whether or not, if the pending bill should pass, the entire school systems of every State in the Union might be included under the Hatch bill, that is, at least the teachers who are employed in these schools and who are State employees might be drawn under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that under the general theory of this bill, if pursued to its logical conclusion, the teachers to whom the Senator is referring would be included within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I am interested in the kindergarten bill because I have had a great many communications from my State and, as a matter of fact, letters from a few other States about it. There seems to be a rather widespread interest in the measure, and it is on the Calendar of the Senate at this session. I was, of course, thinking of the extent to which the bill would go, if it should become a law, with reference to money being paid by the United States Government into the educational fund of a State, or into a State treasury, to be disbursed and handled by the State board of education without control of any sort on the part of the Federal Government—money that is placed in the fund out of which the high schools and grammar schools of the State are already being maintained and operated.

We may have a very far-reaching thing ahead of us in this respect. If every school teacher in every State of the Union is to be affected by this measure, I think it certainly is entitled to even more serious consideration than it has received, because the same argument which the Senator has made with respect to teachers in land-grant colleges would apply to teachers in the public schools of the States if the bill should be enacted.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Let me read into the RECORD for consideration a proposed amendment, and then I will send it up and ask that it be printed and lie on the table for future consideration.

Particularly referring to the matters I have been discussing, I propose, following section 15, to add a section to be known as section 16, as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way affecting educational, religious, eleemosynary, philanthropic, or cultural institutions, establishments, and agencies, together with the officers and employees thereof.

That would adequately take care, I think, of the group to which I have been referring.

Mr. President, like the amendment I proposed last Friday, this amendment is proposed in the event we enact—and just think of the Democratic Party being responsible for enacting—a measure which will invade the rights of all the 48 States of the Union, and legislate respecting the tenure of office of their employees and their conduct. I should not have submitted the amendment I submitted last Friday if I had not thought it was a logical extension of the principle upon which the pending Hatch bill is based. I think there should be no Hatch bill. I think that if we could do so we ought to eliminate the prohibition contained in the present law against legitimate political activity. But if we are going to have this amendatory measure, then I say to you that we ought to cover all other classes of persons such as contributors to political campaign committees which I discussed last Friday.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me the Senator has been arguing from the standpoint of the bill being a sword, and has been missing the point of its being a shield.

For several years I have been the chairman of the board of trustees of a land-grant college of one of the universities of the country. Not only are 98 percent, I should say, of the professors of the university desirous of being relieved of the feeling that they have to be on one side or the other in political campaigns, but if the Senator has ever had the experience of having a political circular get into the hands of one of these professors, and having him complain and take it forthwith to the newspapers and show what one side or the other was trying to make him do against his wishes and against his will, it is my observation that the Senator has not heard any squalling such as he would hear if he tried to get one of them to contribute to a political campaign on one side or the other. [Laughter.]

I think the Senator misses the point, to this extent: I do not agree with him that under this measure, if the Governor of a State wanted to bar a tax collector from the professorship of a university, as we do in Kentucky, and have him administer the tax laws of the State, that would be in violation of the Hatch Act.

Mr. BROWN. Let the Senator understand what I was talking about. I said that if the Thomas amendment were adopted—and the Thomas amendment is a logical extension of the Hatch Act to the class of politicians who are on the outside trying to get in—and a university professor had in any way participated in politics within 2 years before the election, the Governor could not take him from the university and put him in charge of tax collections.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand. I believe, however, the people of the country would like to know whether the professors and the school teachers are going to be professors and school teachers or whether they are going to be politicians. I think that is an important question when we consider that the Congress appropriates money for the land-grant colleges under the Smith-Hughes Act, the Lever Act, and the other acts which the Senator has mentioned. When the Congress appropriates money to professors to be spent for the education of the young men and young women of America, it is my feeling that the people of the country want that money to be contributed without any requirement that the persons receiving it shall play politics in order to keep their jobs.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator find in the law any requirement that they shall play politics?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; but——

Mr. BROWN. That seems to be the burden of the Senator's remarks. We are talking about their liberties, their right to do things they want to do, and the restriction upon those rights.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator construe section 12 to limit the right of a man to vote for one side or the other in a political campaign?

Mr. BROWN. Not at all; but it does limit his right to be a candidate for office.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has to make a choice whether he is going to be a professor or a candidate for political office, and he ought to make that choice.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; and he has to give up his job on the doubtful chance of being elected to office. Suppose he were a Republican candidate in the Senator's State of Kentucky. The Senator knows that he would not stand much chance of being elected; but before he could be a Republican candidate he would have to give up his job. He would have to resign.

Mr. CHANDLER. On such a hopeless prospect for a job in the future, he ought to be required to give up his job. There is no question about that. [Laughter.]

The point I want to make, however, is that 98 percent of the professors and school teachers want to stay out of politics. They have taken a profession for life. They receive money from the Federal Government and from the State. They want to teach school. The Senator views this measure as a sword, while I view it as a shield. I think it is a protection to such persons.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator that I do not know much about the University of Kentucky, although I have met the dean of the medical school of that university, who happens to summer on the Straits of Mackinac, where I live; but there is nothing in the bill which compels such persons to engage in politics. We in Michigan, so far as I know—and I am fairly familiar with the situation—have never passed the hat among the professors of the University of Michigan or of Michigan State College. We do not do that. What I am saying is that if such a man wants to make a political speech in a campaign, or if he wants to contribute to a campaign, he has a right to do it. We do not compel him to do anything.

Mr. CHANDLER. The act says "official authority." Does the Senator construe that to mean official authority or political influence?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, no; I have not the slightest objection to anything the Senator has in his bill respecting the use of official authority. I am talking about the provision of the bill which says that all political activity is condemned on the part of any State official—not the use of official authority, but the use of his time when he is not working for the State when he is off duty.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I am certain that the people of the country are watching what we do in regard to this bill. It is my opinion that they are watching to see—and, to my mind, that is the real issue involved—whether we are going to continue to appropriate money for public health and public schools and public charities, and say to those who receive it, "You must contribute to political campaigns," or "You must play politics."

Mr. BROWN. The Senator does not mean that at the present time there is anything in the law or in the practice which makes professors in universities contribute to political campaigns?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; but many of them feel an urge to do so which they will not feel if this measure is passed.

Mr. BROWN. They do not in Michigan.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator argues from the standpoint of the measure being a sword, while I argue that it is a shield; that it gives these persons protection and also guarantees that in the future the money of the people of the United States will not be used for politics, but will be used for the purposes for which Congress appropriates the money.

Mr. BROWN. Let us lay aside the matter of political contributions. Does the Senator think the teachers in the University of Kentucky desire to be muzzled because they happen to hold positions as teachers in the university?

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill does not muzzle them, and the Hatch Act does not muzzle them.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, yes; the bill does. It says they may not engage in political activity; they may not engage in a political campaign; they may not make political speeches in a campaign; they may not make contributions to political campaigns.

Mr. CHANDLER. They do not want to make contributions to political campaigns.

Mr. BROWN. That may be so; but certainly they do not want their liberty of speech taken away from them. I think the Senator entirely misconstrues the measure.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] will agree that whenever we find a professor in a college who is taking part in politics, or someone connected with a school like the man who gave the Senator the information he has just given to us, he is a man who ought to be in some other business than a professorship in one of the colleges of America.

Mr. BROWN. That is not very complimentary to the Senator from Utah. He came directly from the University of Utah to the Senate of the United States, and we are all very happy to have him here. I do not believe that could have happened if the Hatch bill had been on the statute books.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Utah said he was not a professor in a land-grant college.

Mr. BROWN. But he was a professor in a college which undoubtedly is gaining some benefits from the Treasury of the United States, and I do not want to make it doubtful whether or not the Senator from Utah could have come here. I do not wish to put him under a cloud by saying that what he did away back there was pernicious political activity. That is just what we are asked to do by passing the Hatch bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. McANDREWS, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. KERR, Mr. HARE, Mr. CARTER, Mr. STEFAN, and Mr. WHITE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 1449. An act for the relief of Robert Stockman;

S. 1998. An act for the relief of Ernestine Huber Neuheller;

S. 2284. An act to amend the Act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), so as to authorize the President to appoint 100 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service; and

H. R. 7863. An act to amend section 602 (e) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to a study of radio requirements for ships navigating the Great Lakes and inland waters of the United States.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Andrews	Donahey	King	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Lee	Sheppard
Bailey	George	Lodge	Shipstead

Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pittman	White
Connally	Hughes	Reed
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me a moment?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent that I may modify the pending amendment by inserting in line 3, page 1, after the word "stockholder," the words, "having an interest worth over $25,000", and inserting the same words in line 5, page 2, after the word "stockholders."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be modified as requested.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the discussion which has gone forward during the past several days, in my opinion, concerns things which are not included in the pending bill, and were never intended to be included in it, and the bill will have none of the effects about which Senators have manifested so much concern. I wish to speak briefly today about some of the things which are not included in the bill, but which Senators repeatedly declare are prohibited by the bill.

The argument which was made this morning, and those which have been made throughout the week, as to the curtailment or abridgment of the constitutional right of freedom of speech, has been answered over and over again, not by me—my word might not be important in construing constitutional provisions—but they have been answered in words such as those I quoted last week from Oliver Wendell Holmes, a man whose ability and whose liberal views I am sure no one will doubt, whose words dispute any idea that this class of legislation curtails the right of freedom of speech.

More than that, Mr. President, to make assurance double sure at the last session that no such right should be curtailed, in the bill we then passed we expressly provided that all persons should have the right to express their opinions on all political subjects, and the word "privately," which appears in the civil-service rule, was deliberately stricken out, and the President of the United States, in commenting on that fact in his message, pointed out that there was involved in the legislation no curtailment or abridgment of the right of freedom of speech.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. There is no doubt that anyone coming within the provisions of the proposed law could not go out in a political campaign and make political speeches, is there?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. MINTON. To that extent there is a curtailment of the right of freedom of speech, although it may be, as the Senator has stated, a constitutional curtailment.

Mr. HATCH. It is a waiver of his right when he accepts the conditions attached to his employment. As I have stated, those words are not my words; they are the words of Justice Holmes.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield only once more, because I have very little time.

Mr. MINTON. It merely comes down to this, that a man can give up his right of free speech and hold his job; in other words, he can starve or speak.

Mr. HATCH. Not at all. No such statement was made, and no such interpretation can logically be placed on the bill. It is just as extreme as the statement that all political activities are banned, which statement has been made, and was made by the Senator from Michigan just now, and I think the Senator from Indiana has made the statement—though I am not sure he has—that all political activity is banned by the bill.

Repeatedly the provisions of the bill have been made clear; again I say, not by my words but by interpretations, instructions, and rulings which have already been made with respect to the act. I said last year, and I said in explaining the pending bill, and I have said time and time again, that the language prohibiting political activity and management of political campaigns was adopted and used simply because that language has been in effect in this country for more than 50 years. It has been construed and interpreted over that period of time as it affected the vast majority of Federal employees. I did not want to use different language, which would cause different interpretations, but I wanted to use the same language, and it has not been difficult to apply. I have in my hand the printed rules and interpretations which have been made with respect to that language over this period of years.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator put them in the RECORD?

Mr. HATCH. They have been put in the RECORD time and time again. However, I will place them in the RECORD again when I conclude my remarks.

I want to come now to the subject of political contributions. The ruling on that subject has been mailed to practically all Federal employees in the United States in order that they may know what it is. It is as follows:

Voluntary contributions to campaign committees and organizations are permitted. An employee may not solicit, collect, or receive contributions. Contributions by persons receiving remuneration from funds appropriated for relief are prohibited.

That is a clear-cut statement, an interpretation of the civil-service rule which has been in effect for more than 50 years, construing language identical with that contained in the pending measure. But that is not all.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. That, of course, is what the Civil Service Commission says the law means. That is not the construction of any district court, circuit court, or of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, I understand that, and that is what bothers me sometimes. People talk about this terrible, awful law as though there were some criminal penalty imposed. The only penalty is the administrative one of loss of job; and listen to what is said by the departments which enforce that provision, and the ones which would be compelled to execute it, which have ruled as the Civil Service Commission has ruled and have told their employees that it is not against the law to make voluntary contributions.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Connecticut has offered an amendment which provides that an appeal can be taken to the courts. Even though we concede that the Senator from New Mexico has correctly quoted for the RECORD the rules and the construction put upon the law by the Civil Service Commission, it does not follow that that is the construction which must be placed on the pending measure.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator want me to give a bond or guaranty? I cannot do that. But I can tell the Senate what the Attorney General of the United States has to say about it.

Mr. MINTON. That would be an opinion.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; but it is the opinion of the highest legal officer of the Government. Yet it seems it should not be persuasive in argument or debate.

Let us see what is said by the Department of Agriculture, which is one of the departments charged with the duty of enforcing the proposed amendment to the law, one of the departments which would discharge an employee if he made an illegal contribution.

> Voluntary political contributions or payments by officers and employees, if not made to others employed by the Government or to incumbent Members of Congress, are not unlawful.

They are talking about the present act. That is what they said about it. Does the Senator from Indiana think that someone in the Department of Agriculture is going to lose his job simply because he makes a voluntary contribution, when his own superior tells him he can do so? Such an argument would be ridiculous, just as most of the arguments which have been made along this line have been ridiculous.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I think, if the Senator pleases, the present law would prevent such an employee from contributing to the campaign fund of an officer who is running for office.

Mr. HATCH. That is the reason the Department made that exception, pointing out that they cannot contribute to other employees or those running for office. One Federal employee cannot contribute to another Federal employee. The Department points out that that would be unlawful. But otherwise voluntary contributions are not prohibited. All the argument that the Senator from New Mexico is trying to get the $2 man is absolutely absurd.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to know why the Senator is bringing the $2 man under this law if he is not intending to punish him.

Mr. HATCH. I intend to keep him out of pernicious political activity, but not legitimate political activity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator must recognize that there is a very broad distinction, and also the question of who is the judge. If a Republican is passing on the question, as a superior officer, and the little $2 fellow is a Democrat, or vice versa, who knows the correctness of the political decision which may be rendered?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator, as a lawyer, knows that when language has been interpreted over the years, as this language has been, certain definite standards and meanings are set up, and when it is said by the Congress of the United States and on the floor, and in the reports, that that language is used because it has been so interpreted, there is every reason in the world to believe that the courts, if the question ever got there, would give that self-same interpretation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will go back and make a little clearer answer to me as to why he wants to bring the little $2 man under the penal provisions of this measure if he has no intention of subduing him, oppressing him, and intimidating him, or permitting his superiors to do so.

Mr. HATCH. I have spoken on this subject many times.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator has not spoken on that particular point.

Mr. HATCH. I have spoken on that point many times. I read to the Senate what Grover Cleveland said on the subject, and what Thomas Jefferson said on the subject, and what Woodrow Wilson and Abraham Lincoln said on the subject, and what practically every Democratic platform that has ever been written has said on this subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have never heard any of the gentlemen quoted as dealing with the point I am talking about, because I do not think any effort has ever been made before to apply a penal law to the little man such as this seems to me to be. I have heard quotations made about corruption in elections, and we all agree to what they said, but the application of the law here is the problem involved.

Mr. HATCH. Thomas Jefferson issued an Executive order prohibiting the employees of the executive branch of the Government from participating in elections, declaring that it was a denial of the constitutional processes for them so to do, and that it threatened to smother the elective processes under the enormous power of the Federal patronage, and he provided as a penalty the removal of the person or employee who did so.

The first bill along this line was introduced in the Senate over a hundred years ago and provided much more stringent penalties than the pending bill does. I appreciate the good faith of the Senator from Alabama, but I say to him that he has not fully studied this subject. If he had, he would not have made the statement which he has just made. He apparently has not studied the platforms of the Democratic Party in which we pledged ourselves to do the very things which this bill seeks to do, not once, but many times. Always, however, I am sad to say, those pledges were made when the Republican Party was in power, and we were condemning the Republicans for doing that thing. Now that we are in power, I regret that it is Democratic Members of the Senate who are not backing this measure. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] said, "Think of the Democratic Party sponsoring this."

Mr. President, after listening to the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] the other day—and I wish the Senator from Alabama would read them, and draw from them the scenes from that State which he brought before the Senate—I cannot see how any Democrat who values the principles of his party, and the things we have been declaring for time and again, can fight this mild gesture, for that is all this bill is, against the sort of thing the Senator from West Virginia brought before us the other day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not have the pleasure of hearing the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], but I am sure the Senator will agree that the first eight sections of his original bill cover everything he is condemning on the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, not so. The ninth section is required to complete that measure, and that section is required today to carry it on. Then, after that, much more legislation and stronger legislation is required to do the thing I want to do.

Mr. President, I was amazed at the argument made by the Senator from Michigan against the invasion, as he says, of State rights, after he had offered his amendment to this bill, which he said the other day he offered in all good faith. I question not that good faith. I ask how anyone who holds the views which he holds could propose the amendment he did? I do not know how he has modified it. It may reach what I am talking about now.

Mr. BROWN. I have modified it, I will say to the Senator, by confining it to stockholders having a $25,000 interest.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment is now confined to stockholders having a $25,000 interest, so the Senator says. But that only changes the degree. If a person owned a $25,000 interest in the Ford Motor Co., we will say, in the Senator's own State, and the Ford Motor Co. happened to have a contract to sell the Government some trucks, and pending that contract, if this one little stockholder happened to participate actively in politics, would he lose his job, under the provisions of the Senator's amendment as originally offered by him?

No. He would be guilty of a criminal offense, and would be subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. To me the issue in this bill which bears the Senator's name is a very simple one. I should like to ask the Senator a few questions, the answers to which may clarify the intentions and review our past effort for clean politics.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. First of all, each time we have had a Senatorial election contest we have discovered that our corrupt-practice laws were limited, and they have been amended. Since the large expenditure of money by the Federal Government in recent years for relief work we discovered that attempts were made to exploit persons on relief for political purposes; and legislation has been enacted to prevent such attempts. Is that correct?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Last year the Senator from New Mexico was the promoter of a measure to go a step further and place restrictions and limitations upon political activities of employees of the Federal Government paid from the Federal Treasury. That was the basis of the legislation known as the Hatch Act. Is that correct?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, all the Senator is now asking for, stripped of all amendments and attempts to confuse and divert the issue, is that the error or the wrong—if there be one—in the diversion of Federal funds to individuals for what we may think are improper political activities be corrected. It is clear that when a Federal employee receives his money from the Federal Treasury we have such power, and we have already declared that he shall keep his hands off certain kinds of political practices. The proposal now before the Senate is to apply to the State employee who receives some or all of his money from the Federal Treasury the same limitations and restrictions that are applied to Federal officeholders who receive all their money from the Federal Treasury. Is not that the sole issue involved?

Mr. HATCH. That is entirely correct.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the question whether we wish to limit election activities to those who receive all their money from the Public Treasury, or whether we wish to apply the same principles and the same limitations and restrictions to persons in State employment who receive some or part of their money from the Public Treasury?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. WALSH. Is any other issue involved?

Mr. HATCH. I think not.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the Senator's sole purpose to amend the original law so as to make applicable to those who receive employment from the Federal Government through State governments by way of a contribution in whole or in part from the Federal Government the principles and restrictions imposed in the original act?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I regret that I cannot yield now.

I wish to say, in line with what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that, stripped of everything else, the bill, instead of invading States rights, protects the rights of the States. We merely say that the funds contributed by the Federal Government shall not be used for political purposes. That is all we say. We do not say to the States, "Your employees may not function as you wish." The States have the full right to do whatever they desire. We merely indicate to the States that we do not want our funds used to build up political machines, and that we wish to apply to certain State employees the same penalties now applied to Federal employees, which penalties amount to almost nothing. That is the sum and substance of the whole matter.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, briefly stated, the pending bill and the various amendments which have been offered to it all relate, it seems to me, to a proposition which at heart is exceedingly simple. It is a proposition which bears very directly upon the basic principles of democratic government. It is the question whether elections shall be the free expression of the will and the sentiments of the voters or shall be colored, and perhaps controlled, by an army of officeholders and the beneficiaries of governmental bounties.

Experience in the 1936 and 1938 elections clearly revealed inadequacies in the Federal Corrupt Practices Act as it then stood and the need for additional legislation. A review of the hearings and the report of the Sheppard committee of 1938, of which I was a member, will furnish abundant evidence to support the pending Hatch bill.

Congress at the last session enacted a bill which bore the name of the senior Senator from New Mexico, and which sought to ban political activity by Federal Government employees and at the same time to protect recipients of unemployment relief and other Federal aid from political exploitation.

I strongly favored the original Hatch bill, and I similarly favor the amendment to the present law contained in the pending bill as reported to the Senate.

The bill now before us prescribes no new policy. It is not drastic. The principle involved has been well established. It proposes only to forbid political activity by State employees paid wholly or in part with Federal money. In practical effect, it seeks to deny the use of Federal funds for the support of State political machines. What the States themselves should do or may do with respect to circumscribing the political activities of their own employees paid entirely with State funds is a State affair, and not properly within the province of the Federal Congress. But certainly sound public policy requires that all persons whose salaries are paid either in whole or in part out of the Federal Treasury should be on the same footing, whether they be directly employed by the Federal Government or indirectly employed through the States with Federal funds.

The pending amendment, offered by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], goes far afield, and in my judgment is not in harmony with the purpose of the Hatch bill. I deplore the other amendatory proposals, which, it seems to me, were intended either to impede the passage of the pending bill or to make the bill a vehicle for destroying the effective provisions of the present law. I believe we should proceed without delay to a final vote on the pending bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] wished to ask a question. I now yield to him.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I wish to point out to the Senator from Massachusetts that he expresses almost entirely my own view when he refers to the politics that should be condemned by the bill as "improper political activities."

If the Senator from New Mexico had such a provision in his bill, outside of my objection on the ground of invasion of State's rights, I should not seriously object to it. However, the Senator condemns proper political activity when he condemns all political activity; and that is what a great many of us object to.

Mr. HATCH. I repeat, we do not condemn all political activity, and we never have done so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Let me make another suggestion: Is not the theory behind the bill that Democrats and Republicans, rich and poor—people of every standard in life—contribute to the salaries of administrative officers of this Government, and they ought not to participate in elections but ought to keep aloof from political activities? Likewise, officials in States who receive money from the Federal taxpayers ought to keep out of politics—at least, improper politics—and mind their own business and let the public, and not political officeholders, run elections. Let the people, and not officeholders, manager, direct, and decide elections.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Massachusetts cannot express himself without using the expression "improper politics." That is what we are complaining about. However, the bill prohibits any political activity.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator from New Mexico how are we to prohibit improper political activity unless we prohibit all political activity on the part of officeholders?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I feel that the Senator's estimate of the American people must be pretty low——

Mr. GEORGE. I am not talking about the American people.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator's estimate of the American people must be pretty low if he thinks a Government official or a State official may not engage in legitimate political activity. Does not the Senator engage in legitimate political activity when he assists in his own reelection to the Senate? He engages in a political activity which is prohibited on the part of an executive officer of the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to take up the Senator's time.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be very happy to have the Senator do so.

Mr. GEORGE. We are merely quibbling when we talk about permitting "proper political activity" on the part of a great body of Government employees, and stopping "improper political activity." Those who control the salaries of employees who must depend upon the Government pay rolls will see to it that the political activity is proper; but it will be proper to vote for those in power. It always has been so, and always will be.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator believes that he and I can be proper in our political activities, but that Government clerks downtown cannot be. I think their consciences are just as good as mine.

Mr. HATCH. A Government clerk does not have any choice.

Mr. GEORGE. He has no choice. The bill is intended to prevent the coercion of persons who cannot assert themselves.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will write "coercion" into the bill, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what the bill is intended to do.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. No amendment has sought to destroy such provisions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I cannot yield further. What the Senator from Georgia has just said is absolutely true. We talk about the freedom of employees in the highway departments. It is laughable when we think about it. Every man who has been in a political campaign will laugh at such a suggestion.

Mr. BROWN. I did not smile at the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator should smile at such an argument. We know what is done. We know what every man who is forced by the circumstances of his lot as an employee does when he is ordered to go out and work as his boss wants him to work, or lose his job. What is he to do? He will do what is necessary to hold his job.

Am I exaggerating? Mr. President, I have not wanted to put into the RECORD the things which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] put into the RECORD on Saturday, but I have them. I have them right here in my hand, from States represented by Senators who are taking an active part in opposition to the bill. I have before me a page from the Sheppard report, disclosing how 450 highway employees in one precinct in one State were put on the pay roll in order to go out and do political work just before election—a primary election, if you please—and were fired the next day after the primary.

We talk about protecting the electorate, and about invading the rights of the States. What chance has the individual citizen, the man who holds no political job and wants none, and seeks only to have his party do that which is best for his country. What chance has he in a convention or a primary in which tactics such as have been described are employed? As Professor Beard states in the article which I put into the RECORD, he is elbowed aside by the job holders, and the job holders run the election.

We hear much about a great interest in the rights of the people. I am thinking about the people, those who want only decent and honest government in this country. There are millions and millions of them. If my party does not take a stand against such methods and do everything it can to prevent them I am fearful that my party may find that millions of citizens do not approve of tactics which would defeat only a gesture against such things. That is all the bill is. It is only a gesture.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator condemn those who, without any coercion, voluntarily desire to take a part in politics?

Mr. HATCH. I would draw the line if it could be drawn; but I defy the Senator from Indiana, or anybody else, to draw that line. As a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States said in an opinion put into the RECORD by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]—the majority opinion, not the minority opinion—the power to solicit contributions carries with it the threat of compelling contributions.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is not striking at that threat.

Mr. HATCH. I am not striking at it in this bill; but I hope to strike at it some day in the not-too-distant future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark, Mo.	Hayden	Miller
Andrews	Connally	Herring	Minton
Austin	Danaher	Hill	Murray
Bailey	Davis	Holman	Neely
Bankhead	Donahey	Holt	Norris

Thomas, Idaho	Truman	Walsh
Thomas, Okla.	Vandenberg

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Under the agreement heretofore entered into by the Senate to vote at 2 o'clock, the Chair would like to state the parliamentary situation. The question before the Senate is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], as modified, to the committee amendment. The amendment having been twice modified, without objection, the Chair will have the clerk restate the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. I inquire if the Senate has heretofore ordered the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have heretofore been ordered. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 4, line 21, after the word "employee", it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the sentence and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

(2) And no person who is a stockholder, having an interest worth over $25,000, or officer of a corporation benefiting in any manner whatsoever (a) by any tariff, excise tax, or quota limiting imports into the United States, imposed by the United States; (b) by a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other governmental agency; (c) by a contract with the United States, or any of its agencies or with any State, municipality, or other governmental subdivision which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency; (3) and no person who is a stockholder having an interest worth over $25,000 or officer of a corporation which has pending an application for refund of Federal income taxes, or a claim against the United States before either the Court of Claims or the Congress; and (4) no person who is employed as a lobbyist or legislative representative or whose principal business is that of appearing before the executive or legislative departments of the United States, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. No such person shall solicit or receive or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever. Any person violating any provision of this section relating to persons other than officers and employees of a State or local agency shall be subject to the penalties provided in section 8 of said act of August 2, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are detained on important public business.

I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Utah would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am advised that if present he would vote as I am about to do. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 53, as follows:

So Mr. BROWN's amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the Senator from Georgia has risen for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say that I hope to obtain unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to state to the Senator from Georgia and to other Senators that I understand there are not many more amendments to the pending bill, and I hope we may proceed with it and dispose of it today. I had thought of asking unanimous consent for a vote on the bill and all amendments to it at an hour not later than 6 o'clock this afternoon. I understand that if such an arrangement can be entered into, the Senator from Georgia will be agreeable to it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It will be perfectly agreeable to me if such a unanimous-consent agreement can be obtained. My appraisal of the situation has led me to think that it probably cannot be obtained.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no harm in attempting to obtain it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not at all. I am very glad to have the effort made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 6 o'clock p. m. today the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, on the pending bill and all amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have pending on the Vice President's desk an amendment. On former occasions I have sat silently by and let unanimous-consent agreements be made, and at the last moment I have found myself unable to secure time even to explain my amendments. So unless I can have an agreement that my amendment will come up when reasonable time can be afforded for its discussion, I shall be forced to object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator from Oklahoma realizes that I have no desire to cut him off, or any other Senator. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that the Senator's amendment shall be offered first, and that he shall be allowed to discuss it; but that is not a matter over which I have control. I will say to the Senator, however, that I will cooperate with him to the fullest extent of my ability to assure him time in which to discuss his amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from my viewpoint my amendment should be adopted without debate and without discussion; but oftentimes amendments which seem to me to have that status are the ones which provoke the most discussion. If the author of the bill will accept the amendment, there will be no occasion for discussing it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what the amendment is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If I may have just a moment, I will explain what the amendment is.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The original Hatch Act provides a code of procedure for Federal employees. It exempts the President, Members of the Congress, and certain officials who have so-called policymaking powers. The original act did not refer to the District of Columbia. This bill places District of Columbia officials under the law and makes an exception of the Commissioners.

Mr. President, there is another official of the District government who is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I refer to the official known as the recorder of deeds. For a good many years, whatever political party has been in power has conceded this position to the colored race; and, as a result of that policy, some member of that race has held the office during many past years.

The occupant of the office is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The official holding the office is regarded by the colored people as their liaison or contact man with the National Government. He assumes to go out and speak to the colored people, to tell them what is being done, and to advise them as to what he thinks should be done. If this position is placed under the ban of this law, that official, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, will be denied any further activity along that line. So my amendment proposes to exempt the position of recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, I have no authority to accept an amendment. I am not familiar with the duties of this particular office; but, as the Senator has explained them, so far as I am personally concerned I should have no objection to the amendment being adopted, taking it to conference if there should be a conference, and endeavoring in good faith to work out something along the lines of the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at this time I will call up the amendment, so that it may be stated; and in support of the amendment I desire to have printed, immediately following the amendment, a letter from the present recorder of deeds, Dr. William J. Thompkins, of Kansas City.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, line 24, after the word "commissioners" and before the word "of", it is proposed to insert the words "and the recorder of deeds."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to state that the amendment is offered jointly by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma has asked unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a letter referring to the amendment. Without objection that may be done.

The letter is as follows:

RECORDER OF DEEDS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 4, 1940.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senator from Oklahoma,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to call your attention to S. 3046, an amendment to the Hatch Act to prevent pernicious political activities, designed to include in the provisions of the act all employees of the District of Columbia except the District Commissioners.

The amendment to the act would likewise extend the provisions of the Hatch Act to State employees, except certain elective officials appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the State legislature.

The fact that the amendment exempts from its provisions officials of States appointed by Governors and confirmed by legislatures and neglects to afford this same exemption for officials of the District of Columbia appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate makes the provision discriminatory.

It is my opinion that this is simply an oversight and should be corrected when S. 3046 comes up for consideration by the Senate.

In the District of Columbia Government the only officials appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, with the exception of judges, are the District Commissioners and the recorder of deeds. Section 13, on page 7, exempts the Commissioners but not the recorder of deeds. It is respectfully suggested that S. 3046 be amended as follows:

In section 13, page 7, line 24, after the word "Commissioners", insert the following, "and the recorder of deeds."

I should appreciate your letting me have your opinion on this amendment and whatever support you may give it.

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM J. THOMPKINS,
Recorder of Deeds, District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. I have yielded to the Senator from Kentucky, who, I understand, has submitted a proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I have.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Reserving the right to object, I am not sure the Senator from Kentucky is well advised when he says there are only a few amendments remaining to be disposed of. I will say to the Senator that there are several important amendments yet to be offered to the bill, and we could not possibly dispose of them this afternoon. For that reason I should have to object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia further yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that at an hour not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote without further debate on the Hatch bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to state that I have a very important amendment to the bill which will require at least 2 hours of discussion; and unless I can be assured that my amendment will have at least 2 hours of discussion I shall have to object to the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I think from every standpoint it will be desirable to conclude this bill before we take up other bills, if such action will not unduly delay the bill in which the Senator from Georgia is interested. In conferring with him, I understood that if he could be assured that the pending legislation could be concluded even tomorrow, he would not object to withholding his motion for that purpose. I am willing to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow, if the Senate is willing, of course, in order to give ample time for debate. That will give 6 hours for debate tomorrow.

While I realize that no one can guarantee that any Senator may speak for 2 hours unless he gets the floor, in which event he may speak all day, I will cooperate with the Senator from Colorado to get as much time as possible for him on his amendment. I do not know what it is, but I am sure it will be adequately discussed if we can enter into this arrangement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's willingness to cooperate; but I shall have to have more assurance than that, because I have a very important amendment. I myself do not wish to take 2 hours in its discussion; but I feel that it is of such great and grave importance that 2 hours will be almost too short a time in which to discuss it properly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know any further guarantee that I can give the Senator, except that by unanimous-consent agreement the Senator from Colorado might be recognized. Of course, if we enter into this agreement, we shall have all the remainder of today and until 5 o'clock tomorrow to discuss his amendment. I do not know what other amendments there are that will require any considerable debate. I have no desire to shut off amendments; but I do think from every standpoint it will be better, if we can do so, to dispose of the pending measure before taking up the other bill, if thereby no unreasonable delay will be incurred.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, of course, it is most unusual to defer the consideration of appropriation bills when the committee is prepared to proceed with them. They are given priority under the rules; but if there is no objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky from any other source I shall not object, and I shall be willing to defer consideration of the appropriation bill until after the pending business shall have been concluded.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me the request of the majority leader is a reasonable one. It seems that from now until 5 o'clock tomorrow will be sufficient time for debate. No Senator, I think, is more interested than I am in farm legislation.

I believe it would be better to conclude the consideration of the pending bill. We passed the Hatch Act last year and covered some of the Federal employees. This is an effort to cover the others. It is in line with the President's request in his message, in which he approved the former Hatch Act. I hope the request of the Senator may be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there is on the table a deficiency appropriation bill, which I have not sought to call up because of the debate on the pending bill and because there might be some misunderstanding of the reason for calling it up. But there are emergency matters in the deficiency bill, and I am wondering whether it is possible to make some provision for calling up that bill. It involves salaries and other matters of an emergency nature. It is not a bill which will take any great length of time, and if a definite limit is fixed on time for debate which is entirely consumed by the debate, I might be denied an opportunity which I had hoped might develop to take up this emergency deficiency bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Colorado on what date the salaries to which he refers will actually expire.

Mr. ADAMS. They begin to expire on the 15th of this month. There will be involved, perhaps, a conference and other legislative processes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt—and I have assured the Senator from Colorado privately that I have no doubt—that we can find an opportunity within the next day or so to take up the bill to which he refers. I do not think it will require any considerable time. Usually deficiency bills of this type do not involve much discussion. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator in any way I can.

Mr. ADAMS. Can the Senator arrange to take it up today?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not have any objection, if this agreement shall be entered into, to laying aside the pending bill later on in the day temporarily so as to take up the deficiency bill. I think it will take but a few minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object for a moment only, I hope some agreement will be made; but I do not want to have any slip, so that if a Senator desired to make a motion to recommit the Hatch bill, he would be precluded from making such a motion. I have no desire to do it——

Mr. BARKLEY. The request I am submitting would not preclude an opportunity to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to say further that we are waiting with a bill of a good deal of importance, involving the expiration of a law on June 12, and I had expected, just as soon as the agricultural appropriation bill had been gotten out of the way, to move to take up the reciprocal trade agreements bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am interested in that bill, as the Senator knows——

Mr. HARRISON. I know the Senator is.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I want to facilitate its consideration. In connection with my request I will say to the Senator from Colorado that, if it is entered into, I shall then be glad to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Colorado be permitted to offer his amendment, and that a vote be taken on his amendment at not later than 4:30 p. m. today if that is satisfactory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator make that part of his original request?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to modify my request to that extent, that is, that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow, the Senate proceed to vote on all amendments and motions with respect to the pending bill, and that the Senator from Colorado be permitted, upon the consummation of the agreement, to offer his amendment, and that at not later than 4:30 p. m. today the Senate proceed to vote on it and any amendment which may be offered to it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have steadfastly opposed granting special privileges to individual Senators. I think the request on behalf of the Senator from Colorado comes within that category. I think we should all have equal opportunity for discussion and presentation of matters, and for votes on such matters. For this reason I shall object to that phase of the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that if the request were granted it would not mean that other phases of the bill might not be discussed between now and 4:30 o'clock. It would merely mean that at 4:30 o'clock we would vote on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the objection I have particularly is to the effort to recognize one Senator over another. If the Senator from Colorado is willing to take his chances on getting the floor and presenting his matter, taking the usual course of debate, very well, but I shall object to any request at any time which involves the granting to any Senator of the right to have the floor, or the right to a vote on a particular amendment. That has been the procedure I have followed here for a great many years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator from Colorado be willing to forego any agreement with respect to his amendment until the other agreement is entered into, with the understanding that he can offer his amendment immediately, and that I will then, or he may, submit a unanimous-consent request that the amendment be voted on at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has stated very plainly that he will object to that sort of request.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; he objects to it as a part of the request I have made.

Mr. McNARY. I object to it as a part of a general request for the conduct of debate. If the Senator is able to get the floor, through recognition by the Chair, and seek to have specified a time at which he may desire to have a vote taken, I will have no objection to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. So far as my own time is concerned, I do not anticipate taking more than 10 or 15 or 20 minutes, but I rather expect the amendment will provoke considerable debate in the Senate, and I think it should. I think it is of such importance that a reasonable time should be given to it. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to make a motion now, or to ask now that my amendment be placed before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have the floor. I have tried to be as courteous as possible in connection with all the various requests, but I yielded and one amendment has already been considered, and since the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will undoubtedly take considerable time, I could not permit it to be offered in my time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there is no amendment to the committee amendment now pending. We have just voted on an amendment to the amendment, and no other amendment has been offered, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, but I mean that there are not now pending any amendments to the amendment. We have just voted on the last one offered, one offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Without including it in my agreement, I express the hope that the Chair will recognize the Senator from Colorado to offer his amendment, if the agreement which I have proposed shall be entered into. I am sure that would assure the Senator the opportunity he seeks. I do not like to ask the Chair to indicate whom he would recognize, but under the circumstances I think it might be justified. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that if I have any influence with the Chair, I will exercise it to see that he is recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will not the Senator from Kentucky again state his request?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote on all amendments and all motions pertaining to the bill now pending, without further debate, and upon the pending bill.

Mr. McNARY. That contemplates a vote on the final passage of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Under the rule, that would require the calling of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that that requirement be waived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the requirement of the calling of a quorum be waived. Is there objection?

Mr. MALONEY. I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order that I may make further effort to have an agreement reached, I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the view to making a request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Andrews	Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Austin	Ellender	La Follette	Russell
Bailey	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Bankhead	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Gerry	Lucas	Sheppard
Barkley	Gibson	McCarran	Shipstead
Bilbo	Gillette	McKellar	Smith
Brown	Glass	McNary	Stewart
Bulow	Green	Maloney	Taft
Burke	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Byrd	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Harrison	Murray	Townsend
Caraway	Hatch	Neely	Truman
Chandler	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Chavez	Herring	Nye	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Hill	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holman	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Holt	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Hughes	Pittman	White

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has made a unanimous-consent request. Will the Senator please state it once more?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order that the Senate may understand the request which I have made, I shall repeat it.

I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote on all amendments and motions with respect to the pending bill, and on the final passage of the bill itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, just a word as to the procedure that is to be followed. If unanimous consent is obtained, of course the bill before us will remain the unfinished business until 5 o'clock tomorrow, unless displaced by a motion or by a unanimous-consent agreement to take up another bill for consideration. I wish to propound a question to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. Is it his intention, if the unanimous-consent request is agreed to, to move to displace the pending bill and to take up for consideration the agricultural-appropriation measure?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the unanimous-consent request is agreed to I should be inclined to defer making the request for consideration of the appropriation bill until after the period specified in the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McNARY. It would not, then, be the desire of the Senator from Georgia to have his measure considered until after 5 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would not be my purpose to attempt to have my measure taken up until after 5 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in connection with unanimous-consent agreements fixing a time limit for discussion, I have always been disturbed by one thing, which is that when the final hour is reached amendments may be submitted without a chance to explain the amendments or a chance to ask what they may be. That has happened once or twice. Is it possible for the Senator from Kentucky to protect the situation so that we may have an explanation of amendments which may be submitted at 5 o'clock tomorrow? Otherwise Senators would not have a chance even to ask what the amendments were.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that situation, Mr. President, but I will say to the Senator that it is hardly fair to bar the introduction of amendments at 5 o'clock. I do not feel I should make such a request. But that situation could be facilitated if Members of the Senate would, before that hour, offer the amendments they contemplate offering so they might be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Would it be possible to make some arrangement with respect to amendments offered close to the expiration of the time limit so that 5 minutes or 10 minutes would be allowed for explanation of the amendments? I do not mean to make that proposal in order to cause delay, but merely in order that the Senate may have an understanding of the amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it is advisable to include such a provision as part of my unanimous-consent request now, but if the agreement is entered into I shall attempt to work out some plan by which amendments offered at 5 o'clock tomorrow may be explained.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall not object at this time, but in the future I shall consistently object to fixing a time limit for debate unless some such provision is made, because an unfair situation may develop.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will try to work out something by tomorrow, if possible, if the unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I shall object to the request for unanimous consent in its present form or in any other form. I intend to see this thing debated as it ought to be. I consider the proposed legislation to be most objectionable and in some of its aspects, without intending to reflect upon anybody, to be vicious. So I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8202, the general appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the Senator why he does not move that the pending business be laid aside? I do not want to find myself in the position after a while, when I know there is a very slim majority for the trade-agreements measure, to be obliged to move that the measure be considered and have a contest on the matter. I would rather see the contest come on the agricultural appropriation bill. So I should like to have the Senator from Georgia make the motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. The statement of the Senator from Mississippi is most commendably frank. Of course, the Senator has the right to force me to make a motion. I followed the custom of the Senate in asking unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside and that the Senate consider the other measure.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall have to object, though, not because I love the farmers less.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator from Mississippi object?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I move that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8202.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that under the rules of the Senate the only motion that is in order now is a motion to proceed to consider the agricultural appropriation bill. A motion temporarily to lay aside a pending bill for the consideration of another bill is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct. The Chair was about to make that announcement.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is that the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8202.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, that motion is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President I desire to detain the Senate for only a few moments not for the purpose of opposing the motion of the Senator from Georgia who has a matter which he desires to bring before the Senate which is of transcendent importance, a measure in which I am greatly interested and which I very much favor, and certainly not for the purpose of opposing anything that the Senator from Georgia may desire to do about this matter, although I intend to vote against his motion. He has been a supporter of the Hatch bill at every stage of the proceedings for the last week, during this filibuster, and he has shown in the matter of trying to reach an agreement a most generous and commendable spirit toward the Hatch bill.

I desire to detain the Senator for merely a few moments to make a few observations which I did not desire to make prior to this time for the reason that I did not wish to help out in the effort to delay the consideration of the Hatch bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I inquire of the Senator why he is talking about a filibuster? I have been present during the discussion of the measure during the past week, and I failed to see any filibuster.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator was not present Saturday afternoon, perhaps.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator does not consider the fact that it was necessary to hold a session on Saturday as evidence that there is something in the nature of a filibuster?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Washington may conclude that there has been no filibuster. My opinion, based upon long observation in such matters, is that there has been a filibuster, and that filibuster is still in progress so far as the Hatch bill is concerned.

Mr. President, during the course of this debate I have been very much intrigued by the argument which has been presented here in behalf of States rights—an argument presented by some Senators and from some quarters outside of the Senate, by men who participated in the N. R. A.—to the effect that there is no difference between interstate and intrastate commerce in all of the other steps over a period of years, particularly in the last 7 years, tending to break down every vestige of States rights.

And so it is only at this hour, when a measure is brought in here for the purpose of applying to the disposition of Federal funds in States precisely the same rule which we have already by legal enactment applied to the disposition of Federal funds by the Federal Government itself, that the cry of States' rights is once more raised and raised for the purpose of defeating this reform.

Mr. President, I have been particularly interested, almost moved to tears, by the piteous eloquence of those who have insisted upon the inalienable right of charwomen to be mulcted of 2 percent of their meager pay, or who have insisted on the right of even the humblest employee paid out of Federal funds by a State machine to contribute 1 percent, or 1½ percent, or 2 percent, or some other percent, voluntarily to a fund to maintain the State machine. When I have listened to this piteous eloquence, Mr. President, I have been very much reminded of a story which I once heard told, a personal experience, by former Gov. John Lind, of Minnesota, who, in the unhappy days of the Huerta regime in Mexico—when the Huerta regime had not been recognized by the American Government—was sent to Mexico as the personal representative of President Wilson. Governor Lind said that one morning he came out of the American legation and looked down the road and saw about the sorriest looking lot of scarecrows he had ever seen in his life trudging down the street, all of them barefooted, all of them ragged, some of them bloodstained, one a one-legged man, each man in the file with a rope around his neck, extending back to the man behind him, tied to his neck, and extending on down the file, all roped together. Alongside was riding a troop of Mexican cavalry, with their lances jabbing these men, and with a few Mexicans walking alongside, with blacksnake whips cracking every once in a while at these men trudging down the road. Governor Lind turned to Nelson O'Shaughnessy, who was American chargé d'affaires, and said, "What in the name of heaven is this?" O'Shaughnessy said, "Why, they are volunteers for Huerta's army." [Laughter.]

And so I say that charwomen who are to be mulcted of a portion of their meager pay and the poor devil earning a small salary, whose check the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] produced here on the floor of the Senate the other day, who was compelled to contribute $2.02 every month, are pictured here as volunteers, and it is said that it is an invasion of their inalienable right to prohibit anybody to make them pay that 2 percent or 1½ percent or 3 percent.

Oh, but it is said that they do it voluntarily. They all just happen accidentally to hit on the sum of 2 percent, or 1 percent, or 1½ percent as the contribution that they desire to make to the fund.

In one of his debates with Douglas, Abraham Lincoln said that there might have been no prearrangement about the Dred Scott Decision, as Douglas was contending, but that if a man were going through a great forest and saw in one part of the forest a man by the name of James, in another part of the forest a man by the name of Roger, in another part of the forest a man by the name of Franklin, and in another part of the forest a man by the name of Stephen, working apparently separately and entirely unconnected with each other, hewing out timbers for a house, and when the timbers were all assembled it was found that the timbers hewn in various parts of the forest fitted perfectly and formed a perfect structure, reasonable people would conclude that James, Roger, Franklin, and Stephen had all been acting in pursuance of some prearranged program.

So when "volunteers" all happen to send in 2 percent, 1½ percent, or 1 percent, or 3 percent, as the case may be, of their normal salaries, reasonable persons will conclude that somebody told them that that was about the proper ante, and they were afraid that if they did not send it in they would lose their jobs.

Mr. President, I submit that there is nothing whatever in this legislation which infringes upon the right of any State whatever. Under the proposed law every State government—unless the State itself has had enough sense and self-respect to pass legislation to prohibit such practices—will still have the right to assess the guards in the penitentiary 1½ or 2 percent. Several years ago I stated in a public address in the capitol of my home State on the night before the primary that so many guards and penitentiary officials had been sent home for political purposes that if there were a prison uprising on election day the whole city would be at the mercy of the convicts.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that it was stated on the floor of the Senate on Saturday that the bill does not prohibit contributions.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is my understanding.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator was discussing contributions. I thought perhaps his conclusion was that the bill would prohibit contributions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The bill does prohibit any official within the classes named from soliciting contributions.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not prohibit direct contributions.

Mr. STEWART. Then it would not reach the point discussed by the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator interrupted me. I was about to speak of the rights of the States. I say that the right of any State administration to assess charwomen in the State eleemosynary institutions, or guards in the penitentiary, will not be interfered with by this legislation in any particular; and a Governor, if he so chooses, may call in the members of the State public-service commission, with their great power of almost life and death over the utilities of the State, and make them members of his inner political council; or he may make members of the State tax commission members of his inner council, and use them for political purposes. He may threaten members of the highway police. Those rights of the States are not interfered with at all. All the bill is designed to do, and all it does, is to say to certain State officials, "You shall not use funds supplied by the Federal Government for political purposes. So far as funds supplied by the Federal Government are concerned, you shall comply with the same rules that are laid down for the expenditure of Federal funds by the Federal Government itself."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator conceive of any actual or theoretical right on the part of any State or any State government, or any State officer, to siphon the money which the taxpayers have paid into the Treasury of the United States out of that Treasury into the pockets of those who desire to use those funds for political purposes?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I cannot conceive of any such right, Mr. President. In some activities of the Government the Federal Government supplies and expends through the States three times as much as the States themselves contribute to the particular activity or purpose. That is true of the Public Health Service. In other cases, such as the unemployment insurance service, 100 percent of all the administrative expenses is supplied by the Federal Government. How can it possibly be conceived to be an invasion of the rights of any State to say to the State officials, "When you spend Federal funds you shall be subjected to precisely the same requirements that Federal officials directly spending Federal funds are compelled to meet"?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator in a moment.

Until a couple of years ago the unemployment service in the various States was under, and directly administered by, the Federal Government itself. That service has now been transferred to the direction of the States, but the funds are supplied to the extent of 100 percent by the Federal Government. If that service were still under the direct administration of the Federal Government, it would be subject to the provisions of the Hatch Act passed last year. Why should State officials, using 100 percent of Federal money for the purpose of contacting poor devils who want jobs or who want unemployment insurance, be permitted to proceed in any different fashion, so far as using the money for political purposes is concerned, than the Federal officials who formerly manned the offices, under the terms of the original Hatch Act?

I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am sure that the purpose in the mind of the Senator from Missouri is the same as the purpose in my mind. I am as anxious as is any other Senator to see laws passed which will rectify and correct certain conditions which we all believe to exist in this country at times of election, and to purify politics, if I may again use that hackneyed phrase. I will go as far as the Senator from Missouri or anyone else will go in the passage of a law to prevent intimidation, coercion, and abuses of that character.

My belief about the bill is that when it provides, as it does in section 12, that—

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

That is an absolute invasion of States rights, in this particular: It is not confined, restricted, or limited to the election of Members of this body or of the House, but it prevents State officers from participating in the election of members of the school board in remote counties in my State of Tennessee. It prevents them from participating in the election of a mayor in the smallest municipality in the State of Tennessee. It prevents them from taking part in any political campaign. I do not believe that a class of people who are competent and qualified and able to hold such jobs as teaching school or performing other public duties should be taken out of the political arena, or that we should be deprived of the benefit of their advice, their ideas, and their suggestions.

I will go as far as any Member of this body will go in undertaking to correct such evils; but I think we are overdoing matters when we say that State officers may not engage in political activities in any sense. That is reaching far beyond the purpose most of us have in our minds.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. With great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee, let me say that the provisions which have been complained about as to prohibition of political activity on the part of the workers are inserted for the protection of the workers themselves, and not as any penalty against them. They are inserted so that when the Governor of a State says, "I am for John Jones for secretary of state," or "I am for Sam Brown for auditor," or "I am for somebody else for something else," or "I want to run for office myself, and you fellows get out and get busy," he will not be able to terrorize the fellows holding the small jobs by saying to them, "You get out and get busy, or you will lose your jobs."

I say that the whole purpose of the bill is not in any sense an invasion of State rights, but simply, so far as Federal funds and Federal funds alone are concerned, to apply to funds expended through the States the same rule that applies to funds expended directly by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, yesterday I picked up a newspaper and read an account of an official of a State, a man who among other activities had under his charge the State highway department, who had committed suicide. It seemed that in addition to his official duties he was the man who was required to receive contributions from State highway officials, highway employees, contractors, and others, and that at one time he had had in his possession as much as $700,000. When the Federal income-tax authorities came around and began to quiz him about his activities the man committed suicide. I say that if the Hatch Act, as proposed to be amended, had been in effect, that man would probably be alive today.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but he is talking on a very delicate subject. He has made the assertion that when the income-tax authorities investigated the man to whom he refers, who undoubtedly is the late F. Lynden Smith, of Illinois, he committed suicide. The Senator is so wrong in his premise in the first place, and in his conclusion in the second, that I think the Senator should be very careful in making a statement of that kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I certainly desire to do an injustive to no one. I merely repeated what has been carried in the public press of the United States. If that statement be incorrect, then I apologize.

This much is undoubtedly correct, and I take it the Senator from Illinois is in agreement with it:

This gentlemen—and he was a splendid gentleman—I, myself, was acquainted with him—had under his control, in a public capacity, the highway department and other public works.

Mr. LUCAS. That is true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He also was the treasurer or handler of the various campaign funds raised from employees, both State and Federal, and from contractors and various other persons; and he did commit suicide, unfortunately, which I very much regret.

That much is indubitably true, is it not?

Mr. LUCAS. No; the Senator is trying to explain a situation in another State which may or may not concern him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is merely an example which concerns the whole country, so far as the legislation we now have before us is concerned.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Missouri is touching upon a subject matter involving an individual who was reported in the newspapers as having committed suicide. But there are a number of angles the Senator does not touch upon at all in connection with the physical and mental breakdown of the individual who was my friend and who was my fraternity brother in college. I cannot permit the Senator to leave the impression in the Senate, and let it go to the United States at large, that because of the activities of tax investigators in connection with the funds Mr. Smith collected as 1936 campaign manager for Henry Horner—the greatest Governor Illinois ever produced—and as manager for the campaign of 1938, he committed suicide. I am informed that he received voluntary contributions from men on the pay roll and from men who voluntarily contributed thousands of dollars to see a man like Henry Horner reelected, but the inference that he took his life because of an income-tax investigation regarding this fund is entirely erroneous.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois that I had no intention——

Mr. LUCAS. That is the impression which was left.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I had no intention whatever of leaving such an inference, and if I left such an inference as that I am very glad to apologize, for I do not think it has ever been suggested from any quarter that this gentleman, himself, had profited as much as 1 penny from that business so far as his own income was concerned. But, as a matter of fact, he was the treasurer of that fund; that was a matter of public notoriety which everybody knew. The point I am making is that in his official capacity, if he had not been charged with that duty, I have no right to say that he would still be alive; but I mean that is a circumstance which points a lesson in connection with such a fund as that.

Now, I repeat what I said in the beginning, that there is nothing whatever in this bill that in any way invades legitimate States' rights.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, during the short time I have been in the Senate no piece of legislation which has come before it has been more earnestly and sincerely and genuinely debated than has the measure now pending. So when we hear the Senator from Missouri talking about filibusters we cannot be much impressed with his objection, if such it be, or with his slighting remarks, if such they were, about the opposition to this bill, for we all know the Senator from Missouri himself is not averse to taking advantage of a parliamentary situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree entirely with the Senator from Indiana; I have engaged in filibusters, and I probably will engage in more of them during the time that I am in the Senate—if I do not die. That is the reason I know one when I see one, and when I organize one or engage in one I do not beat about the bushes.

Mr. MINTON. And when I am engaging in one, I do not get up, like the Senator from Missouri, and wrap the mantle of holiness about me and claim that I am not filibustering. The Senator from Missouri may deny that this bill has been legitimately debated; but, of course, his confession could not be other than it was about filibusters, because the RECORD is full of his tactics. Only a few days ago the Senator from Missouri, for some reason sufficient unto himself, did not want to see the beer interests compelled to keep their advertising off the radio. I do not know why the Senator was interested particularly in that bill or why he wanted to defeat it and why he wanted to filibuster against it, but the Senator from Missouri had reason sufficient unto himself to be against the bill that would prevent the radio from invading homes and talking about that character-building beer. [Laughter.] So the Senator, in order to accomplish his purpose of delay, very promptly offered as an amendment to that bill the antilynching bill, which he knew would provoke and bring on a filibuster.

So I am not much impressed by the Senator's holier-than-thou attitude toward a filibuster. I am not much impressed, either, with the purity pleas of some people. All those who are for the Hatch bill are pure, and all of us who are against it are impure.

When this proposed legislation first came out of the committee the story was carried to the country by some of the newspapers that there were merely two or three "smelly" fellows here by the names of LUCAS, MINTON, and STEWART who were against this bill. Now we have had a week or more of conscientious, serious, earnest debate about the bill; on one of the most fundamental amendments offered to the bill the vote was 44 to 41, and some of the most distinguished men who have ever honored the Senate with their presence and membership voted with the 41. So, Mr. President, when I look about me and see Senators putting on this holier-than-thou act about being for the Hatch Act, I know they are for the Hatch Act because they have a fight in their States with the Governor or the road commissioner who might run against them. That is how holy they are. They want to use the Hatch Act to play the kind of politics they desire to play.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. With the indulgence of the Senator from Indiana, I am willing to make this statement before this body: The Hatch law was in existence at the time appointments under the Census Bureau were made in my State, and every appointee of the Census Bureau was made through the clearance of the State Democratic committee.

Mr. MINTON. So, Mr. President, whether or not one is holy in his position on this bill stems from whether or not he has a political fight of a different complexion in his own State.

We have seen that illustrated on all sides in this debate. So we who are making a determined opposition to this bill are not going to sit idly by and have Senators rise and shout in our faces about their holy attitude in politics. No; we know the kind of politics they want to play and the kind they hope to get out of this species of legislation.

Mr. President, the other day I picked up a newspaper that circulates in southern Indiana from Louisville, Ky.—the Courier Journal—and there I read a streamer across the top of the Courier Journal, 8 columns wide, carrying this legend: "Republicans in Indiana Believe the Passage of the Hatch Act Will Help Them." Yet Senators rise and talk about "purity in politics." Senators on the other side are playing smart politics, walking up and toeing the line and casting 20 votes, 21 votes, 23 votes for the Hatch bill like a bunch of rubber stamps. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I was wondering if the Senator from Indiana happened to note in yesterday's Sunday newspapers the report of a little meeting held in Chicago, wherein the Governor of South Dakota was reported to have condemned the principles involved in the Hatch Act as invading State rights? The particular Governor, as the newspaper stated, is reported to be a candidate for Vice President of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. I saw something about that. I say that Senators view the Hatch bill in the direction in which it helps them. So we have the spectacle here not of purity on the part of our friends over there but of practical politics, smart politics, Hatch Act politics. [Laughter.] They want to "Hatchet" the Democratic Party out of Washington. That is what they want to do with the Hatch Act. They do not want to purify politics. They are the direct descendants and heirs at law and next of kin to Warren Harding, Harry Dougherty, Forbes, Miller, Denby, and Albert B. Fall. They are not pure. [Laughter.]

I know whence this opposition comes. It comes from "pure politics" with emphasis on the word "pure." I should think the Senators over there should be commended, however, for their silence. Their votes speak volumes but they are "plenty smart" when it comes to getting up to say anything they are as silent as Cal Coolidge himself [laughter] who once reigned over the odorous empire of the Republican Party. They sit silently over there in order to benefit by the kind of politics that is being played with the Hatch bill.

So, Mr. President, we are going to try to debate this bill to its ultimate conclusion on its merits, and I hope we will not be diverted. I hope the leadership of the Senate will not try to divert us from legitimate debate upon the bill. I am willing to meet this bill eventually, and I am willing to "go to the mat" on it, because if we debate it a few hours longer I believe the people of the country will see that what we have been doing is fishing around for minnows while the sharks and the barracudas run wild in the pool.

I know that my good friend from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is wrapped up in this legislation. Bless his heart. It is his own child. It is the child of his heart, and his whole life is wrapped up in it. I want to say to my friend from New Mexico that he has worked long and hard on this kind of legislation. He has given a great deal of intelligent consideration to the question of impure politics. I commend him for all his efforts; and I say in all sincerity that there is not a cleaner, finer, more conscientious man in public life today than the senior Senator from New Mexico. I just think he is cockeyed; that is all. [Laughter.]

The Senator from New Mexico is just off on the wrong trail. He reminds me of an old coon dog we used to have down in southern Indiana. We boys had a good coon dog. He was a good treeing dog. He would run to cover any animal he got scent of that had fur on its back. He was a marvelous treeing hound. He would run a coon or a 'possum or a skunk to the tree every time. Now, do not tell me that skunks do not go up trees. They do not; but we always called running them to the ground "treeing" them, just the same. So this hound was a good treer. If he got on the trail, he would run down any of these animals; but if that darned dog went out at night across a cornfield and sniffed a field mouse, he would hunt field mice all night.

That is what my friend from New Mexico has been doing. He has been hunting for field mice. He is all right; he means well; and once on the right track, he will go to his objective as unerringly as the martin to its gourd; but he is on the wrong track. He is shooting at the two-bit fellows out on the highway with a sickle in their hands cutting the weeds, and letting Joe Pew and the Du Ponts and the Annenbergs and the Ernest Weirs and all of the big-boodle boys get away. So I say that what we ought to be doing is to be directing our attention first and primarily to the important thing. Do not let the Senator from New Mexico come here and say, "Ah! We will get these little fellows out there with the sickle, and then we will come around and get Joe Pew and Moe Annenberg and Ernest Weir." You will not get those gents if you do not tie them in with the little fellows. You will have to make that combination if you want to get the big boys; and, for my part, I want to get the big boys.

Mr. President, I am proud of the Democratic organization in my State. I know the men and women who do the work day and night in my State, and what is the work that they do? What does a precinct committeeman have to do? At night—not when he is working out on the highway, but when he comes home at night—he goes through his precinct ringing doorbells and calling people to the door, and asking them, "How are you going to vote this year? What do you think about the program of my party this year? Are you going to support the party ticket?"—polling his precinct, finding out what his people are thinking, carrying the message to headquarters, canvassing the situation, and then going back and trying to talk to John Doe and Richard Roe and Billy Jones and find out why they are off the party, if they are off, and what he can do to get them back on to the party ticket again. That is what he is doing; and then, when election day comes, he must see that his precinct is all registered, if it has a registration law, and he must know where his vote is, and he must get his vote out to the polls and into the ballot box in order that his party may be successful at the polls.

Is that pernicious? That is the work of the precinct committeeman; that is what these men are out doing; and, lo and behold, along comes this law and says, "You are engaged in pernicious political activity. You, who all your life have been a Democrat or a Republican, and took pride in the fact that you had fought the party battles for years and years, and when your party gets into power you have a little piddling job offered you out on the highway as a mower of weeds or a patrolman, and you go out and do your work for 10 hours a day—when you come in at night you cannot go down in the precinct and talk a little politics to your neighbors. You cannot go down there and work for the party that has given you bread and meat, if you please." Ah, he has worked his 8 or 9 hours out on the highway. He has done the things he is hired to do, but now you will not let him do the things he wants to do, on his own time, and in his own way. You want to make him an outlaw. You want to brand him as pernicious. You want to say he shall not do these things.

The Senator from New Mexico says his bill does not outlaw all political activity. No; he will let a man vote. He has not gone that far, but that is about all the man can do. If the window curtains were all pulled down, and the doors closed, and all the cracks closed up, I think he might be able to tell his wife that he thinks she ought to vote the Democratic or Republican ticket the next day, but if he goes further than that he will be engaged in a pernicious political activity.

So, Mr. President, I am not ashamed of these men and women in the political organization of Indiana. On the contrary, I am proud of them. A finer, cleaner, better set of men and women never walked in shoe leather in this country. I am here on the floor of the Senate today battling against this legislation which would seek to brand the people of Indiana who go out in a humble way, as free American citizens, and take part in politics, as doing something unworthy, and something to be penalized.

So, Mr. President, we are fighting this fight because we believe just as sincerely that we are fighting the fight of the little fellow, that we are fighting the fight of the American citizen, that we are fighting the fight of democracy, as anybody on the opposite side can believe that he is engaged in a fight for pure politics. I think it is pure politics. There is always a brand of politics mixed up in it. I am not ashamed of politics. I am proud of politics. I do not want to drive people out of politics. I want to invite them into politics. I want them to take part in politics. I do not want to coerce them. I do not want to threaten them. I do not want to oppress them, but I want to say to every man jack of them, "As long as you voluntarily want to work for the election of your friends to office, for the election of your party's candidates, or to take part in a local election involving your schools or your municipal affairs, if you want to do that voluntarily, without coercion, intimidation, or oppression, you have a God-given American right to do that sort of thing"; and Heaven help this country whenever the time comes that we shall outlaw that kind of activity.

Instead of branding these people as undesirable and pernicious, we should be encouraging more people to take part in politics, because, after all, it is politics by which we all live. I pause long enough for any Senator or any number of Senators who got here without the aid of politics to stand and be counted. There are quite a few of you here, and I do not see anybody standing up. You all got here because of politics. There is nothing unholy about politics as such. I am for clean politics, and I think all of you are for clean politics. I think every Senator here is for clean politics.

We play a little politics with legislation as we think it may help or hurt us. I am not finding fault with anybody about that, because I know you have all lived by politics so long that it will not do to try to wean you now. You are all politicians, or you would not be here.

So, Mr. President, let us have no more pointing of the finger of the holier-than-thou people. Let us have no more of the smugness that sometimes characterizes remarks on the floor of the Senate, directed at persons with whom we do not agree.

As I said in the beginning, I am satisfied that my friend from New Mexico is as honorable, as honest, and as sincere as any man ever could be; but I think he is mistaken; I think he is woefully mistaken. So, Mr. President, we are going to continue in good faith the opposition to this bill. I hope we can defeat it, and that we can direct the attention of the Senator from New Mexico away from the field mice, and get it back on the right trail.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise merely to return the compliment of the Senator from Indiana. Everything he has said as to my intentions and purposes I can say about him. I have never questioned the purpose of any Senator. I have never questioned the motive of any Senator. I have never assumed any holier-than-thou attitude in connection with this or any other proposed legislation. I have accorded to every Senator the right to make up his mind on every piece of legislation, and to vote the way he thinks is right, and best for his country. I have asked that that and that alone be the rule as to the particular bill now before us. Only last week I stood here and asked that we have a vote; that is all. I did not indicate how I thought any Senator should vote. I contended that those of use who believe in the principles of the pending bill, who believe that they are right, and who believe it is to the advantage and welfare of this country that this bill be enacted, should have the right to express our belief by our votes in the Senate of the United States. That is all I ask at this moment.

Mr. President, that brings me to the pending motion, and causes me to say what I regret very much to say, for, as the Senator from Missouri has said, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has supported faithfully the pending bill, and I think all other measures of this kind. He has been a valiant fighter in behalf of this character of legislation. I should like very much to say to him that I am glad to agree to his proposal that we take up the agricultural appropriation bill, not only because the Senator from Georgia is in charge of that bill, but also because it is a farm bill, because it provides the annual appropriation for agriculture; and I shall support the Senator from Georgia in his bill, and in all his committee amendments, I am quite sure. I have always done so.

I dislike to take any position or attitude which might be construed as being in opposition to the welfare of the agricultural interests of the country. Nevertheless, I cannot agree to the proposal of the Senator from Georgia, and I hope his motion will be voted down. It is true that we have had debate on the pending bill. Whether there has been a filibuster or not makes no difference at all. The whole subject has been debated pro and con. If anyone can think of a word that has not already been said on this bill and the various amendments, in the arguments which have been made, I shall be greatly surprised. We are already saying over and over again the things which have already been argued.

Because the bill has been debated, and because it should take but little time to finish its consideration, if we confine ourselves to legitimate argument and debate, I do not want the bill laid aside, and I believe we can take sufficient time to debate legitimately every amendment which has been offered and yet be through by 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, as the majority floor leader has suggested.

But even if we are not through by 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, I know full well that if we lay the bill aside and take up the agricultural appropriation bill, which may take several days, and then in turn take up the reciprocal trade agreements program, which may take weeks—and I intend to support that program also; both measures are very dear to me, and I probably shall participate in the debate on both measures—I know that if we lay aside the pending bill and drag out for weeks and weeks, even if it does come back a month or 6 weeks hence, it will be dead, it will be killed for this session, and we will not have a chance to cast the vote which the Senator from Indiana wants us to cast.

He wants to face the issue. So do we. Therefore why not face it now? Why not vote yea or nay, and pass the legislation if it is good, and kill it if it is bad? I ask nothing more than that.

Mr. President, I hope the motion of the Senator from Georgia will be defeated.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, after all, the question now presented to the Senate is, Shall we lay aside the pending bill and take up another one after we have devoted more than a week to the discussion of the bill, at a time when it looks as though we were about through with the discussion, and would reach a conclusion upon the bill and the amendments?

If we followed that kind of procedure in the Senate with regard to all pending legislation as to which there was a nearly equal division of sentiment on its merits, and gave way to appropriation bills, which everyone concedes are extremely important, which must be passed in some form in order that the Government may continue its activities—if we adopted that procedure generally, it would happen almost universally that any proposed legislation upon which Senators were nearly equally divided would fail, because we would lay aside one bill and take up another if we thought the other was of greater importance. The agricultural appropriation bill is of extreme importance, but I do not know of any reason why it has to be passed today, or this week, or next week. It would not go into effect until the 1st of July.

We have argued the pending bill for a week and should vote on it. Let me call attention to another thing, which has already been said by the Senator from New Mexico, that if the pending bill shall be laid aside and another one taken up, followed by another bill which the Senator mentioned, nearly as important as the agricultural appropriation bill, and followed by other appropriation bills which will be coming in, even if we take the pending bill up again, in all probability it will be weeks before that can occur if we lay it aside for all these important matters. That has already been stated, but let me call attention to the fact that this is probably the last session of this Congress. If this parliamentary condition had existed at the last session, it could have been said, and truthfully said, "Even though we do not get the bill through during this session, we can take it up at the next session just where we leave off." But if the bill fails of passage at this session, all the work that has been done, and all the time that has been spent, will have been wasted, because the proposal will be dead; it will be the end of the Congress, and we will have to commence again at the very beginning.

Mr. President, everyone knows that all the appropriation bills must be enacted before the 30th of June, and there is no doubt that they will be, even though they remain in conference for a long time. But if we pass the pending bill now, undoubtedly after the House acts on it it will be sent to conference, and there will very likely be a bitter contest in conference, and probably much more time spent by the conferees than has been spent by the Senate in discussing the bill. So I say to the friends of the bill that if we agree to the motion made by the Senator from Georgia there is danger that it will mean the death of this particular kind of legislation at this session of Congress.

I do not blame Senators who are opposed to the proposed legislation for voting for the motion. If I were opposed to it, I would vote for it. It is a legitimate method of parliamentary procedure. I challenge no man's motives. I assume all men have motives which to them, whether they are for or against a particular bill, are sufficient to satisfy their own consciences; but, after all, when we follow legislation to the end, a majority in each House must favor particular legislation or it cannot become the law.

I do not see any question of bad motives here. I do not see any question involving a holier-than-thou attitude. I do not know of any criticism made against anyone who is opposed to the proposed legislation. I would not criticize anyone for voting in favor of amendments which he thought would kill the bill. That is a legitimate method of legislating. It is one pursued here and pursued in every legislative assembly of which I know anything.

Mr. President, it seems to me no reason exists for charging bad faith to anyone. An honest disagreement exists. I concede that ground for honest disagreement exists. The weight of the argument is not all on one side. But as a friend of the bill, as one who wants to see it enacted into law, I challenge anyone to question my motives in taking the attitude I have, since I believe in the need for the passage of the measure, or to challenge the motives of anyone else who takes the same attitude.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. No one in the Senate or out of the Senate would presume to challenge the motives of the Senator from Nebraska, but in this debate those of us who are opposed to the pending measure have been classified as spoilsmen, in contrast with those who are in favor of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I distinctly wish to disavow any such argument by anyone.

Mr. GLASS. Well, it has been made.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot help that, of course. I think the same argument has been made in the present debate with respect to those who take a different attitude. In view of the nature of the debate which has taken place, and the character of the pending legislation before us, I do not believe it worthy of any Senator to make such a charge either way.

Mr. President, I favor the bill which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has moved to consider. I realize how earnestly, how faithfully, the Senator from Georgia has worked to get the bill in its present shape. I have tried to follow his work in the committee. I commend him for what he has done. So far as I know, I favor every one of the amendments which have been agreed to by the committee, with perhaps one exception. I would not want that bill killed under any circumstances. I think it involves some appropriations which are vital to the continued happiness and prosperity of the country. It contains some appropriations which probably will be contested. I expect to be one of those Senators who, in a humble way, will stand behind the Senator from Georgia, and help him in his work and in his endeavor to get the bill before the Senate.

So, Mr. President, I do not want it understood that my vote against taking up that bill now means that I am opposed to it. I am as much in favor of it as is the Senator from Georgia. But, in my opinion, we shall get nowhere if we start in with legislation, work halfway through it, or two-thirds of the way through it, and then stop and take up something else. It seems to me that we are not justified in taking such action unless we are opposed to the legislation under consideration. Of course, in that event, we would be justified in voting to kill the legislation at any point or stage.

Mr. President, I wanted to make that statement, and have the Senator from Georgia understand, and also the country understand, as well as the Senate in general, that neither directly nor indirectly can it be said of those who are going to vote against the motion of the Senator from Georgia that they are opposed to the legislation proposed, but, under all the circumstances, they think it is the wise thing and the right thing to keep on with the pending legislation until we finish it, whether the result goes against us or in our favor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make a comment in a brief way concerning the pending motion. Before doing so I ask unanimous consent to present an amendment which I ask to have published in the RECORD, and printed and lie on the table awaiting its proper presentation. The purpose of the amendment is to limit the contributions by corporations when Federal officials are to be elected, including the President of the United States, to $1,000. I shall discuss that matter at the appropriate time.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that the amendment be read at the desk. Therefore, I ask that the amendment be now read, because I believe it to be of great importance. Of course, I do not ask for action on the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following section:

SEC. —.

(a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate or expenditures by any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal. The President of the United States for the purpose of this act is declared to be an elective officer.

(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(c) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person or corporation directly or indirectly in excess of $1,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

(d) Any person or the officers of any corporation who directly or indirectly contributes more than $1,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election in violation of the provisions of this section is guilty of pernicious political activity, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than 5 years. It shall be the duty of the court to increase the fine in accordance with the amount contributed and with defendant's ability to pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will be printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment to his amendment to limit the price of Democratic dinners to $2.50?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to know if the Senator has been paying any more than that. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, recurring to the pending motion, which is the motion of the Senator from Georgia, it seems to me we should not permit partisanship—and I do not mean to use that word to signify political partisanship, but I mean as partisans with respect to the Hatch measure, to actuate us in deciding what action we shall take. We should view this problem from the standpoint of good procedure, looking to the advancement of probably the most important bill now pending in Congress, and we should vote on this motion regardless of our position in opposition to or in favor of the Hatch bill.

I have never made any denial of engaging in filibustering when I thought it was necessary and the situation called for it. I do not, however, have any desire to filibuster with respect to the Hatch bill. If I had I would say so, because I have often admitted on this floor that I was participating in a filibuster, just as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has done, and I commend him for his courage and candor. But the question of filibustering and the effect of a filibuster on the Hatch bill should not control action on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. President, there are good reasons, which should appeal to our judgment, why the agricultural appropriation bill should now be considered and speeded on its way. We all know that there are probably more changes in the pending agricultural bill than have ever been presented in an appropriation bill in the history of the Government. We have all read in the newspapers about the countless number of changes made by the House with respect to the various appropriation items. The Senate committee has been diligently at work, led and headed by the junior Senator from Georgia, who is always faithful to the cause of agriculture, and at the same time is fair to the taxpayers and to the Members of the Senate. The committee has been diligently engaged in the consideration of this long, tedious bill.

I do not think it would take any great time, considering the length of the bill and its importance, for it to be acted on by the Senate. But, Mr. President, we must not lose sight of the fact that after it is passed by the Senate, the real struggle will begin. When the Senate conferees are appointed they will meet a group of determined conferees from the body at the other side of the Capitol, who will enter the conference with the determination to uphold the action of the House on each of these numerous items. I have been in conference committees of that sort. I was a member of the conference committee on the agricultural appropriation bill at the last session of the Congress, and I know the struggle that took place there. I know the discussions and arguments that were necessary.

Then, if perchance we reach an agreement, the bill must go back to the House for debate, and on numerous items there must be a separate vote in the House. So much time will be required before the bill can be sent to the White House. Let me say to the friends of the farmer that in my judgment it is important to get this bill to the White House before some other appropriation bills reach there. Those who are really interested in proper and adequate appropriations for the cause of agriculture should take that thought home.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is especially true insofar as the parity-payment provision of the bill is concerned, which provision was inserted by the Senate committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; in my judgment that is the most important provision in the entire bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me say this to the advocates of the Hatch bill: I am against it, as Senators know. Without having said so, practically all Senators know why I am against it. Principles are involved with regard to which Senators know my views. I have taken no time on the floor. I had not intended to participate in any deliberate filibuster. I think a full discussion of so important a subject is certainly appropriate. Except for possibly Saturday afternoon—and I am not entirely familiar with that situation—every Member of the Senate knows that the debate during the past week was on a high plane, and was devoted to a discussion of principles and issues. Saturday afternoon, in the absence of many Members, there were reasons why action should not have been taken; and it was thought by many that the determination of the majority leader to force an unusual Saturday session was due to undue pressure and coercion to expedite and hurry the bill. I do not know whether or not that is true. I do not charge it. However, I am stating some of the motives which may have prompted some speeches on Saturday afternoon which otherwise might not have been made.

These controversies nearly always have two sides to them, as practical politicians and experienced businessmen know. Why should not the advocates of the Hatch bill—and I include, I am sorry, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]—agree to the present consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill?

The Senator from New Mexico knows that I love him. If there is any one cause of reluctance on my part to oppose the pending bill, it is my great respect and affection for CARL HATCH. He knows I love him. We have been associated together in many matters. However, I submit to him and to the majority leader, and to other Senators who will vote on the pending motion, that the agricultural appropriation bill is of greater general interest and importance to the people of the country than a corrupt-practices bill, however important it may be to those who are interested in it.

Further, I wish to say that when the agricultural appropriation bill shall have been disposed of—which may be within a very few days—and started on its way across the Capitol, the Senator from New Mexico, having the full support of the majority leader, may obtain recognition, or the majority leader in his own right may make a motion to resume consideration of the Hatch bill. Evidently there is a majority of the Senate to force such a motion. So what is the common sense in shying away and being afraid that if agriculture is given prior consideration the Hatch bill, if displaced at all, will go to its grave?

That attitude can be the result of but one line of reasoning, and that is that the leaders in support of the Hatch bill are afraid of a little delay. It cannot be anything else. In every vote we have had thus far, the supporters of the Hatch bill have had a majority. They have the leadership. They have the right-of-way. They may meet, adjourn, move to take up, and do everything that is necessary to obtain action upon the Hatch bill after the agricultural appropriation bill shall have been disposed of.

So I again appeal to the leaders to dispense for the present with their active partisanship on this particular subject, and let us get down to some legislative work in which the country is vitally interested and on which it is waiting with anxiety. Let us get down to the consideration of a measure in the interest and welfare of a great unorganized mass of voters and people in this country, more numerous—if numbers are important—than the road workers, the W. P. A. workers, and the bosses covered by the Hatch bill.

The farmers are not economically interested in the Hatch bill. The subject is a political one, as was stated by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. The Hatch bill may be brought up if a majority wants it brought up. If a majority does not want it brought up, it ought not to be brought up. No one will dispute that statement. The supporters of the bill have the power to bring it up just as soon as we pass the agricultural appropriation bill. No one knows how long the supposed and alleged filibuster on the Hatch bill will last. I do not know. I have seen filibusters run for 6 weeks. I can prove that statement by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. SMITH. The Senator can prove it by many others.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what Senators have in their blood on the subject of endurance. As I frankly stated, I myself have no desire to go into a filibuster on the measure, earnestly as I am opposed to it. I am not asking anyone not to conduct a filibuster. If one is conducted, frankly, I shall go along with it.

Suppose we have a filibuster, as it is charged we now have. I have not heard anyone deny the charge. I do not know what is meant by the word "filibuster." Some use it in an offensive sense—a pernicious sense. Others use it as an exercise of inalienable rights. I have heard that line of argument in connection with the Hatch bill.

As I say, I do not know how long the alleged filibuster will last. Evidently the necessary manpower is present, evidently the ability is present, and apparently the determination is present, to debate the subject until the people of the country understand the motive behind some of the support and the effect of the bill upon millions of people of the country.

That is the way the matter stands. If we hold up the agricultural appropriation bill indefinitely, we shall not accomplish anything except to endanger the agricultural appropriation bill. To be frank about it, in the event enough other appropriation bills are passed to endanger the debt limit, we shall endanger the agricultural appropriation bill.

Let us go on and finish this bill; and then, if it is desired again to take up the Hatch bill, its supporters have the power to do so, and they know it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The statement which the Senator has just made is exactly all we have asked. Let us go on and finish the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am referring to the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. HATCH. I am referring to the Hatch bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We may have an indefinite filibuster, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have told the Senator that the filibuster is not coming from me, and he knows it.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure the Senator will not engage in a filibuster; and from the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] a few moments ago, I judge that all that is desired is to have legitimate debate and then a vote on the bill. I am perfectly willing to have that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator has a majority—and he thinks he has, and I think he has—does not the Senator admit that as soon as we finish the agricultural appropriation bill a motion may be made to make the Hatch bill the unfinished business?

Mr. HATCH. I am not at all sure that that could happen.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why? Let the Senator be frank. I am trying to be frank. Let us be frank with each other.

Mr. HATCH. What I anticipate will happen is that a motion will be made to take up the reciprocal trade agreements measure as soon as the agricultural appropriations bill is finished, and that measure may require weeks and weeks of debate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think that is likely. A majority would be required to consider that measure.

Mr. HATCH. If a motion is made to take up the Hatch bill, we shall have another debatable motion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator gets into all those difficulties, he has not a sincere, genuine majority for his bill. He has a political vote which makes a majority.

Mr. HATCH. I am perfectly confident that we have debated the bill from every angle, and that Senators have made up their minds how they will vote on the amendments and on the bill. All I ask is that they have the opportunity to vote. I do not question the motives of any Senator, no matter how he may vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have heard the same argument for weeks and weeks on other measures. That is a legitimate statement. However, those who do not want a vote do not say, "Yes; let us vote." The Senator knows that. I think he will find that the opposition will not permit unanimous consent for a quick vote. That is the reason why I urge with earnestness that we should not make the Hatch bill paramount to all other legislative considerations. If the Senator insists upon going ahead with the Hatch bill, he will be subordinating the cause of agriculture to the corrupt-practices bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no intention of provoking or being provoked into an argument with the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not tried to provoke the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that. A while ago the Senator referred to the session on last Saturday——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not refer to it in any critical spirit. I wanted to hold such a session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I said was not in criticism; but I said that from what I had heard from other sources there was resentment, on the theory that the majority leader was trying to drive to a vote on the Hatch bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. I will say to the Senator frankly that the reason that up to now we have had very few Saturday sessions, though we have had one or two, has grown out of the fact that the Senate has had no business to transact. It has been the practice of the Senate from time immemorial that when it had business to justify a Saturday session such a session would be held, and I felt that to hold a session on Saturday might gain some time in the final vote on the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If I have differed at any time with the Senator about having Saturday sessions, it has been because we did not hold them.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be true, and I thank the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I favor Saturday sessions when we have unfinished business just as I favor sessions on every other working day.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree substantially with the statement made by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a while ago. It has been my understanding, and I have conferred freely and frankly with the Senator from Georgia about the agricultural appropriation bill, and have felt that that bill could be passed in about 2 days, and perhaps not that much time would be required.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Frankly, I do not think it would take that long.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill provides annual appropriations for the fiscal year 1941, which begins on July 1, 1940, aside from some items which may be made available before the 1st of July. In a morning newspaper I read that the Senator from Georgia had been quoted as saying—whether he was correctly quoted I do not know—that if the parity payments provided in the bill should be adopted finally as a part of the legislation the money would not be actually paid out until the fall of 1941.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that if the prices of farm commodities in the meantime advanced sufficiently there would be no requirement at all for the use of the parity funds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But there is a requirement for the commitment and the appropriation so as to have the money available, because compliance with next year's program is dependent upon that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, of course, there would be no parity payments unless the money were appropriated for that purpose.

In facilitating the passage of the bill I want to cooperate to the fullest extent of my ability with the Senator from Georgia, who has done yeoman work in the preparation of this bill and who is always sincere and active and frank in his handling of agricultural bills.

We have been in session 2 months and 10 days, and, in all probability, we will still be in session at least that much longer before there is a final adjournment of the present session of the Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would be ample time within which to call up the Hatch bill, would it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. The same suggestion would apply to the agricultural bill. The agricultural bill, if it shall be passed in 2 or 3 days, will go to conferees, and the conferees will have more than 2 months, in all likelihood, in which to adjust the differences between the House and the Senate. In view of that fact, I myself do not see how any damage or injury could come to the cause of agriculture by finishing the bill that is under consideration which, with legitimate debate—and I have never accused anybody in connection with it of indulging in anything but legitimate debate—could likewise be disposed of in 2 or 3 days. I believe that it could have been disposed of by tomorrow night if we had devoted ourselves today to it and voted on it when we finished the debate tomorrow night. But even if it took a day or two longer than that, it will not take substantially any longer, in my judgment, to finish that bill than it will to dispose entirely of the agricultural bill, which will go to conference, and there would be, as I said, about 2 months for the conferees to work on it. I myself do not see the urgency, so far as it affects agriculture, in undertaking to say that we have got to pass the agricultural bill within the next 2 or 3 days or within this week. I have no fear of the result, so far as the agricultural bill is concerned, whether it is passed this week or not, because we have a good deal of time yet before we finish the work of the session. In view of that, speaking only in my own individual capacity as a Senator, under the circumstances, I do not feel justified at this time in voting to supplant the pending legislation by adopting the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Is he interested in the passage of the parity-payment provision? I have seen a statement indicating that he was not.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know to what the Senator refers. I have always been for parity payments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the Senator has.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frankly, I have been disturbed as the Senator from Alabama and all other Senators know, over the possibility of having to pass a tax bill at this session or increasing the debt limit; and I am still disturbed. I do not want to have to vote to increase the debt limit, because I think whenever we have done it the country will immediately come to the conclusion that we are going to approach it again; that there may be one step after another increasing the debt limit. I do not want the Congress to have to do that if it is humanly possible to avoid it. There is no secrecy about my fears on that subject, and I have been hoping that we might work out economies in all the appropriations sufficient to justify parity payments without in any way endangering the ceiling of the debt limit or without making necessary the passage of a tax bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not going into that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going into it, either.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was merely anxious to find out whether the Senator was interested in bringing about the passage or reluctant to have passed provision for parity payments.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I have mentioned probably gave rise to the statement attributed to me that I was not in sympathy with parity payments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I merely read it in the newspapers. The Senator, doubtless, saw the item. It said he was doubtful about it passing.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator is referring to a statement of today, I said I thought finally it would pass here and that the House would agree to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not seen that statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frequently we are quoted as saying things we do not say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I realize that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am certainly interested and I have been interested from the very beginning of the agricultural adjustment program in parity payments to all farmers entitled to them, and I certainly hope to be able to support that program now.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay a vote on the pending motion, but I do wish to comment very briefly before the vote shall be taken.

There is certainly nothing unusual in making a motion to proceed to the consideration of any general appropriation bill at any stage of the proceedings on pending legislation. Such a motion is expressly provided for in the rules of the Senate, and during my service in this body I have never before seen objection expressed to laying aside any piece of general legislation, however important it might be, in order that the Senate might proceed to the consideration of a general appropriation bill. That rule does not apply only to appropriations for the activities of the Department of Agriculture, but I have seen measures of great importance, national in their scope, laid aside for the consideration of deficiency appropriation bills, for the consideration of naval supply bills, and for the consideration of War Department supply bills. I hope that this new order of objection to the consideration of a general appropriation bill is not the result of any of the heat and personal feeling which may have been engendered by the discussion of the legislation proposed by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, for myself, to use an expression now going the rounds, "I ain't mad with nobody" about the Hatch bill. I have been supporting the proposal of the Senator from New Mexico, but I certainly do not think that bill is any reason for breaking a custom that has obtained in the Senate at least for the 7 years I have been a Member of this body, of giving the general appropriation bills the right-of-way. I have done all in my power to protect the rights of the Senator from New Mexico in securing consideration of his bill. I asked unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending business, but objection was entered, a matter over which I had no control.

Mr. President, there is a substantial reason for giving priority to general appropriation bills. There are a number of items in the agricultural bill containing appropriations which are made immediately available. I refer specifically to the appropriation to supplement section 32 funds in connection with which the committee has suggested an appropriation of $85,000,000 and the appropriation to provide for the surplus-removal program, for the so-called stamp plan in various cities of the country, a program which is now under way all over the United States. Those funds are to be made immediately available by the bill.

It is a very complicated measure. It contains a large number of items. Last year the bill was in conference for several weeks. It reached the desk of the President of the United States for his signature only on the last day of the fiscal year, the 30th day of June. I felt that the bill should be brought up and considered just as all other appropriation bills have been considered during my service in this body, without regard to the interest that might be evinced in any of the legislation that is pending when the appropriation bill is brought in by the committee for the Senate to take action upon. There certainly can be no reason in this case for violating the intent of the rules of the Senate and the custom that has obtained here for so long by not proceeding with the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

We all hope we shall have an early adjournment; and, as one who in the normal course of events would be one of the conferees to deal with the other body on this matter, I do not wish to have Members of the Senate coming to me to find out why the conferees cannot agree, and have an adjournment of the present Congress held up when matters of great importance which the Senate has approved will be at difference with the other body.

It certainly is not my purpose to strike down and defeat the bill of the Senator from New Mexico. I have voted for each of the bills the Senator has brought in, and have stood with him here on the consideration of various amendments which have been offered to this body; but it has been the custom of the Senate, at least for the past 7 years to my certain knowledge, to give right-of-way to general appropriation bills. I see no reason why the pending legislation, which would be temporarily displaced by this motion, is of such great and paramount importance that we should set a new rule in the Senate, and overthrow all the precedents which heretofore have obtained in this body.

In accord with what I deem to be my duty to the farmers of the country, who are vitally interested in the agricultural bill, as well as the Committee on Appropriations, I have moved to consider this bill. I hope the Senate will adopt the motion.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I shall vote to take up the agricultural bill. I wish, however, to state that I shall give my efforts to have the Hatch bill considered at a later date.

I want to see this second edition of the Hatch bill passed. I have hoped that it could be amended along the line of the Miller amendment and along the line of the Adams amendment, because I felt that in its present form it has a tendency to stifle democratic processes. I supported the Brown amendment because I thought, and I still feel, that if the bill is good for the little fellow, it is good for the big fellow.

It is possible that in the delay that will follow some amendments of this kind may be worked out that will be acceptable to a sufficient number of Senators to amend the Hatch bill accordingly; but, whether or not such amendments are worked out, I shall help to bring up the Hatch bill at a later date and shall support it in passage, on the theory that if we cover part of the Federal employees we should extend the legislation to the others who are covered by this amendment to the original Hatch Act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I shall be very brief.

There are two groups—principally on this side of the Chamber—viewing the Hatch bill from different point of view, directly opposite points of view, as I see the situation. One group feels that the time has come to strengthen the existing Hatch Act by extending its provisions to State employees who benefit from Federal funds. They apparently feel that the same standards, so far as participating in elections is concerned, which are now applied to Federal employees, should apply to State employees who are paid from funds which the taxpayers of the country, regardless of party, contribute. Some of those who have taken that position feel that we are dealing with a primary, fundamental democratic problem in government—free elections, untrammeled elections, the right of those who do not hold public office to be free from the direction and management and control of those who are in administrative public office so far as voting and conducting elections are concerned.

To some of us, that is more important than the distribution of public funds to carry on various activities of the Government, especially when we think the matter goes to the very root of free government. There is nothing more precious or valuable than the right to vote. There is nothing more valuable than the right to have a free vote, and the right to vote as one's conscience dictates, without influence or control. It has taken years, many and long political battles, to obtain a free ballot and protect the citizen from improper influences at the ballot box.

Long ago we drove to the wall all private employers who sought to control the votes of private citizens; and now we are hesitating about driving out of election booths paid government officials who seek to control the votes of the free men and women of this country.

There is another group here—a group who believe that the issue of States' rights is involved. Their pretended position is, "We are not going to permit this bill to pass until this bill is thoroughly discussed and argued." They place great stress upon the fact that the solemn, serious question of States' rights is involved.

It seems to me, Mr. President, the orderly way to proceed would be for both these groups to go on and fight out these issues, have the various amendments presented, vote upon them, and an effort made to reach a decision which represents the views of the majority of this body. That, it seems to me, is the course we ought to pursue, and the exact issue that is now before us is whether or not we shall so proceed.

The other side of the picture is that there are apparently in this body some who say, "We are not going to permit a vote on the Hatch bill anyway. We are going to filibuster. We are not willing to go ahead and see if the amendments can be discussed in an orderly manner, and a sound solution obtained, and have vote after vote taken as to how we shall perfect the legislation. We intend, if not openly and directly but by indirection, to kill the bill."

Are we who represent the group here who believe that the time has come, after hearings and favorable report by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and discussions in the Senate for days, to go forward in improving our election machinery to help assure a free ballot; or are we going to surrender under the threat that, "If you do not substitute another bill now, we will prolong this discussion; we will filibuster, and we will nullify and make useless the majority favorable to this bill"?

Those who want to surrender great fundamental principles under those circumstances may do so. I, for one, am unwilling to surrender under any such threat, and I believe many other Senators entertain the same determination. Let us be not affrighted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. HATCH and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senators from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS and Mr. PEPPER], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote as I shall do. I vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

I also announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. RUSSELL's motion was rejected.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND FOR THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New Mexico whether this would not be a propitious time to suggest taking up the deficiency bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is nearly 4:30 o'clock, and I suppose no Senator would care to proceed to speak on the Hatch bill, it is agreeable to me, if it is to the Senator from New Mexico, that the deficiency bill be taken up.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have understood from the Senator from Colorado that this is really an emergency matter, that it covers salaries which will expire on the 15th of this month, and that it will take only a short time to dispose of the bill; so I have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Colorado wishes to ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside in order that we may proceed with the consideration of the deficiency bill, I have no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8641, the first deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to know a little more about the bill. What is the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. It is a deficiency appropriation bill, which has been on the table for some days.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. I think it is the practice, under unanimous-consent agreements such as that proposed by the Senator from Colorado, for the pending business to be temporarily laid aside, and automatically to become the pending business at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill brought forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8641) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be considered for amendment, and that committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General Appropriations—Legislative," on page 3, after line 14, to insert:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Portrait of former President Herbert Hoover: For the procurement of an oil painting of former President Herbert Hoover in accordance with Public Resolution No. 42 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, approved August 5, 1939, fiscal year 1940, $2,500, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 205. For the payment of claims allowed by the General Accounting Office pursuant to the acts of January 12, 1899, and May 26, 1900, which have been certified to Congress under the Permanent Appropriations Repeal Act, approved June 26, 1934 (31 U. S. C. 725b), in Senate Document No. 159, and House Document No. 624, Seventy-sixth Congress, $247.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. The President sent to the Congress a Budget estimate, which is document No. 600 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, third session. The amendment is carried in the Budget estimate. It has to do with the payment of the expenses of our delegates to a so-called Indian conference to be held in Mexico next month, April 1940.

In connection with the amendment, the President sent a statement to the Congress, and in order that the amendment and statement may appear in the RECORD, I ask that the amendment proposed by me and the complete statement of the President accompanying the amendment be printed at this point in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendment and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

First Inter-American Conference of Experts on Indian Life in the Americas, Patzcuaro, Mexico, 1940 ..... $8,000

"For the expenses of participation by the United States in the First Inter-American Conference of Experts on Indian Life in the Americas, to be held at Patzcuaro, Mexico, in 1940, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); rent; travel expenses; local transportation; transportation of things; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; equipment; official cards; printing and binding; official entertainment; cost of assembling, installing, packing, transporting, safekeeping, demonstrating, and renovating a suitable exhibit, and the purchase of supplies incident thereto, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1940, to remain available until June 30, 1941, $8,000 (convention February 20, 1928; 53 Stat. 1290)."

Section 6 of article 6 of the Pan American Union Convention provides, in general, that the Governing Board of the Union may promote and arrange international conferences of experts to study problems of a technical character of common interest to the Americas, and, to this end, may request the governments concerned to appoint experts to represent them at these conferences. The governments represented at the Eighth International Conference of American States, held at Lima, Peru, in December 1938, adopted a resolution approving the holding of a conference of experts on Indian life in the Americas at La Paz, Bolivia, in August 1939. Due to unsettled conditions in Bolivia, the place for holding this conference was changed to Patzcuaro, Mexico, and the date of the conference fixed at April 14–24, 1940. The Mexican Ambassador at Washington has extended an invitation to this Government to be represented at the conference.

The purpose of the conference is to study the desirability of creating an Inter-American Indian Institute; to explore generally problems which are common to all American Indians, including that of land tenure and land use; and to promote mutually the growing friendship and good will of the American states.

This estimate is for the expenses of the American delegation attending the conference.

HAROLD D. SMITH,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment sent to the Senate by the President. On page 3 of the Budget estimate we find the conditions under which these delegates shall be paid.

The proposed conference originated in other conferences. During the past several years a number of conferences have been held in South America, and at those conferences the desirability of another conference was suggested, and the conference now proposed is the culmination of those suggestions.

A number of delegates are to be appointed to this conference by nations having large Indian populations. Canada has a large Indian population, and so Canada is preparing to participate in the conference. The United States has 300,000 Indian citizens, so the United States desires to participate in the conference.

This conference is limited to the Western Hemisphere, and on the Western Hemisphere there are in the neighborhood of 30,000,000 Indian citizens of the several countries located in North America, Central America, and South America. Therefore, at the end of the amendment submitted by the President I desire to add the following language as a modification of my amendment:

Provided, That in the selection of official delegates to such conference due representation shall be accorded actual Indian citizens of the United States.

In the committee it was pointed out that the conference did not of necessity have to be made up of Indian citizens, which would make it possible for the delegates from the United States to be persons of non-Indian blood. I therefore desire to have it provided that in appointing delegates to the conference from this country due regard shall be given to our Indian population, to the end that they may participate.

I am advised by those in authority in the Department of the Interior that it is contemplated that if the conference is held, a number of Indians of the several tribes of the United States shall be appointed delegates, and they will go to the conference, which is to be held close to Mexico City, with credentials from the Government of the United States.

These conferences are called and held under general law. The coming conference has developed to the present point under general law. The House refused the appropriation. In the Senate Committee on Appropriations it was likewise refused. It seems to be the opinion that no such conferences as the one now proposed should be hereafter held unless the money shall have been appropriated in advance and the conference shall have been authorized in advance.

Mr. President, so far as we have general law permitting the calling of conferences without money being specifically appropriated for that purpose, I see no way of avoiding the payment of the expenses now sought to be met unless we repeal the existing law and provide, by precedent, at least, that no future conference shall be held unless it shall have been authorized in advance and the money appropriated in advance.

Inasmuch as the general law provides for this particular conference, and inasmuch as a number of South American conferences have agreed, and, we might say, have called this conference, and because of the fact that Mr. Collier, the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has been designated to perform a very important function at the conference, it is up to Mr. Collier to see that the Indians of North America, at least, are represented there. Mr. Collier tells me that our Government is preparing to participate in the conference, and that the South American and Central American republics are preparing to participate.

If that be true, I think it would be very unfortunate if an Indian conference should be held in Mexico, practically at our border, and the United States, the sponsor of the conference, should be denied representation. The item calls for a sum of only $8,000. So I offer the amendment based upon the Budget estimate, with an amendment to the amendment, so as to provide that in calling the conference due representation shall be given our Indian citizens in attendance on behalf of the United States.

I ask that the amendment as modified be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read as suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert:

For the expenses of participation by the United States in the First Inter-American Conference of Experts on Indian Life in the Americas, to be held at Patzcuaro, Mexico, in 1940, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); rent; travel expenses; local transportation; transportation of things; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; equipment; official cards; printing and binding; official entertainment; cost of assembling, installing, packing, transporting, safekeeping, demonstrating, and renovating a suitable exhibit, and the purchase of supplies incident thereto, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1940, to remain available until June 30, 1941, $8,000 (convention February 20, 1928; 53 Stat. 1290): Provided, That in the selection of official delegates to such conference due representation shall be accorded actual Indian citizens of the United States.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I hope the Members of the Senate will listen to me very briefly. I shall vote for the first part of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma. I believe it is in order for the Indians of North America to get together and discuss their problems. But there is one particular point I want to call to the attention of the Senate. It is perfectly proper to have a committee of persons from the United States go to Mexico City and meet with the delegates or the representatives of the Indians from south of the border. However, I have a different idea as to who should be the representatives to go from the United States. I do not believe that the second part of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma covers what I have in mind. If Indians are going to meet in Mexico City, or elsewhere, it appears to me that there should be a delegation of Indians from the United States. We have Indians within the United States who are as able to present their desires and their wishes as are white persons living within the United States. I do not believe it would be proper to leave to Washington the discretion as to the selection of the Indians or Indian representatives. If representatives from the United States are to go to the city of Mexico or elsewhere they should be Indians and not representatives of the Indian Office. I make that statement very seriously. I want the Indians to be taken care of, but I want the Indians to decide for themselves as to who should represent them in a particular meeting.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Speaking of international meetings, the Senate, after rather extended debate and a record vote the other day, voted not to make an appropriation for the American delegates to the Interparliamentary Union, a delegation which would have been composed of Members of the House and Senate. Does the Senator know any reason why a gang of job holders from the Interior Department should be appropriated for and sent down to Mexico?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is the point I wanted to make.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They ought to take at least one Indian along with them as an exhibit.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes. I want an Indian to represent the United States in the meeting to be held in Mexico, and not a representative of the Department of the Interior. That is why I do not want to have the discretion left to anyone.

I wish to mention the name of one Indian from the State of Oklahoma. He is a real Indian, and not a bureau Indian. His name is Will Durant, of the State of Oklahoma, former member of the State legislature.

I mention the name of another Indian, Mr. Wade Crawford, of the State of Oregon, the State which sends our worthy minority leader to the Senate.

I mention the name of another Indian, Mrs. R. L. Jamison, a Seneca and Cherokee Indian from the State of New York, an Indian, not a bureau representative.

If we are to discuss Indian affairs why not let the Indians decide once in a while what is good for them.

I shall nominate a Navajo Indian, a real honest-to-goodness Navajo from my State, J. C. Morgan, of the city of Farmington.

So I submit an amendment, Mr. President, providing that the selection of the Indian delegates shall not be left to the Indian Office, or to the Department of the Interior, but to the Indians themselves.

At the proper time, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill, I wish to submit the names of Will Durant, of the State of Oklahoma; J. C. Morgan, a Navajo of Farmington, N. Mex.; Wade Crawford, of Klamath, Oreg.; and Mrs. R. L. Jamison, a Seneca and Cherokee Indian from New York.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I happen to know each of the persons mentioned by the Senator from New Mexico, and, to my personal knowledge, they would be a credit to any conference, and I shall be glad, so far as I can, to accept the amendment. Then I shall ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], in charge of the bill, this question: The Senator from New Mexico has suggested the names of four Indians he would like to see named as delegates; would it be agreeable to accept his amendment to my amendment and let the whole item then go to conference to be worked out in conference?

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask a legal question of the Senator, whether or not in legislation we can name Indians? That is a matter of appointment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That can be worked out in conference.

Mr. WHEELER. There are many Indians in Montana, and I should like to name some to this delegation.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have no objection to a real Indian from Montana being appointed on the delegation. Inasmuch as I wanted real Indians to go as representatives, I submitted the names of some of those I knew.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I want real Indians to go as delegates. I do not want bureaucrats to go down there. I agree with the Senator in that respect. I think it is a rather dangerous policy to name Indians in the legislation, however, because every Indian in my State, if he is not named in this bill, will feel slighted. It seems to me what we should do is to let the Indians in each particular State select their own representative as delegate.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Does the Senator think that will be done if it is left to the discretion of the Bureau?

Mr. WHEELER. Not if it is left to the discretion of the Bureau to pick them out. Let the Indians themselves select the delegates. Do not let the Bureau pick them out, but let the Indians themselves do so. However, they cannot be named in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], as modified.

Mr. CHAVEZ. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Does agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma mean agreeing to the suggestion made by the Senator from New Mexico?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. WHEELER. May we have the amendment again read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

For the expenses of participation by the United States in the First Inter-American Conference of Experts on Indian Life in the Americas, to be held at Patzcuaro, Mexico, in 1940, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); rent; travel expenses; local transportation; transportation of things; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; equipment; official cards; printing and binding; official entertainment; cost of assembling, installing, packing, transporting, safekeeping, demonstrating, and renovating a suitable exhibit, and the purchase of supplies incident thereto, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5); and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1940, to remain available until June 30, 1941, $8,000 (convention February 20, 1928; 53 Stat. 1290): Provided, That in the selection of official delegates to such conference due representation shall be accorded actual Indian citizens of the United States; and that the following persons be included in the list of delegates: Will Durant, of Oklahoma; J. C. Morgan, of New Mexico; Wade Crawford, of Oregon; Mrs. R. L. Jamison, of New York; and Eugene Little Coyott, of Montana.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator who offered the amendment whether or not the amendment is pure legislation on an appropriation bill. As I understood the reading of it from the desk, it provides for disregarding certain provisions of existing law, and is therefore clearly legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri make the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am merely making an inquiry of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry, I ask that the clerk may read the lines in the Budget estimate immediately following the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Budget estimate does not authorize changes in existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Section 6 of article 6 of the Pan American Union Convention provides, in general, that the Governing Board of the Union may promote and arrange international conferences of experts to study problems of a technical character of common interest to the Americas, and, to this end, may request the governments concerned to appoint experts to represent them at these conferences. The governments represented at the Eighth International Conference of American States, held at Lima, Peru, in December 1938, adopted a resolution approving the holding of a conference of experts on Indian life in the Americas at La Paz, Bolivia, in August 1939. Due to unsettled conditions in Bolivia, the place for holding this conference was changed to Patzcuaro, Mexico, and the date of the conference fixed at April 14–24, 1940. The Mexican Ambassador at Washington has extended an invitation to this Government to be represented at the conference.

The purpose of the conference is to study the desirability of creating an Inter-American Indian Institute; to explore generally problems which are common to all American Indians, including that of land tenure and land use; and to promote mutually the growing friendship and good will of the American States.

This estimate is for the expenses of the American delegation attending the conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oklahoma what provision of the existing law it is proposed to disregard.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the President sent the estimate to Congress and he gave the authority on which he based the estimate. If that is not good in law, the item is out of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is a provision for disregarding some section of the statutes. All I am trying to find out is what section of the statutes is to be disregarded.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, there is a provision of law, for example, requiring advertising for bids in connection with stenographic expenses. There are other emergent matters of that kind. The amount of money is very small.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much is involved?

Mr. HAYDEN. $8,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What was the amount in connection with the Interparliamentary Union?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to call attention to the fact that the estimate submitted by the Bureau of the Budget shows that section 3709, if not repealed, is certainly disregarded in at least two different places. I do not know exactly what it is proposed to disregard. The language of the amendment covers the purchase of supplies without regard to the existing law, the payment of expenses without regard to the existing law, and the appointment of personnel without regard to the Classification Act. There are really three changes in existing law. So, as offered, the amendment is legislation.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the amendment is to prevail at all, it is necessary to waive those requirements. It is impossible to hold a civil-service examination between now and the 14th of next April, when the meeting is to take place.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will agree that the amendment is legislation, will he not?

Mr. HAYDEN. If the amendment violates any law, it also violates common sense not to include a provision of this kind. Who would want to limit the delegation to Mexico City to civil-service employees? That is exactly what the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is trying to avoid.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the amendment provides for including travel expenses, local transportation, transportation of things, the purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals, and so forth. I do not know what section 3709 of the Revised Statutes is. I do not carry it in my head and do not pretend to do so. However, it seems to me that after the Senate has declared its policy in the matter of the Interparliamentary Union, it is bad practice to authorize ignoring a statute, whatever it may be, with regard to travel expenses without any consideration.

Let me ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] if I am correct in my impression that the Senate committee rejected this amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. It was rejected by the full committee, I think on a tie vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I feel constrained to make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which has been printed, and which lies on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 20, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The funds continued available (by the Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Act, 1941) during the fiscal year 1941 for refunds of processing and related taxes shall be available during such fiscal year for the payment, hereby authorized under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to any person who raised or produced and marketed hogs for slaughter on which there was levied, collected, or paid a processing tax under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (of 1933), or his legal representative, of so much of such tax as was in fact borne by such person: Provided, That the amount of such tax borne by such person with respect to any particular quantity of hogs shall be deemed to be an amount equal to the processing tax payable upon an equal quantity of hogs at the time such particular quantity of hogs was marketed minus any amount by which the spread between the average hog product value at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed and the average hog price at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during such month was less than the amount of such processing tax plus 65 cents for each hundredweight of such particular quantity of hogs: Provided further, That the rate of processing tax levied, collected, or paid with respect to any particular quantity of hogs marketed by a claimant under the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed to be the rate prevailing on the day following the day upon which such hogs were marketed by such claimant: Provided further, That any claim for payment under the provisions of this paragraph shall be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue after the date of enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1941, and proof upon such claim must be submitted prior to December 31, 1941: Provided further, That the allowance or disallowance by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of any claim filed under the provisions of this paragraph shall be reviewable in the same manner and to the same extent that the allowance or disallowance of a claim filed under the provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 is reviewable under section 906 of such act: Provided further, That account sales kept by a vendor, or a vendee, or by an agent of either, with respect to a particular quantity of hogs shall be accepted as proof of a claim for payment under the provisions of this paragraph with respect to such quantity of hogs: Provided further, That no part of any payment made under this paragraph in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with obtaining such payment, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding; and any person violating the provisions of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this amendment proposes legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in the first session of the present Congress I introduced a bill to provide for the refund to farmers of the processing tax on hogs paid when that law was in effect in cases in which they could prove that the processing tax had been paid by the farmer himself in a lower price of hogs. The bill was similar to a measure which was passed for the cotton growers, to refund to them their cotton-processing taxes. The same situation exists with regard to hogs today.

This measure passed the Senate on a former occasion, but was referred to the Committee on Agriculture in the House; and there it has been held up, just as the bill was held up to provide for a refund of the processing tax on cotton. That bill was held up in the other body of Congress; and an amendment similar to this one was attached to a deficiency appropriation bill to provide for the refund of the processing tax on cotton out of a fund which was carried over.

This amendment provides for making these payments out of a fund of $31,000,000 carried in the Treasury Department appropriation bill for refund of processing taxes. No new money is appropriated. The money already appropriated will be used for this purpose. The farmers sold their hogs at that time at a lower price than they otherwise would have sold them for; and the Department of Agriculture admitted that the processing tax on hogs was largely paid by the farmer himself in lower prices for those products.

We believe that the farmers are entitled to the refund of these processing taxes just as much as the cotton growers were, just as much as the factories were that were paid under previous acts. As you will note, it is provided in the amendment that the farmer has to prove his case before any consideration will be given him. In my opinion, farmers who can prove their cases are entitled to refunds just as much as the cotton growers were, just as much as the manufacturers or processors were who have had refunds paid to them.

So I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not press his point of order on the amendment. A technical point of order may lie against the amendment. I do not know; but, at any rate, the situation is similar to the one that existed in the case of the cotton bill, and the hog farmers are just as much entitled to refunds as the cotton growers were.

After the act was declared unconstitutional we voted for the payment of refunds to the cotton growers and the processors who paid processing taxes. The hog growers are entitled to it, too, if they can prove that they themselves paid the processing tax in the form of a lower price for their hogs. Many of them can do so; and I urge the Senator from South Carolina in all fairness to withdraw his point of order on this amendment and let it go into the bill and go to conference.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I know nothing about the merits of the amendment which has been offered to this bill. If the Senator from North Dakota will offer the amendent and have it considered by the committee, the committee may conclude that it is equitable and should be recommended for adoption by the Senate; but, reading it now, it is impossible for me even to know what is in the amendment. It is subject to a point of order, and I must insist upon it.

If the Senator will give the committee time to consider the amendment, it may be offered to the agricultural appropriation bill or to some other bill; but until I know more about it, and know what the Department has to say with reference to it, and what the charge on the Treasury would be, I shall have to insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this amendment follows the precedent set in the case of the cotton bill; and this matter was also taken care of by the Senate in a vote on the bill to provide a refund of the processing tax to hog farmers.

Mr. BYRNES. When the Senator a while ago made the statement that the amendment is in accord with the policy adopted as to cotton I was greatly impressed by it. I desire, however, to read the language of the amendment to see whether or not it is and whether or not any reason is urged by the Department of Agriculture or the Treasury Department in opposition to the bill.

The Senator is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. If this amendment in the form of a bill has been pending before that committee, why has not the committee reported it?

Mr. FRAZIER. It has not been pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BYRNES. Before what committee has it been pending?

Mr. FRAZIER. I introduced it on Friday. I had planned to have it referred to the Appropriations Committee, which was considering the deficiency bill, but got word that the deficiency bill had been closed that morning, and that it had been reported to the Senate, so the only thing to do was to have the amendment printed and take it up when the deficiency bill came up.

Mr. BYRNES. Has any report been made as to how much the amendment would cost?

Mr. FRAZIER. The amount of $31,000,000 is carried over in the fund, so it could not cost more than that.

Mr. BYRNES. If the amendment involves an expenditure of $31,000,000, I think some committee should have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. FRAZIER. No new money is appropriated. It is money that is carried over for the purpose of paying refunds of processing taxes.

Mr. BYRNES. It must involve payment out of the Treasury of the $31,000,000 if it is to be of any help to the farmers.

Mr. FRAZIER. I say, though, that no new money is appropriated. It is in the fund which is carried over in the Treasury Department appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNES. It is to refund processing taxes paid several years ago?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I have not the floor. I make the point of order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I wish to say that a bill authorizing this refund passed the Senate on August 2, 1939. The bill was on the calendar at that time and had been through committee, so the Senate has already acted on it; but the measure is held up in the House. This is the same provision to which the Senate has already given its approval.

Mr. BYRNES. I have already suggested that the Appropriations Committee has had no chance at all to consider the amendment. It may be offered to the agricultural appropriation bill, and it will be just as effective on that bill as on this one. That bill will be considered by the Senate within the next week, and within that time we shall have an opportunity to determine whether or not the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. GURNEY. I inquire if the Chair has ruled on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled. The point of order has been sustained.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I hope the chairman of the committee will permit the bill to go over until tomorrow morning. The bill was reported on the 8th of March. It reached the Senate in printed form last Saturday and was not put on the desks of Senators until today.

I do not like the idea of passing in so short a time a bill involving over $90,000,000. I have some correspondence from constituents about some items in the bill, and I should like to have an opportunity to read it. I have not had a chance to do so. I do not want to be put in the attitude of trying to stop the legislation. I hope the chairman of the committee will agree to let it go over until the morning. Of course, if he cannot agree to that, I will ask for the regular order, which is the consideration of the Hatch bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The Chair lays the Hatch bill before the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, just a minute. Am I to understand that when a bill has passed its third reading, it may then be sent back to the Calendar on a demand for the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At any time before passage, if the regular order is called for, the Senator who makes the point is in order, and the bill goes back to the Calendar.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply want to make the comment that this is a bill made up of a very considerable number of items. It is not a regular appropriation bill for the next fiscal year. It is made up of emergency items, salaries which are required to be paid at this time, and so forth.

If the bill drags along employees in some of the departments will be let out of the service. One that occurs to me is the State Department. A number of persons—not a great number, but some—were put on the rolls in order to meet the situation caused by the war in Europe. The funds for their payment have been expended. There is not a thing in the bill of great importance other than a $60,000,000 item for the benefit of the farmers, that is, to make available immediately parity payments in order to release the same amount out of the annual agricultural appropriation bill, of which the Senator from Georgia is in charge.

Of course, the Senator from Mississippi has a perfect right to have the bill go over, and we are quite helpless. The employees affected, of course, will have to leave the service and perhaps go on relief. The Hatch bill, about which the Senator is not enthusiastic, will be before the Senate tomorrow. It may not be possible to bring this deficiency bill back before the Senate. The Senator will accomplish some things which are dear to his heart, but he will not be helping the departments of this Government, nor will it be helping in his opposition to the Hatch bill.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in response to the observations of the Senator from Colorado, I merely wish to say that a little while ago I realized that 30,000,000 people had their eyes on the Senate, looking for the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill. The farmers of this country are anxious to know just what Congress is going to do about parity payments, and what it is going to do about the surplus commodity question. There are many things in the bill in which the farmers are keenly interested. They are now making out their budgets. They are now hitching up the old mare and starting on the way to the field to begin plowing for another crop. They are anxious to know what is going to take place. They are not anxious to know whether we are going to hatch out a Hatch bill, for the benefit of the Republicans, as it seems, since they are so unanimous in its support, although they are not really so much interested in that as in the legislation carried in the agricultural bill. If it is not necessary to be expeditious in the passage of the legislation in which 30,000,000 people are interested, I cannot see that a delay of 18 hours on this deficiency bill will be seriously objected to by anyone.

I have no doubt the bill will be taken up in the morning when the Senate meets and will be passed. I do not know whether there is a line in it or a dollar of appropriation to which I would object, but, as a Senator representing my constituents, I have a right to know what is in a $92,000,000 appropriation bill before it passes the Senate, because I have a responsibility equal to that of other Senators. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill, and I do not like to have a $90,000,000 appropriation bill taken up and passed in 5 minutes, especially before anyone has had a chance to read it. I dare say not five Senators in this body, outside of the committee, know what is in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. And the same thing will be true tomorrow.

Mr. BILBO. Possibly they do not care, but I do. I want to have an opportunity to read the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. In just a moment. I notice that in the bill there is the sum of $42,500,000 for salaries for one branch of the Government, and $600,000 for communications.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator is demonstrating the fact that he has not read the bill.

Mr. BILBO. I read the first page.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has not read that page, because that is not an appropriation he is reading.

Mr. BILBO. If the remainder of it is like this perhaps I had better wait and read it all. There is $4,200,000 for travel. I should like to know something about that. It is all set out, and there is a report. All I am requesting is an opportunity to read the bill. It means a delay of only 18 hours.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to suggest to both the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Colorado that of course this is a deficiency bill; it is brought in in the usual way, and the effort to pass it is the usual way of passing an urgent deficiency bill. But, at the same time, if the Senator from Mississippi insists on calling for the regular order, of course we will get nowhere this afternoon in the passage of the deficiency bill, and I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that if the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw his request for the regular order, the Senator from Colorado let the bill go over until tomorrow morning.

Mr. BILBO. I will be glad to agree to that. I have no doubt that I may be willing to let the bill pass without amendment or without any comment, but I take the position that, as a Senator, I have a right to read the bill, and I have not yet had an opportunity to read it. It involves $92,000,000, and I do not care to have my constituents know that I am sitting here with my hands folded letting a bill go through Congress appropriating $92,000,000 without any attention being paid to it.

Mr. ADAMS. I would not have that appear in the RECORD for anything. The Senator is the one calling attention to it.

Mr. BILBO. If there is something in the bill about which my constituents have written me and I let the bill go through without looking into the matter, I would not feel that I had done my duty as a Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the Senator from Mississippi advises me that he will make it his business to read the bill tonight——

Mr. BILBO. I always follow that course.

Mr. BYRNES. And that in the morning we will be able to dispose of the bill in a very few minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in an attempt to make a virtue of my necessity, as I always try to do, if the Senator will withdraw his request, and wants the bill to go over until tomorrow to give him an opportunity to keep himself right with his constituents, I shall have no objection.

Mr. BILBO. That is all I ask, and I only resorted to the demand for the regular order in order to secure my right. I withdraw the request with that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws the request for the regular order.

INVITATION TO ATTEND SHOWING OF LAND OF LIBERTY

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, some time ago the United States New York World's Fair Commission extended an invitation to all the Members of Congress to attend on Thursday the showing of the picture called Land of Liberty. I desire to supplement the invitation and to express the hope that every Senator will attend and see the picture. It was exhibited at the New York World's Fair and was one of the most popular exhibits at the fair. It presents the documentary history of the United States in picture form. I hope every Senator will be present to witness the showing of the picture in the auditorium of the Department of Labor on Thursday evening at 8:30 p. m.

REDUCTION OF TAXES FOR EMPLOYERS OF HAND LABOR

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I regret very much to delay the Senate at this late hour in the afternoon, but I refrained from taking the floor earlier in the day because of my desire not to participate in any debate which might be interpreted by anyone as being intended to delay consideration of the pending business.

I gave notice Saturday of my intention to introduce the bill which I am now about to introduce, a bill designed to reduce unemployment, and there has already been a very great demand for copies of the measure. Therefore, I feel under obligation to trespass upon the time of the Senate for a few moments. I shall make my remarks as brief as possible.

Mr. President, believing that there can be no solution of the economic problem until the country finds a permanent solution of unemployment, I am introducing, for the purposes of study and discussion, a bill which is intended to enable industry itself to provide work for the millions who are now without it.

The problem of farm surpluses, the problem of Government debt and of Budget balancing, as well as the problem of work relief, financed by Government borrowing, all have their roots in the fact that private industry is not supplying opportunities for work to all who want to work.

It seems to me clear that the only way to reduce unemployment is to stimulate private industry. Our experience has demonstrated that Government cannot provide the jobs that are needed to restore prosperity.

The bill which I am introducing is designed to make it profitable for every employer of labor to use the largest possible number of workers. It is made self-supporting by a system of tax credits and contributions computed on the basis of the present income-tax structure.

REWARDS TO EMPLOYERS OF LABOR

Rewards, in the form of tax reductions or even wage subsidies, are held out not only to those who create new opportunities for employment, but, indeed, to all employers of labor, and the program would be financed, not by Government borrowing, but by a labor differential tax to be assessed against profits which arise as a result of factors by which labor costs are disproportionately reduced.

The measure is intended to effect an alliance between men and machines that would insure the maximum use of both. It is based upon the fundamental concept that there can be no permanent prosperity even for the most highly mechanized industry unless the masses of the people are able to buy the products of the machine.

It rewards the employer of labor by giving him a tax credit based upon the amount of wages paid. Every employer would receive this credit, and it would become a cash payment when the employer's wage account was sufficiently large in proportion to the mark-up of the goods produced or services rendered.

On the other hand, however, in cases where the mark-up, that is to say, the difference between gross income and costs, is excessively large as compared with total wage payments, a tax would be paid by the employer.

The bill here offered is drafted in tentative form, but contains, I believe, the formula for the long-awaited permanent cure of unemployment. I ask that it may be printed in full in the RECORD so that it may be available for criticism to all who are interested in incentive taxation.

The tax credit or reward for which provision is made in the bill is assessed at a rate to be fixed on the total allowable wage account. This includes all wages or salaries up to $3,000 paid during the taxable year.

The tax payment provided for in the bill is measured by the difference between gross income and the total cost of materials, supplies, and wages. It will be determined by an assessment on this difference at a rate to be fixed after hearings. Since the bill provides for a wage credit in every case, a tax would be paid only in those industries in which the direct cost of labor is less than average.

The effect of the bill would be to stimulate the employment of men by making machines pay their way in terms of human production and of social value. The tax would not penalize the use of machines because even in the most highly mechanized industry the labor credit would be allowed.

WILL TEND TO CREATE NEW MARKETS

If the employer who uses machines chiefly imagines that this formula would be a deterrent, I remind him that the greatest possible deterrent is the ever-narrowing market for his products caused by unemployment, and that even those industries which are making profits have an interest in the public debt. Taxes for debt retirement or even for interest on the public debt do not tend to expand markets or create more customers for the products of either men or machines.

Taxes, such as provided in this bill, which stimulate employment, create new markets because they stimulate buying power through reduction of unemployment. And buying power is precisely what the country most needs.

The appalling fact is that the profits of industry are increasing, but that employment is not keeping pace with the increase of production.

The statistics of the Federal Reserve Board indicate that the index of manufacturing production is now two points above the index of 1929, before the crash, but that although there is a net gain of 600,000 persons annually in the number of available workers, the average of manufacturing employment today is less than it was in 1929. In other words, the trend of production is up and the trend of employment down.

This trend cannot be permitted to go on without eventual disaster.

CORPORATE PROFITS CLIMBING RAPIDLY

A compilation of the profits reports of 669 large corporations made by Standard Statistics Co. shows that in 1939 their profits had increased 83.1 percent over 1938. Profits for these companies, which include all the principal industrials, railroads and utilities amounted to $697,548,000 in 1938 and, during the next 12 months, increased at such a rate that the total for 1939 was $579,000,000 greater, or $1,236,983,000. Obviously, these profits will not continue if we have to increase taxes to balance the Budget, or if we cut off farm relief and work relief by cutting Government expenditures, and thus destroy the already poor purchasing power of the beneficiaries of those expenditures.

The only way out is to enable industry to finance itself, support itself, save itself. All of these industries which made such large profits in 1939 and which also made profits in 1938 are mechanized industries. Every one of them spends large sums to advertise and sell its products.

Why should they not be willing to contribute to the creation of new markets for their own products? That is precisely what they would be doing under this bill. They would be paying a tax for their own benefit. They would be paying a tax the proceeds of which would be used for only one purpose, the creation of buying power through the abolition of unemployment.

This, I believe, is the way to take the unemployment problem and the farm problem off the back of Government; to stop deficit spending; to stop piling up the public debt; and to make possible the full utilization of all our resources of men, money, materials, and machines.

GOVERNMENT CANNOT FURNISH EMPLOYMENT

No one industry can act alone to end unemployment because every industry is under constant pressure to reduce labor costs. When industry lays workers off, the Government perforce must take care of them. But Government cannot do it effectively because Government cannot furnish employment for all who are idle or pay the wages which modern civilization demands to those whom it does employ on work relief. The machine age has created a high standard of living, but that standard can be maintained only if the people are able to buy all of the goods and services which the machine age produces.

Since no one industry can solve the problem alone, it is necessary for the Government of all the people to act for all. I present the method outlined in this bill in the hope that it is the means by which Government can help industry to help itself, by which it can foster and encourage little business, provide opportunities for all in private enterprise and at the same time preserve our cherished democratic institutions.

The details of the proposal are set forth at length in an article by Mr. Karl Karsten which is to appear in the Journal of Electrical Workers and Operators to be published tomorrow.

Mr. President, the article is too long to be read at this time, but I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks an extract from that article, together with a table showing the profits of 669 of the leading corporations of the country, as prepared by Standard Statistics Company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The truth is that the Daggett proposal proposes a universal collection from all producers for the purpose of financing rewards to all who employ labor, because, by the employment they give, and the purchasing power they spread through wages, all employers provide customers and markets for all producers.

Seen in this light, a slight differential collection from the highly mechanized producer is not a destructive penalty, but, on the contrary, somewhat like an insurance premium, is a productive investment, insuring and protecting one's own markets and volume of sales.

4. DETAILS OF THE PROPOSAL

In the light of these facts, we are ready to look upon the proposal in detail.

"Who does what, and how"—to make this proposal work?

Administration of the Daggett proposal for job protection calls for no new or extensive Government agencies. The proposal can be administered by the present income-tax bureau in the course of collecting income taxes.

The amount of "differential collection" from each producer and the amount of "differential payment" claimable by each employer can be computed and shown upon the income-tax blanks in very little additional space. The former can be added to the amount of income taxes payable, the latter deducted, and in the comparatively infrequent cases when the "differential payment" exceeds both the "differential collection" and the income tax payable, the difference can be shown and made the basis of Government payments to the individual.

It is suggested that the computation of the following items on each personal and corporate income-tax report would effectuate the purposes of the Daggett proposal:

(1) Gross income, from all sources except compensation received for personal services but including the full amount of imputed wages received by self-employers.

(2) Total costs of deductible materials and supplies purchased.

(3) Total of claimable pay rolls paid including claimable portion of imputed wages of self-employers.

(4) Excess, if any, of the first item over the second item, which may here be called total mark-up or value added.

(5) Excess, if any, of the fourth item over the third, which excess may here be called nonlabor mark-up.

(6) Amount of differential collection found by multiplying the fifth item by the rate of collections established by Congress.

(7) Amount of differential payment found by multiplying the third item by the rate of payment established by Congress.

(8) Difference between the sixth and seventh items, which will be an addition to or a deduction from the income tax payable, and in the case of a differential payment greater than differential collection and income tax combined, will leave a balance payable by the Government to the taxpayer.

Provision should be made to limit the amount of wages or salaries or other fees and compensation for personal services, including imputed wages of self-employers, to any individual on the pay roll, which can be included in the total of claimable pay rolls for this purpose, to some moderate limit, such as three, four, or five thousand dollars, on the ground that larger salaries do not so greatly need protection and also in order to prevent undue evasion through bookkeeping procedures. By reason of such limits, the total claimable pay rolls here used may and usually will differ from the total of pay rolls used elsewhere in the income-tax report.

For the items which are to be included as income and as deductible materials and supplies, there should be detailed and perhaps to some extent arbitrary definitions. These definitions should have for their purpose a separation of items already subjected to a differential payment and differential collection by other taxpayers, in order to avoid multiple payment and collection, without defeating the underlying intent of the proposal which is to levy upon all values not created by direct labor and reward values created by direct labor. Accounting concepts should be shaped to that end.

Examples of these computations are shown for various industries and occupations in the exhibits.

Legislation to effectuate the proposal need only take the form of a bill setting forth the differential collection rates and the differential payment rates for job-protection purposes, and including the collection and payment thereof in the work of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in conjunection with its administration of income taxes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I am very much interested in the statement made by the Senator from Wyoming, and I wish to commend him for giving his attention and consideration to finding some possible additional solution to our unemployment problem. I agree with him that unemployment is perhaps the most important problem before the people of the country today and will remain so until it is solved. I gather that the Senator believes it may be possible to solve that problem, in part at least, by some method of taxing? What is the Senator's proposal?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as I endeavored briefly and hastily because of the late hour to outline, the purpose of the bill is to provide a tax credit computed on the basis of the income-tax structure——

Mr. WALSH. For machinery.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For those employers of labor who use more than the average of human labor. This credit or payment is to be financed not by government borrowing but by a tax assessed upon employers who use less than the average of human labor.

Mr. WALSH. That was my understanding, from what the Senator said and what I read in the press today. I think the Senator from Wyoming has directed attention to a phase of this subject which is entitled to great and serious study and consideration, and I hope the Senator will push this matter so it may be thoroughly heard and, if possible, some legislation be enacted along that line.

BILL CONTAINS WORKABLE FORMULA

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am greatly encouraged that the senior Senator from Massachusetts should display such interest in this measure. I know that a great many Members of Congress, both Senators and Representatives, have been studying this problem. Numerous suggestions have been made from time to time. I believe there is embodied in this bill a formula which has a chance to work.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill which the Senator has introduced, but I am glad he has introduced it, because it deals with a subject in which I am greatly interested, and I hope it will be referred to a committee which will give it appropriate study.

As I understand, it is a revenue matter and, therefore, must be put in a bill which originates in the House, but, nevertheless, a study may be made of it by a Senate committee.

I may say in that connection that when a revenue bill was under consideration in the Senate I introduced an amendment directing the Secretary of the Treasury to collect and furnish to the next session of Congress information looking to the imposition—I took the dilemma by the other horn—of a tax on labor-saving machinery. That amendment was included in the tax bill in the Senate, but was deleted in conference. That amendment of mine—and I take it the same thing is true of the bill of the Senator from Wyoming—was suggested to me by the fact that in the Unemployment Committee, of which I was a member for a period of nearly 2 years, we discovered that in some cases labor had been supplanted by machinery in the ratio of as high in one case, in the oil industry, as 2,000 to 1; in other words, 2,000 laborers had been displaced by a machine which it took only one laborer to operate.

With the development of labor-saving machinery, which we all hope will be progressive, it seems to me that the labor-saving machinery and the manufacturers who use such machinery must certainly be expected to pay a portion of the cost of taking care of unemployment and of the situations which grow out of unemployment.

Therefore I hope very much that the measure introduced by the Senator from Wyoming may receive the fullest consideration in this body, with the view to appropriate legislation when a bill comes over from the House to which it may be attached.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it is most gratifying to find such distinguished Members as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] express their sympathies with the purposes of this measure.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator speaking is a less distinguished Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It would be difficult to find a Senator more distinguished than is the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I know that the Senator, in the course of his chairmanship of the so-called Monopoly Committee, had placed before him a great deal of evidence on the subject of labor-saving devices, and I wonder whether I am reasonably accurate in stating that to produce an equal amount 3,000,000 less workers are employed today than were employed in 1929?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That statement has been made, but the figures which have come to me from the Federal Reserve Board indicate that the index of production has increased from 119 in 1929 to 121 in 1939, and that the number of persons employed in manufacturing has been reduced from about 8,370,000 in 1929 to about 8,215,000 in 1939. The unemployment problem is made more difficult by reason of the fact that there are added to the employables every year between 500,000 and 600,000 persons.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that the proportion of employment to production is much smaller now than it was 10 years ago.

Mr. WAGNER. I looked into the figures somewhat. Perhaps I have a larger sum; but my very strong impression is that some statisticians and economists who have been working on the question figured that the total employment today for the same amount of production as in 1929 is three million less than it was at that time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Some experts make that statement.

Mr. WAGNER. Even if that is only an approximation, the seriousness of the technological unemployment problem is obvious.

NO OBSTACLE TO TECHNOLOGICAL IMPROVEMENT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The remark of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] prompts me to add this observation: Suggestions for taxes upon machines have in the past not been acted upon because of the fear that to tax machines as such would be to raise obstacles to technological development. There can be no doubt that new machines make new industries. We see evidences of that everywhere. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that machines have the effect of the immediate displacement of particular persons.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not also true that, while ultimately, by creating new industries, the introduction of machines may create a greater aggregate of employment, as to the people who are thrown out of employment in which they have been skilled all their lives, it is very rare that they ever obtain any job that is nearly as good as the one they had, and usually they do not obtain any employment at all?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly correct. Those are the persons who are completely displaced, and whose livelihood is taken away from them. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], former Secretary of Labor, spoke to me earlier in the day, having read in the newspapers this morning that I intended to introduce this bill, and likewise expressed his general approval of the principle upon which the measure is based. He said that he had frequently discussed the matter when he was Secretary of Labor, and had made suggestions of this kind in his reports at various times. So, I find everywhere a general sympathy with the purpose. The doubts are as to whether or not a formula has been developed which will preserve the value of the machine while at the same time preventing the destruction of jobs. My personal belief is that we come pretty close to that formula in this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, this is a tremendous subject. I wish to call to the Senator's attention one experience I had while traveling in Europe. I was interested in the subject of unemployment. The experience to which I refer shows that we have not yet taken the really constructive steps we should take to see that the individual worker who loses his trade because of a labor-saving machine is rehabilitated. We have done nothing to rehabilitate the particular worker, whereas in some of the European countries, perhaps because of economic necessity, schools for the purpose have actually been established. I saw one of those schools. I saw a number of workers in a shop in connection with the employment exchange in one of the German cities; and when I inquired what work was being done I was informed that the men had lost their trade in an industry because of an invention and that they were young enough to be rehabilitated and retrained for the aircraft industry, a new industry which was growing up at that time. So an effort is being made to save those particular workmen from a drop in their standard of living and wages by teaching them other trades, so as to keep up their standard of living and also help to solve the question of unemployment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming desire to introduce the bill at this time?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have introduced it. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the nature of the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming wishes to introduce the bill and to have it referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think it would be well to let it lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is my request that it be introduced and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it will be printed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think we might as well not take any action tonight. I shall object to unanimous consent to do anything of this kind.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Vermont does not know what has transpired. The request of the Senator from Wyoming when he rose—now perhaps almost a half-hour ago—was to introduce a bill. I thought the bill had been introduced. In any event——

Mr. AUSTIN. Perhaps the Senator from Wyoming is correct. However, assuming that that is so, my objection stands, for exactly the same reason I previously stated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator from Vermont to what he is objecting?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am objecting to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. To do what?

Mr. AUSTIN. To introduce his bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in order that there may be no doubt that this bill shall appear in the RECORD, I am forced, in the circumstances, to read it:

Be it enacted, etc., That part I of subchapter B of chapter I of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 16. Labor differential tax:

"(a) Rate of tax: In addition to other taxes there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the labor differential income of every producer a tax of — percent of the amount of the labor differential income.

"(b) Definitions: 'Labor differential income' means the gross income defined in section 22 (a), less the deductions allowed by subsection (c). 'Producer' means an individual, partnership, company, corporation, joint-stock association, or organization, producing goods or services.

"(c) Deductions from gross income: In computing labor differential income there shall be allowed as deductions:

"(1) The total cost of materials and supplies purchased and used during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business producing goods or services; and

"(2) The total amount of remuneration paid as salary, wages, or other compensation for personal services, but not including that part of the remuneration which, after remuneration equal to $3,000 has been paid to an individual by a producer with respect to such services during any taxable year, is paid to such individual by such producer with respect to such services during such taxable year.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall not be applicable (1) to any producer for any taxable year for which such producer had no taxable income under this chapter, or (2) to any producer exempt from income tax under section 101."

SEC. 2. Part III of such subchapter B is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 34. Labor differential credit:

"(a) Credit against labor differential tax: There shall be allowed as a credit against the labor differential tax imposed by section 16 (a) an amount equal to — percent of the total amount of remuneration paid during the taxable year as salary, wages, or other compensation for personal services, but not including that part of the remuneration which, after remuneration equal to $3,000 has been paid to an individual by a producer with respect to such services during such taxable year, is paid to such individual by such producer with respect to such services during such taxable year.

"(b) Labor differential payment: In the case of any producer whose labor differential credit for any taxable year exceeds the tax imposed by section 16 (a), the amount of such excess shall be paid to such producer by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. In the case of any producer who, for any taxable year, is not liable for the tax imposed by section 16 (a) because such producer had no taxable income under this chapter for such year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such producer an amount equal to — percent of the total amount of remuneration paid during the taxable year as salary, wages, or other compensation for personal services, but not including that part of the remuneration which, after remuneration equal to $3,000 has been paid to an individual by a producer with respect to such services during such taxable year, is paid to such individual by such producer with respect to such services during such taxable year."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this act shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1940.

Mr. President, I am really at a loss to understand why the Senator from Vermont does not permit this measure to go through the regular order so that it may be printed and lie on the table for Senators to see in readable form.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have stated my position. I do not know, but I think there is a misunderstanding.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was quite sure the Senator misunderstood what I was asking.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Senator is willing to allow the regular order to take place, and to allow his bill to lie on the table and be printed——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is all I was asking.

Mr. AUSTIN. He will save much energy, although we are always charmed with the voice of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator certainly misunderstood me. I did not ask anything but the introduction and printing of the bill and its reference to the Finance Committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not want any action taken tonight.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not asking for any action.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection to the bill going into the RECORD or being printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it is my understanding, then, that the bill has been introduced.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I cannot see how the Senator could infer that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I know of no way to present a bill for consideration, to be printed, and to lie on the table, except to introduce it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well, if the Senator thinks that is the only way it may be done. I suppose that on my objection to the unanimous-consent request to set aside the pending business for that purpose it could not be done.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have no desire, of course, to set aside the pending business, if that is what the objection means.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So the bill may lie on the table.

The bill (S. 3560) to reduce unemployment, was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. O'MAHONEY). It seems perfectly clear to me, if I correctly understand the situation, that the Senator's bill—which, as I understand, will appear in the RECORD and be printed in regular bill form—relates to a subject of which, under the Constitution of the United States, the Senate has no original jurisdiction.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct in that understanding. Although I have asked to have the bill referred to the Finance Committee, it is my intention to ask the Ways and Means Committee of the House to hold a hearing on the measure. Of course, it would be possible from a parliamentary point of view to attach the bill as a rider to any other tax bill that might come over from the House; but I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that that is not my intention. I have no desire to present this measure as a rider upon any other bill. My purpose in introducing it now is merely to have it printed and available and open to discussion, study, and criticism.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator's purpose is commendable, even though it may unnecessarily take up some of the time of a committee of the Senate.

I was moved to make the suggestion I have made about the Senate having no jurisdiction because this very day I wrote a letter to a constituent who represents a very large organization, one of the largest in the State. He had called my attention to an error in a law on the statute books from which the organization suffered, which I think would be very readily changed if the Senate had the right to proceed with it.

I wrote him that legislation to correct the error must originate in the House of Representatives, and that the Senate had no right to pass legislation of that kind, although they could put on such an amendment if the House sent to the Senate a revenue bill; but I also had to tell him that, in my judgment, the House of Representatives had no intention of passing a revenue bill at this session, so that however meritorious the legislation was, and however little change was necessary to bring it about, from a practical standpoint, it would probably be an impossibility. I did not want my constituent to read the RECORD and see that the Senate had received a proposition which was clearly beyond their jurisdiction, and, so far as the RECORD showed, were ready to proceed with its passage as soon as they could get to it.

I should like also to say that while I have no objection to the study of the bill, though I have not read it, in reading what the newspapers said about it this morning and listening to the Senator's argument it seemed to me that however worthy the purpose of the bill may be, attention ought to be called to the fact that the effect of the bill would be, as I see it, to put a tax upon human progress, and that it would act as a preventive of all technological inventions that would improve anything now in existence.

As I see the matter, the history of civilization is simply the story of technological inventions that have been made and put into use. I dislike to hear so many Senators speaking in commendation of the Senator's bill, all of whom have been highly complimented by the Senator from Wyoming, and to run the risk that I may receive not only not a compliment but a rebuke from the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I never could do anything but compliment the senior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. But, I say, it seems to me that we ought to hesitate long—I think forever, unless there is a real compulsion under conditions that we cannot resist—before we try to put a stop sign on the road of human progress, or to levy a tax upon the improvement of any machinery now in existence which will bring about a happier and a more prosperous people; and I am afraid that is what the Senator's bill would have a tendency to do.

I know that technological inventions have resulted in huge unemployment, that there are many people out of employment because of such inventions; but if there had been no technological inventions, we would be in a state of barbarism today. It seems to me clear that the leaders of human progress should look with commendation and favor upon any invention which reduces the labor of human beings.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire merely to say to the Senator that I agree with everything he has said. I would be the last person to attempt to raise a stop sign on the road of technological improvement. No one recognizes more readily than do I, and no one is more prepared to acknowledge, that the development of the machine has been the cause of most of our improvement. I stated earlier in the discussion—perhaps the Senator did not hear the statement—that one of the reasons why measures of this kind, which have been suggested heretofore on numerous occasions, have not ripened into legislation was the very fear the Senator expresses, but I believe that this measure contains a formula which will make it possible for us to balance men and machines, and to get the best possible result out of both.

Mr. NORRIS. At least, I will say to the Senator, I welcome any study of the subject which may be made, no matter what point of view the student may have to begin with, or what his outlook may be.

While I am speaking of the bill which the Senator has introduced, I should like to say that the technological improvement of machinery in this country has long held my close attention. I have become a firm believer that we should welcome all technological inventions which reduce human labor, and that to meet the unemployment situation which must follow from the application of such machinery to human industry we should reduce the hours of labor of human beings.

I have thought, and I believe now, that we never will settle the unemployment question until we do reduce the hours of human labor. It would dislocate things a little to start with and bring about some inconveniences, but in the long run it would bring about an improvement of living conditions and would bring more happiness and more contentment and more prosperity to the human race.

We should reduce as much as we can the hours of labor of all human beings. We should welcome at any time the production of a mechanical instrument of any kind, and we should put it into application if it will reduce the necessary labor of human beings. It seems to me that one of the things we should do, and one of the things we will have to do, will be to reduce drastically much more than we have provided for by statute up to this time, the hours of labor of our people without reducing the wages, and in the end such action on the part of the Congress to meet the situation, so far as they have jurisdiction under the Constitution, while it would not bring about entirely the relief we seek of unemployment, it would reduce unemployment of men and women to a very great extent, so much so that it would go a great way toward solving the unemployment problem and bringing about prosperity.

Mr. President, I do not believe we can fully meet the situation until we have done something such as I have briefly outlined, or its equivalent, to meet the unemployment problem.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN ON WORLD AFFAIRS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I find it necessary to call attention to an error in a newspaper quotation from a very short speech which I made on Saturday night, which was broadcast. I very rarely pay any attention to errors in quotations. However, I could not be committed to this error, because it is quite material in its effect.

On Saturday night I delivered before my fraternity a very brief address on the subject of World Affairs. It was broadcast. Mimeographed copies were made of it. I find in the Washington (D. C.) Sunday Star of March 10 a report of that address, and I find this statement by the reporter:

> He—
> Meaning me—
> characterized the mission of Under Secretary of State Welles as a "splendid undertaking on the part of the President," and said Mr. Welles had been sent abroad to "make further efforts to bring about a cessation of war and an adjustment of the controversies that are the cause of war."

Certainly I never stated that. I never stated that Mr. Welles was sent abroad for the purpose of trying to bring about a cessation of war. I did use in my address the language quoted, but in a very different context and at a very different place.

What I said was this:

> The President has sent to Europe Mr. Sumner Welles, the Under Secretary of State, to ascertain confidentially the attitude of the governments of the warring powers, their objectives, and, if possible, to ascertain some possible formula that might be the foundation at the proper time for the United States to make further efforts to bring about a cessation of war and an adjustment of the controversies that are the causes of the war.
> It was a splendid undertaking upon the part of the President. There was some fear expressed at the time that the mission of Mr. Welles was announced by the President. Some thought that Mr. Welles might unfortunately be led into the controversies. His actions in Italy, Germany, and France have proven conclusively that he has made no such mistakes and will make no such mistakes, that he is only seeking information in confidence that may be of value to our country in the future. It appears that he has won the confidence of the various high officers of the governments with whom he has conferred. Never by word or action has he violated that confidence. Some said that the President could obtain the same information through his ambassadors. Ambassadors cannot be the recipients of the same confidence of foreign governments as a special envoy, because ambassadors frequently in their efforts to better the position of their own governments in the eyes of the world talk too much. Mr. Welles has not talked at all.

I ask leave to have the entire speech published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

> Mr. Toastmaster; Dr. Brown, eminent supreme archon; members of the Supreme Council, Washington City Rho Chapter; and members of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity: I deeply appreciate your invitation to address you this evening on the subject of World Affairs. There was never in the history of the world a subject that so vitally affects the lives of people and, in fact, civilization. In addressing my fraternity tonight, I am speaking to a cross-section of men who hold high positions in every profession and industry in the United States. It is well that in this period when humanity has imposed upon it suffering beyond expression that those who believe in brotherly love should give consideration to the sad condition of the world.

Great races of people, dominated by the brute instincts of greed and fear, have abandoned the teachings of Christ, the natural laws of humanity and justice. The efforts of powerful governments with mass control of their peoples are bent upon the unrestrained destruction of human life—soldiers, civilians, women, and children. In their madness they have closed their minds and souls to the dictates of reason. Czechoslovakia, an ideal democratic state composed of a high-class citizenry has been destroyed. Poland, which through the ages has been fighting for its independence, has had its people slaughtered and its government wiped out of existence. Finland—loyal, patriotic, honest Finland—has been invaded without excuse by Russia, a country a hundred times as powerful as Finland. The Finnish people are dying for the love of their country and for the honor of their people. China, with its 400,000,000 of peaceful, energetic, and honorable people, without legitimate cause or excuse, is being destroyed and its men, women, and children tortured and exterminated with barbarity never exceeded. Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, who have lived by peace and who even remained neutral during the first Great World War, are now threatened with extermination from two powerful sources. Rumania, who desires neutrality alone, is being forced into an untenable position by the Allies on one hand and by Germany upon the other hand. In fact, all the Balkan states are trembling today in fear of conquest by Germany and Russia.

When this war reaches the apex of its intensity and destruction, its results, as far as destruction of life and civilization are concerned, will be as a mountain to a molehill by comparison with the last war. The instruments of destruction in the air and under the water have been developed to a degree that they may carry their destruction many times further and with far greater destructive powers.

And what is the hope of stopping this catastrophe? Our Government, through the passage and the administration of the Neutrality Act, is strictly maintaining its neutrality as between the warring powers and has prevented the destruction of our ships and the lives of our sailors by restraining commerce with warring powers and by keeping our ships out of the war zones; and yet, while this act and its administration has very probably eliminated our people from the destruction of their lives and property, nevertheless, we cannot escape the dire effects of the destruction of the lives of the best people in the world and the chaos that must follow.

Our Government did everything in its power to induce the great governments of Europe who were threatening war to desist and to reach a reasonable peaceful understanding. The madness of Europe was too great. Our sincere efforts failed.

The President has sent to Europe Mr. Sumner Welles, the Under Secretary of State, to ascertain confidentially the attitude of the governments of the warring powers, their objectives, and, if possible, to ascertain some possible formula that might be the foundation at the proper time for the United States to make further efforts to bring about a cessation of war and an adjustment of the controversies that are the causes of the war. It was a splendid undertaking upon the part of the President. There was some fear expressed at the time that the mission of Mr. Welles was announced by the President. Some thought that Mr. Welles might unfortunately be led into the controversies. His actions in Italy, Germany, and France have proven conclusively that he has made no such mistakes, and will make no such mistakes—that he is only seeking information in confidence that may be of value to our country in the future. It appears that he has won the confidence of the various high officers of the governments with whom he has conferred. Never, by word or action, has he violated that confidence. Some said the President could obtain the same information through his ambassadors. Ambassadors cannot be the recipients of the same confidence of foreign governments as a special envoy because ambassadors frequently in their efforts to better the position of their own governments in the eyes of the world talk too much. Mr. Welles has not talked at all.

The situation in Asia is improving. It has become apparent to the Japanese Government that they cannot conquer China. The cost of their invasion already has been almost destructive of the monetary and economic systems of Japan. In this situation there is hope that a satisfactory adjustment between China and Japan will be worked out eventually.

Both Germany and Great Britain realize more fully now the cost in life, money, and materials of this great war if it continues to its end. And yet the madness still prevails to such an extent that rulers see no way yet except to continue this war of destruction. Each of the warring powers has laid down conditions of peace which anticipate the destruction of the economic life of the other. Certainly this is unnecessary. It is unreasonable. It is impossible. The entry of Russia into the war through its invasion of Poland and Finland and its alliance with Germany has greatly complicated the efforts for peace. Italy may be forced into the war on Germany's side and yet the Italian people will never favor an alliance with communistic Russia. Italy would not be happy at the conquest of the Balkan states by Germany and Russia. When Italy and the Balkans are drawn into this war, peace will be long deferred. If there is not an armistice before the summer commences, the chances are that the war will continue to its finish.

Now is the time for neutral countries to constantly hammer for the thought of peace. Possibly if an armistice could be induced for 30 days and fear could be allayed during that period of time, then maybe the neutral powers could offer their services. It is inconceivable that the warring powers should refuse an armistice to permit of calm discussion of the alleged causes of war and the objectives of such war. To refuse such an undertaking is to carelessly and selfishly pronounce the doom of civilization. We realize, of course, the difficulty of neutrals approaching warring powers in the intense heat of war. We are aware, of course, that unless such good services are welcomed by the warring powers, they can accomplish no good. And yet, sad as the picture appears, our citizens should be well satisfied with the high and patriotic position taken by their own Government. They should be happy to such extent as may be, considering the suffering of the world, that their sons will not be destroyed in this foreign war, that their Government and their civilization will not be threatened with destruction, and that their Government is maintaining a position that will enable it to render valuable services in bringing about peace, and if not peace then to maintain the seeds of civilization to reestablish it after the war in the devastated areas of the world.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations in the Army, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the executive calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That completes the executive calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 12, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received March 11 (legislative day of March 4), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 11, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, behind all changes Thou dost ever abide in eternal constancy. As Thou hast counseled us in our unwisdom to ask of Thee, we beseech Thee to bestow upon us now and evermore the wisdom of righteous living. We thank Thee for the light that reveals unto us the divine estimate of human life, that lifts the veil of mystery from struggle and sacrifice. As humanity is growing weary in its tramp down the ages, as evil roars through the world, awaken intellect and character to banish its sin and shame and let us understand that nothing built on the crumbling rock of wrong can finally last. O may we learn to know Thee in the world about us and in the secret places of our own hearts. Blessed be Thy holy name. Thou wilt speak to us when we are in trouble, guide our footsteps when we have lost our way, and renew our courage when we have become disheartened. Today let us hear Thy voice saying, Peace be unto thee; be strong, be strong." In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 7, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7863. An act to amend section 602 (e) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to a study of radio requirements for ships navigating the Great Lakes and inland waters of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3209. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Mississippi State Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pearl River at or near Carthage in the State of Mississippi; and

S. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1449. An act for the relief of Robert Stockman;

S. 1998. An act for the relief of Ernestine Huber Neuheller; and

S. 2284. An act to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), so as to authorize the President to appoint 100 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date the President approved and signed a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

On March 9, 1940:

H. J. Res. 424. Joint resolution to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to acquire certain lands at St. Petersburg, Fla.

STATE, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

Mr. McANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees:

Messrs. McANDREWS, RABAUT, CALDWELL, KERR, HARE, CARTER, STEFAN, and WHITE of Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of the American merchant marine, and to include therein an editorial recently appearing in the Journal of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of the War Department civil functions appropriation bill relating to labor in the Canal Zone and to include therein excerpts from reports made by the Governor of the Panama Canal, other official reports, and a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of War to me with enclosures.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi and Mr. FERNANDEZ asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement appearing in the magazine The Nation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein messages that were received by the annual conference for the protection of the foreign-born.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in three particulars:

First, on the subject of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Second. By inserting on the subject of the fiscal policy of the United States addresses by Senator JOSH LEE, of Oklahoma, and our colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and others.

Third. To include an address by the Secretary of War on the subject United We Stand. It is a brief address.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the requests of the gentleman from New York will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative business for the day on Wednesday next I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore made I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two subjects—to include in one a brief article from the Poultry Tribune and in the other to insert a short summary of a speech by Milo Perkins.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE PINK BOLL WORM

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a concurrent resolution from the Legislature of the State of Mississippi memorializing Congress to appropriate funds to the Department of Agriculture to prevent further spread of the pink boll worm.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, the speech I am putting in the Appendix is a discussion of bills now pending which are very important to the farmers of the Nation, bills dealing with the Farm Credit Administration. One bill now pending before the House Committee on Agriculture builds constructively for the future, in the interests of the farmer. Another bill, introduced by several Senators, would reinstate the Farm Credit Administration as an independent agency, closely allied to Wall Street bankers. The real issue is not only whether the Farm Credit Administration shall remain as it is now under the Department of Agriculture or whether it shall be reestablished as a separate agency, but in whose interests it shall be administered. I am asking my colleagues in the House to read my remarks which will be found in the RECORD tomorrow morning.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHWERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include two resolutions pertaining to the St. Lawrence waterway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHWERT]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore granted I may address the House for 15 minutes this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

RESOLUTION REQUESTING STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have just introduced a resolution requiring the different departments and agencies of the Government to file with the Congress not later than April 1, a statement of the name of each employee and all his expenses who has been to Florida at Government expense since November 15, 1939. My information is that we will find a lot of high-toned bureaucrats enjoying a vacation at Government expense.

CENSUS QUESTIONS

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, anything that I might say at this time perhaps is not informative, enlightening, or even sensational. Members on both sides of the aisle I know will agree with me when I say I want to call your attention to the numerous letters I have been receiving showing the displeasure of many people on account of the personal questions that have been asked, or will be asked, in connection with the taking of the census.

On March 8 there was sent to me a resolution introduced in the senate of the State of New York, and this was concurred in by the assembly March 6, 1940. Many of these questions, in my humble opinion, are somewhat personal; many of these questions are of a most personal nature. I have read the questions which have proved so objectionable, and I must agree with those whose objections I have received.

I consider the forthcoming census is an inquisition instead of an interrogation. I heartily sympathize with those individuals who I am positive will have their displeasure incurred. I thoroughly agree with Senator TOBEY, and I will vote for the Tobey resolution if it comes before the House; and let us hope that it does come before this body so that we might correct the unjustifiable, un-American course proposed by the Bureau of the Census.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, March 5, 1940.

(By Mr. Mahoney)

Whereas a bitter controversy arose in the First Constitutional Convention of the United States, in that the representatives of the smaller States as a rule claimed that the vote, and so the influence of the States in the proposed government, should be equal and the representatives of the larger States as a rule claimed that their greater population and wealth were entitled to recognition; and

Whereas the controversy ended in the creation of a bicameral legislature; in the lower branch, the House of Representatives, the claim of the larger States found recognition, while in the upper branch, the Senate, the claim of the smaller States found recognition, and each State having two votes; and

Whereas since the House of Representatives' seats were to be distributed in proportion to the population, the Convention, foreseeing the rapid changes of population, ordained an enumeration of the inhabitants and a redistribution or reapportionment of seats in the House of Representatives every 10 years; and

Whereas the Federal Census began in 1790 and has been taken every 10 years since, under mandate contained in the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas the classifications for statistical information have increased in number from one census to another, so that it has now reached a point where the underlying purpose of the census has become secondary, and that some of the questions required to be answered in the present census are of a very personal nature; and

Whereas the Congress has also decreed that a criminal penalty be imposed upon persons refusing to answer said questions or who give false information: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, memorialized to amend this legislation so that the personal questions may be eliminated from the questionnaire and the criminal penalty abolished; and be it further.

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That copies of this resolution be immediately transmitted to the President and to each United States Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives of the United States elected from the State of New York, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C.

By order of the senate.

In assembly, March 6, 1940: Concurred in without amendment.
By order of the assembly.

ANSLEY B. BORKOWSKI, Clerk.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein the resolution referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that is a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of New York with reference to the taking of the census?

Mr. O'BRIEN. No. It objects to some of the personal questions.

Mr. RANKIN. Just the Senate of the State of New York passed it?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. That is a Republican Senate?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not object to your inserting anything they might say; it will not affect anything.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'BRIEN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

UNITED AMERICA, PART 5

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, in article I, section 8, of the Constitution specific powers are granted to Congress in these words, "Congress shall have the power to," and the power is then stated.

In section 9 specific powers are denied Congress with the word "no" or the words "shall not," which are entirely restrictive, and then the restrictions are stated.

In section 10 restrictions of powers of the States are expressed in the words "No State shall," followed by explicit statements as to matters prohibited.

It follows, therefore, that article I, sections 8, 9, and 10, are written into the Constitution to clarify all powers granted or denied by the Constitution to Congress and to the States for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States.

Article I, section 9, of which I shall now quote one paragraph, deals entirely with restrictions imposed upon Congress by all the United States in order to protect the rights of the State:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

The founders of our country, foreseeing problems which might confront our Nation, wisely incorporated this provision in the Constitution. Why was this stipulation made? It was made in order to furnish pertinent information to the public as to expenditures and the purpose of such expenditures, not only of money appropriated by Congress but of all moneys appropriated, earned, or collected by the Federal Government, its departments, bureaus, and the many new Federal-owned corporations over which Congress unfortunately has no control except in appropriation of money.

This provision of the Constitution has been and is being violated by Congress, by the executive department, and by the extraconstitutional Federal corporations which have been created by special acts of Congress, and for which there is no legal authority.

The question should be asked: Are appropriations for these Federal-owned corporations made according to law? And the answer is "No," for these corporations are, as I have said, extraconstitutional, and therefore illegal. The Constitution provides that a regular statement and account of receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time; the purpose of this is to give those who furnish the money, namely, the taxpayers of the United States, an opportunity to be informed as to what the Government is doing with their money.

Congress alone is responsible for the glaring violations of the Constitution that have resulted in the chaotic condition in which we find our Nation today. But when I say that Congress alone is responsible, I do not absolve the public, for it is the people who elect these incompetent officials to office. The people should therefore take care that Members represent the wishes of the people and not the wishes of a political machine.

I shall now, to bring home the pernicious evil of political power, quote from the Gold Reserve Act, section 3699, section 10B:

> To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of the receipts which are directed to be covered into the Treasury under section 7 hereof, the sum of $2,000,000,000, which sum when available shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in a stabilization fund (hereinafter called the fund) under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States.

Did Congress conform to the Constitution when it set aside $2,000,000,000 in gold and said that this money should be "under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, whose decisions shall be final and not subject to review by any other officer of the United States"? Certainly not! Congress did not give the Constitution the slightest consideration, and neither did the Supreme Court when it upheld this act.

It is acts of this sort—and do not forget that there are many of them—which are now causing disintegration of industries and business. How can this be corrected? It can only be corrected when the Members in both Houses of Congress adhere to their obligation "to preserve, to protect, and defend" the rights of the people, as set forth in the Constitution of the United States.

Let us now proceed to consider article I, section 10. In this section the 48 United States deny certain rights to each State exactly in the same manner and with the same intent as the 48 States reserve the rights to themselves and to the people of this great Nation to regulate their own affairs.

It is not my desire to dwell too long on section 10, but allow me to call your attention to a part of paragraph 1:

No State shall * * * coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

Did Congress adhere to this paragraph in section 10 when the Gold Reserve Act was passed? It did not, for the people were not only deprived of gold and gold-secured investments, but Congress made it a criminal offense for the people, for you and me, to be secured by gold, which is not only our own property but is even more valuable and useful than real estate, as it represents a standard value in every country in the world.

What are we using for money today? We are using inflated currency or the so-called commodity or managed dollar with less inherent value than the wampum used by the Indians a thousand years ago. This is not all, for the people in the United States have been degraded to the point where they are now compelled to use blue and yellow checks for money to obtain the necessities of life, and this in the richest country in the world.

The present chaotic state is not due to the obsolescence of the Constitution, but is instead entirely due to the fact that our own Government does not adhere to it.

Members of Congress should read article I, sections 8, 9, and 10, for these sections clearly state, as I have already said, the powers delegated to Congress, the powers denied to Congress, and the powers which the States have denied to themselves. We, the Members of Congress should, for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States, be honorable enough not to betray this trust which the people have placed in us.

The 1940 election is now coming up and the people should, in their own interest, give consideration to the future of our Nation. To protect their own rights they should insist that every Member elected to Congress make a solemn promise that he will repeal all unconstitutional legislation now enacted into law, and that he will repeal all the extra-constitutional powers granted to the President of the United States, so that he may conform to article II. The people should also insist that the candidates elected for office promise to impeach all public officials who do not adhere to their oath of obligation in the true meaning of the oath. It is only in this manner that the Government can be cleaned of the rot which is infiltrating every Federal department. If this is done, we will restore the fundamental principles of this Republic as set forth in the Constitution of the United States. What does this mean? It means nothing less than that industries will operate, furnishing employment to those who are now idle, with gradual rehabilitation, recovery, and prosperity to our people.

The opportunity to clean Congress of dead timber comes up every 2 years, and it is a public duty to remove this "for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States."

WHAT ARE THE RIGHTS OF THE STATE?

It is the right of the State to be administered by a government elected by its own citizens according to the State constitution.

It is a further right of the State to be represented in the Senate of the United States by 2 Senators, who, in conjunction with 94 Senators from the other 47 States, are the Government of the United States of America. Each State is a sovereign Commonwealth within itself, operating under its own laws within its own borders. The Federal Government, or the Government of the United States, is composed of 2 representatives from each of the 48 Commonwealths, whose power is no greater than that granted in articles I, II, and III. It is, however, well to bear in mind that the people have not only reserved the unwritten power in the Constitution to the States and to themselves, but they have in addition to that reserved all written power to the States and to themselves which are not clearly delegated to the Government in the Constitution of the United States. I quote amendments 9 and 10:

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

It should be clear from this that the only power assigned to Congress is that set forth in the Constitution of the United States. This power is clearly defined in article I, section 8, restricted in article I, section 9, and further clarified in article I, section 10, until it should be sufficiently clear even for Members of Congress to understand.

Congressional meddling within the States is clearly limited in article I, section 8, paragraph 3:

Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce * * * among the several States.

It should be clear from this that the only power assigned to Congress is to regulate commerce among the several States, which must be confined to establishing such measures as will protect passengers, crew, and freight. Let it be understood, however, that the Constitution does not give power to Congress to enact legislation that in any sense interferes with or restricts the private capital structure of business within the State. It is therefore clearly within the right of the State to regulate its own business entirely free from all Federal interference and meddling. The State may provide laws for banking and operate banks under the laws of the State. The Constitution makes it imperative that nothing but gold and silver shall be used in payment of debts, and when Congress deprived the State of this right it betrayed the people. All these rights must be restored for the general welfare of our own people and for the security of our Nation.

I may say at this point that article I, section 8, provides that Congress shall have the power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." Let me say further that Congress still retains the power to coin money, but can no longer regulate value since the Gold Reserve Act was adopted in 1934. What Members of Congress fail to understand is that the people reserve the right to the States and to themselves to own and operate banks and to own and use gold for money. This is no more than right, because it is only by the use of stabilized and secured currency that investments may be protected. Industries and businesses cannot operate successfully without universally recognized sound currency. When industry and business are deprived of this medium of protection we can only expect unemployment. It is for this reason that each State must own banks and have the use of internationally standardized money. The very life of this Republic depends upon 48 independent State governments, directing the Government of the United States in its foreign relationships and among the several States.

This arrangement was not only just, but it was indeed wise, for that administration of State governments becomes a training school for those who eventually must assume their positions in the Government of the United States. In maintaining State rights and the freedom of the State government to administer the affairs of the State, Federal cost is reduced in direct proportion to the efficiency of the 48 States. It is therefore possible, under efficient State governments, that the Federal Government will only be required to administrate the United States Government in foreign relationships and to adjust differences when such arise among the several States.

Under the present system we are not only faced with an ever-increasing cost in State governments but we are also submerged by an unwarrantable increase in costs of Federal administration, all of which are responsible for closed factories, stagnant business, and industrial unemployment.

It is we, the people, that pay the expenses of the Government, and when the cost reaches such proportions that it can no longer be controlled, nothing but national bankruptcy can be expected.

Mr. Speaker, in previous remarks I have discussed parts of articles IV, V, VI, and VII, so I shall refrain from entering into an extensive discussion at this time. However, it is my desire to call attention to article IV, section 3, from which I quote:

> That Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

I have taken the liberty of quoting this paragraph because the Philippine Islands are to receive their independence in 1946.

It is my desire to say at this point that Congress has no power to dispose of these islands and set up a foreign state without obtaining the consent of the United States. Each and every State in our Union owns a forty-eighth interest in the Philippine Islands, and the consent of the States must, therefore, be obtained first, before Congress can dispose of this property.

Since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, the State government cannot give such consent, but it must, instead, be obtained from the majority of the electorate in the State, the same people that elect the Senators and Representatives to office. It is true that previous to the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, the State legislature could have given such approval to its United States Senators, but this condition no longer exists, for the State has lost its representation in the Senate of the United States.

What is the people's interest in territories? The people's interest may be found in the fact that they pay the expenses of the Federal Government, and they are paying for the Spanish-American War, and should, for that reason, if no other, be consulted before being deprived of their own property.

The point I wish to make is that the Philippine Islands could become a very productive colony under the proper management. If the Philippine Islands were administered like other colonies, the islands would pay not only for their own protection, but actual dividends from business, and a greater dividend as protection to the west coast of the United States.

We cannot, however, expect any colonies to be operated successfully when under supervision of political parties. It can only end like all other things which are under political supervision; namely, in a complete and dismal failure.

The people have been entirely too dilatory in asserting their rights and must, for their own protection, insist, as I have already said, that Congress adhere to its obligations as set forth in the Constitution.

It is high time that all Federal branches and departments take notice that the people of this Nation are still the supreme power, and when important issues arise the people must be consulted before drastic changes are made. We are indeed in a deplorable state, which, I believe, the people are beginning to realize. We must have a change, and it should be based upon the rights and protection the people have reserved to themselves in the ninth and tenth amendments.

Our Nation cannot be rehabilitated by the constitutional saboteurs now employed in many Government branches and departments. Our Nation will not be rehabilitated by those in society, for many of them are internationalists. It is up to us, the so-called common or middle class, to set this Nation right, so let us join hands and, shoulder to shoulder, unite for the return of sound constitutional government.

ECONOMY—WHERE HAS IT GONE?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and I further ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein House Resolution 28 of the Seventy-third Congress with regard to the Economy Committee, as well as an excerpt from the message of the President of the United States appearing in the RECORD of March 10, 1933.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, who wrote that resolution?

Mr. RICH. The Democratic administration in power at that time.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman mean he is going to insert a resolution of a previous Congress?

Mr. RICH. It is about 2 inches long, and it is in regard to the Economy Committee. Where is it? Where has it gone? We want to find the Democratic Economy Committee.

Mr. RANKIN. It is one of the resolutions passed back in 1933?

Mr. RICH. It was passed by the House in 1933. It is called House Resolution 28, and takes up about 2 inches of the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. It is already in the RECORD?

Mr. RICH. It is in the RECORD of March 10, 1933, and it deals with what is called the Economy Committee. I am trying to find any economy in this administration. I am unable to do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

House Resolution 28

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a select committee of five Members of the House of Representatives to be known as the Economy Committee, for the purpose of considering and reporting upon the subject matter contained in the message of the President of the United States of March 10, 1933. The said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress or of either House thereof. Said Economy Committee is hereby authorized to report to the House at any time, by bill or otherwise, its recommendations upon any matters covered by this resolution; and any bills so reported shall be placed upon the calendar and have a privileged status.

Mr. RICH. What happened to the Economy Committee? Now, Members of the House, let me place here the statement of F. D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, to Congress March 10, 1933, and I quote:

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

For the fiscal year 1931 the deficit was $462,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1932 it was $2,472,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1933 it will probably exceed $1,200,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1934, based on the appropriation bills passed by the last Congress and the estimated revenues, the deficit will probably exceed $1,000,000,000 unless immediate action is taken.

Thus we shall have piled up an accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000.

With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed. Our Government's house is not in order, and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.

Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rests the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects these fundamental human values. It therefore becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

It is too late for a leisurely approach to this problem. We must not wait to act several months hence. The emergency is accentuated by the necessity of meeting great refunding operations this spring.

We must move with a direct and resolute purpose now. The Members of Congress and I are pledged to immediate economy.

Oh, how he repudiated these promises. Oh, where is the Economy Committee set-up? Where, oh where, has it gone? Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that this Economy Committee ought to be functioning. Why not bring it back to life again? I also wish to call attention to the fact that in the President's message he made this memorable statement:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

I want to show you that today the administration has taken you for 7 long years on the road to bankruptcy, and that the Economy Committee has not functioned as it should. Today you are $2,689,000,000 more in the red since the 1st of July, last. You will be close to four billion before July 1, next, and that is near the deficit in the 3 long years the President referred to. Why does not the President do as he said he would do? Why did he completely change? Why the somersault? In the 7 long years in which the President has been handling the affairs of the Nation he has had a great deficit each year. He has been the greatest spender and squanderer of public money the world has ever known. This administration has been carrying the Nation to the brink of the abyss, and we will soon go over. Where are you going to get the money? Where is this administration's economy? [Applause.]

EXPAND THE CURRENCY AND RESTORE PROSPERITY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania reminds me of the drunk fellows who paddled all night long trying to cross the Tennessee River, only to find the next morning that they had never untied their boat from the bank.

You will never balance this Budget on the present price levels. You never will get prosperity restored in this country until you restore the prices of farm commodities. You will never do it by borrowing from the rich and giving to the poor. You will never do it until you reverse the present monetary policy, and take some of that gold out of the ground and issue currency against it and put it into circulation, without paying interest on it. We should issue our own money, and issue enough of it to bring farm prices back to 20-cent cotton and $2 wheat. Until you do that you will never restore prosperity in this country. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article that recently appeared in the New York Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein resolutions adopted by the United States Live Stock Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD in connection with my remarks at this point in parallel columns the present N. L. R. A., the amendments proposed to that act by the Smith committee, and the bill H. R. 4990, introduced on March 13, 1939.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman think it ought to be printed in the Appendix and not in the body of the RECORD?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is immaterial to me. The point I wish to call to the attention of the House is that such material will exceed the regular limitation if the material is printed in the Appendix in the way I have requested, because there will be blank spaces in the RECORD that will take more space than it would take if inserted in the usual manner.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will modify his request so that the matter will appear in the Appendix of the RECORD, I shall not object.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all right with me, but I want the House to know that this will cost more than the regular amount; that is all. I do not need to get an estimate if I put the material in the body of the RECORD, but if you put it in the Appendix you do. I have the estimate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very brief editorial from the Washington News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Postmaster General Farley, with an introductory statement by the Governor of Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this afternoon, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following the last special order heretofore entered, which is that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

REFUND OF PROCESSING TAX

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to call the attention of the House to the fact that I have today placed on the Speaker's table discharge petition No. 25, which would discharge the Committee on Agriculture from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 66, and bring it before us for immediate action.

As most of you know, this resolution provides for the refund of the processing tax on hogs marketed for slaughter by the raisers and producers while they were paying this tax, which was later declared to be unconstitutional. The average claim due to the farmers of America who have a claim before the Government is $433.

This resolution has been before the Committee on Agriculture since August 5, and I think it is time we gave justice to these farmers by paying back to them the unjust taxes which they have paid the Federal Government. I urge all Members to sign this discharge petition so that this Government may keep faith with the American farmer. I shall have more to say on this subject at a later date and I expect to provide this House with ample evidence to demonstrate the justice and equity of refunding these taxes which were illegally collected from the farmers of America.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD at this point Senate Joint Resolution 66, so the Members may be fully informed about the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution making provisions for the refund of the processing tax on hogs marketed for slaughter by the raisers and producers who in fact bore all or part of the burden of such tax

Whereas the Agricultural Adjustment Act, levying a processing tax, has been held unconstitutional and said processing tax as previously assessed on hogs marketed for slaughter was in fact charged to the raisers and producers and was deducted from the market price of such hogs paid to such raisers and producers; and

Whereas provisions were made under title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 for the refund to the processors of such part of the tax only, which they in fact bore and did not shift to the consumers or the raisers and producers; and

Whereas neither title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 nor any other act made provision for a refund of such processing tax to the raisers and producers of hogs, who in fact bore the burden of such tax on hogs marketed for slaughter: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That any person who raised or produced and marketed hogs for slaughter on which there was levied, collected, or paid a processing tax, under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, prior to the time that such act was held unconstitutional, or his legal representative, may have such tax, or part thereof, refunded to him, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, or to the satisfaction of the Board of Review, or the trial court, as the case may be, under provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936, insofar as such title may be applicable, that all or part of the burden of such processing tax was in fact charged to and borne by such person and was in fact deducted from the market price of such hogs. The amount of refund of such processing tax to which any claimant shall be entitled with respect to any particular quantity of hogs marketed shall be an amount equal to the processing tax payable upon the processing of an equal quantity of hogs at the time such particular quantity of hogs was marketed minus any amount by which the spread between the average hog-product value at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed and the average hog price at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed was less than the amount of such processing tax plus 65 cents. The account sales kept by the vendor, or by the vendee, or by an agent of either, shall be accepted as proof when properly identified. Any claimant may prove his claim under the provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936, insofar as such title may be applicable, and shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits, including the right of review and appeal, provided for by title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 insofar as such title may be applicable: Provided, however, That such claim, if not previously filed, must be filed with the Commissioner at Washington, D. C., within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, and proof must be submitted on any and all claims within 18 months from such date in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner. No fees shall be charged for filing any such claim. It shall not be necessary that the claimant be represented by an attorney.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I have filed with the Clerk of the House today two petitions, one signed by Mr. James Logan and 29 others and one by Zoe Thompson and 30 others, all residents of my district, petitioning the Seventy-sixth Congress to enact the General Welfare Act, H. R. 5620, for the purpose of relieving the suffering of our needy citizens over 60 years of age and providing prosperity for America.

This proposed law, known as the General Welfare Act, is supported by a large group of citizens, and many members of this House have signed the petition to bring the measure upon the floor.

It is practically conceded by all that unemployment is the major economic problem confronting us as a Nation. We have not solved it. It is closely allied with old-age assistance and with the farm problem. The farmers raise the food which the old people and the unemployed need to sustain themselves and their families but which they cannot buy by reason of unemployment. Employment gives jobs; jobs give purchasing power; purchasing power gives markets; markets give prosperity to the farmer. The farmers make up 25 percent of our population and yet they get only 11 percent of our national income. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Bureau of Home Economics, and the National Resources Committee recently made a study of incomes in the United States during 1935 and 1936. It covered 126,000,000 people, consisting of 29,400,000 families and 10,000,000 single persons. The report of this study shows that 4,000,000 families, or 14 percent, had an average income of $312 a year. Eight million families, or 27.5 percent, had an average income of $758 per year. Seven million families, or 23 percent, had an average income of $1,224. Thus, nearly two-thirds of our families had incomes of less than $1,500 and the average was only $826 a year, or $69 a month for a whole family.

This is less than half of the requirements for a minimum standard of living. These studies further disclose that the 14 percent of these families with the lowest income, namely, $312 on the average, are spending approximately $1 per person for food per week to keep body and soul together. Those in the next group with an average income of $758 spend 62 percent more for food and those with an average income of $1,224 spend 118 percent more for food per week than those in the lowest-income group. These studies show the close interrelationship between assistance for our old people, employment of those out of work, and markets for farmers. Industry has discarded workers over 60 years of age and very few of them are self-supporting.

The Supreme Court recently said:

> Congress did not improvise a judgment when it found that an award of old-age benefits would be conducive to the general welfare. * * * The plight of men and women at so low as 40 is hard, almost hopeless, when they are driven to seek for reemployment. Statistics are in the brief. A few illustrations will be chosen from many there collected. In 1930, out of 224 American factories investigated, 71 or almost one-third, had fixed maximum hiring age limits; in 4 plants the limit was under 40; in 41 it was under 46; in the other 153 plants there were no fixed limits, but in practice few were hired if they were over 50 years of age. With the loss of savings inevitable in periods of idleness, the fate of workers over 65, when thrown out of work, is little less than desperate. A recent study of the Social Security Board informs us that one-fifth of the aged in the United States were receiving old-age assistance, emergency relief, institutional care, or private funds; two-fifths to one-half were dependent on friends and relatives; one-eighth had some income from earnings; and possibly one-sixth had some savings or property. Approximately 3 out of 4 persons 65 or over were probably dependent wholly or partially on others for support.

Many students of these perplexing problems have come to the conclusion that the solution to the economic and social problems which are keeping America down is:

First. To provide a Nation-wide program for assistance to our old people, which will give them purchasing power as well as the means to sustain themselves.

Second. To put back on private pay rolls the 10 or 12 million unemployed, and Third. To provide a market and parity prices for farmers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein a short article on the wool situation in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit two requests.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a letter to me from the Academic and Civil Rights Council of California, and my reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, my second request is to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a recent brief address by Philip Bancroft, of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE LATE EDWARD W. PATTERSON

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad and solemn duty to announce that on the 7th day of this month the Grim Reaper struck from the rolls of the living, Edward W. Patterson, of Pittsburg, Kans., former Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Patterson, or "Pat," as he was affectionately known to those who were intimately acquainted with him, was an outstanding Democrat in Kansas. He served as prosecuting attorney of Crawford County, Kans., and from 1935 to 1939 represented the Third Congressional District of Kansas in Congress, being the only Democrat to represent the Third District of Kansas in the past 36 years. Those of you who associated with him in the Seventy-fourth Congress and Seventy-fifth Congress will recall his integrity, his sincerity of purpose, and his loyal devotion to his party and his friends. Those who knew him personally have lost a friend.

To his good wife and family our hearts go out in sympathy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an address given by Senator STYLES BRIDGES in Phoenix, Ariz., on February 21, 1940.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, an address by whom?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Senator STYLES BRIDGES.

Mr. RANKIN. Is he a State senator in the Arizona Legislature or a United States Senator?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Senator STYLES BRIDGES, of New Hampshire.

Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter addressed to the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, concerning the St. Lawrence seaway project.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein a short article from the Milwaukee Sentinel regarding milk prices.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject Have We Helped the Wheat Farmer?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—SWANSON AGAINST HARRINGTON

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have considered at this time. The report is unanimous.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 419

Resolved, That Albert F. Swanson is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Seventy-sixth Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of Iowa.

Resolved, That Vincent F. Harrington is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Seventy-sixth Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include a report of the Sedgwick County, Kans., Medical Association on a plan for medical care.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter received from the councilor of the Polish Embassy, to which is attached a copy of a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs relative to the present Polish relief situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a resolution of the Polish Army Veterans Association of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to have placed in the Appendix of the RECORD a resolution regarding the condemnation and execution of the mayor of the city of Warsaw, Poland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a letter written by the United Dairy Workers, signed by Kenneth L. Vardon, with two copies of letters, if the gentleman who has written them will consent to have them placed in the RECORD; that is, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, because I would like to see what the letters are.

Mr. LESINSKI. It is a letter written by the gentleman from Michigan to George McLean, recording secretary of the United Dairy Workers, and a reply to Mr. HOFFMAN by Kenneth L. Vardon.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the privilege of looking them over first, because I do not know what they are.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that last request temporarily.

INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE, AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that Public Resolution No. 254, approved August 7, 1935 (49 Stat. 540), be amended by repealing section 2 of the resolution which terminates the provisions of the resolution as of June 30, 1941; so as to provide an annual appropriation to meet the share of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and for participation in the meetings of the committee and the commissions established by that committee.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 8, 1940.

AMERICAN YOUTH CONGRESS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith a privileged resolution, House Resolution 402, together with a report thereon from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 402

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives all such information as he may possess, or which may be available in the War Department and which will show, or tend to show—

(a) Whether at any time 3 days prior to or 3 days after the 10th day of February 1940 the War Department furnished lodging, transportation, or sustenance to any person who represented himself to be, or was represented by some other person to be, a member of the organization known as the American Youth Congress, or to any person who was in Washington in attendance at any of the meetings held by the American Youth Congress.

(b) If lodging, transportation, or sustenance was furnished to any such person or persons, the number of such persons to whom it was furnished, and a statement of what was furnished such persons.

(c) The name of the person or persons at whose request such lodging, transportation, or sustenance was furnished.

(d) Whether the War Department has been reimbursed for the cost of such lodging, transportation, or sustenance.

(e) To what account the cost of such lodging, transportation, or sustenance was charged.

(f) Under what authority or by virtue of what law such lodging, transportation, or sustenance was furnished.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee on the resolution be also read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report to accompany House Resolution 402

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House Resolution 402, requesting that information be furnished concerning accommodations furnished certain members of the American Youth Congress during the recent meeting held in Washington, D. C., having considered the same, submit the following report thereon, with the recommendation that it do not pass:

The action of the committee is based upon a letter from the Secretary of War of date of March 11, 1940. Other information on file in the rooms of the Committee on Military Affairs for examination by Members of Congress shows that the War Department was at no expense in connection therewith.

Attached hereto and made a part hereof is a letter from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 11, 1940.

Hon. ANDREW J. MAY,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MAY: This is in response to your request, dated March 6, 1940, for information in connection with House Resolution No. 402, concerning accommodations furnished certain members of the American Youth Congress during the recent meetings held in Washington.

A careful search of the records of the War Department has resulted in failure to disclose any record of the receipt of any request from this organization. However, inquiry of the commanding officer at Fort Myer, Va., elicits the following:

It appears that on the night of Saturday, February 10, 1940, an appeal was made directly to Fort Myer from the White House that certain members of this youth organization be permitted to sleep there, no previous arrangements having been made for their housing. It was a cold, rainy night; War Department offices were closed; and in view of the emergency conditions, some 95 or 100 persons were permitted to occupy cots in the riding hall at Fort Myer, each cot being supplied with 2 blankets. The following night, Sunday, 6 were furnished similar accommodations in the local guardhouse.

The authorities at Fort Myer advised me that reimbursement has been made of all funds expended and that every item of Government property used has been properly accounted for to them. This being the case, no charge is outstanding against any account.

The action taken at Fort Myer was by virtue of the authority reposing in any military commander to relieve distress in cases of emergency.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] stated to me that he has no objection to placing his letters in the Appendix of the RECORD. I therefore renew my request that I may place in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter written by the United Dairy Workers and two letters attached.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to state that I have no objection.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day. The Chair recognizes the acting chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 465) authorizing the granting of permits to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I know that will be perfectly satisfactory on this side to make preparation for that inauguration, because we will have a Republican as sure as the sun rises tomorrow morning. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, and such other officers of the District of Columbia and the United States as control any public lands in the District of Columbia, are hereby authorized to grant permits, under such restrictions as they may deem necessary, to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies to be appointed with the approval of the President-elect for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the District of Columbia under their control on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941: Provided, That in their opinion no serious or permanent injuries will be thereby inflicted upon such reservations or public spaces or statuary thereon; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes, on the occasion aforesaid, such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District of Columbia under their control as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands or platforms that may be erected on the public space, as aforesaid, including such as may be erected in connection with the display of fireworks, shall be under the said supervision of the said inaugural committee, and no stand shall be built on the sidewalk, streets, parks, and public grounds of the District of Columbia, not including the area on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue directly in front of the White House, except such as are approved by the inaugural committee, the building inspector of the District of Columbia, and the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the reservations or public spaces occupied by the stands or other structures shall, after the inauguration, be promptly restored to their condition before such occupation, and that the inaugural committee shall indemnify the appropriate agency of the Government for any damages of any kind whatsoever upon such reservations or spaces by reason of such use.

SEC. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the inaugural committee for said inaugural ceremonies to stretch suitable overhead conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary, for the purpose of connecting with the present supply of light for the purpose of effecting the said illumination: Provided, That, if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illuminating or other purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia, the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the official in charge of said park or reservation: Provided further, That the said conductors shall not be used for conveying electrical currents after January 24, 1941, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said District of Columbia on or before January 31, 1941: Provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or such other officials as may have jurisdiction in the premises, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced, that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public, and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: And provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to the stretching, operation, or removal of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies such hospital tents, smaller tents, camp appliances, ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States (except battle flags), that are not now in use and may be suitable and proper for decoration, and which may, in their judgment, be spared without detriment to the public service, such flags to be used in connection with said ceremonies by said committee under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the said Secretaries, or either of them, in decorating the fronts of public buildings and other places on the line of march between the Capitol and the Executive Mansion, and the interior of the reception hall: Provided, That the loan of the said hospital tents, smaller tents, camp appliances, ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., to said committee shall not take place prior to the 11th of January, and they shall be returned by the 25th day of January 1941: Provided further, That the said committee shall indemnify the said Departments, or either of them, for any loss or damage to such flags not necessarily incident to such use. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the inaugural committee for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of said inauguration such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as, in his judgment, may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the inauguration: And provided further, That the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any loss or damage to such hospital tents and appliances, as aforesaid, not necessarily incident to such use.

SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit telegraph, telephone, and radio-broadcasting companies to extend overhead wires to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural purposes, the said wires to be taken down within 10 days after the conclusion of the ceremonies.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I offer three amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 3, after the word "That", strike out "the Secretary of the Interior" and insert in lieu thereof "the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 19, after the word "and", strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "Administrator of the Federal Works Agency."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, whoever prepared this resolution and report labored under a delusion, as witness this language:

To maintain public order and protect life and property in the District of Columbia from January 15 to January 26, both inclusive.

That phraseology——

Mr. SCHULTE. May I say to the gentleman that he has the wrong report.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am reading from House Joint Resolution 466.

Mr. SCHULTE. House Joint Resolution 465 is the resolution under consideration.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is this not for the inauguration?

Mr. SCHULTE. House Joint Resolution 465 is the resolution under consideration.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, I will go on. Of course, if this were going to be a New Deal inauguration you would probably need $25,000 and more to maintain law and order and to protect life and property, but let me say to the distinguished chairman that this will be a Republican inauguration. [Applause.] We are not going to need a dollar to maintain law and order because the people are going to come here with hearts full of thankfulness because on that day we will strike the shackles of the New Deal from their hands and feet, and liberate them just like Abraham Lincoln liberated the colored man back in 1862. [Applause.]

Of course, I am for the resolution but I want to see the money spent in celebrating that great event, not in repressing a natural feeling of joy and exaltation over the end of 8 long and expensive years.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I will say that if the trend continues as it is, we will need more than the appropriation that is asked for, in view of the fact that everybody in the United States wants to come here to Washington to see President Roosevelt be inaugurated for a third term. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 5, line 17, after the word "and", strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert in lieu thereof "Administrator of the Federal Works Agency."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURAL CEREMONIES, 1941

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 466) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the Presidential inaugural ceremonies of 1941, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia, is hereby authorized to be appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from January 15 to January 26, 1941, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services, payment of allowances, traveling expenses, hire of means of transportation, cost of removing and relocating streetcar loading platforms; for the construction, rent, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comfort stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, during the period aforesaid, and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the Commissioners. Said Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period; and to grant, under such conditions as they may impose, special licenses to peddlers and vendors to sell goods, wares, and merchandise on the streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the District of Columbia, and to charge for such privilege such fees as they may deem proper.

SEC. 2. Such regulations and licenses shall be in force 1 week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and 1 week subsequent therto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia and in such other manner as the Commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with the same; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until 5 days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine of not to exceed $100 in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING ACT TO REGULATE ADOPTION PROCEEDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7084) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in adoption in the District of Columbia," approved August 25, 1937, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to regulate proceeding in adoption in the District of Columbia" be amended by adding thereto the following new sentence: "If the birth occurred outside of the District of Columbia, the clerk of the court shall, upon petition by the adopter, furnish him with a certified copy of the final decree of adoption."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAMSBURG LANE

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8639) to change the name of a portion of Twenty-fourth Street NW. to Williamsburg Lane, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of that portion of the street in the District of Columbia now known as Twenty-fourth Street NW., which begins at Porter Street and extends one block in a northerly direction to Rock Creek Park, is hereby changed to Williamsburg Lane.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONGRESSIONAL AUTOMOBILE TAGS

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7114) to amend paragraph (c) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, as amended by act approved February 27, 1931, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso of paragraph (c), section 6, of the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, as amended by the act approved February 27, 1931, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided further, That such congressional tags shall be valid only for the session of Congress in which such tags are so issued, and it shall be unlawful to display such congressional tags for a period longer than sixty days after the expiration of the session in which such congressional tags are issued.

"At the expiration of the said sixty-day period it shall be unlawful to display such tags and the Commissioners shall be authorized and empowered to order removal of any such tags from any motor vehicle so displayed.

"Any person violating this section shall be fined not more than $300 or imprisoned not more than 90 days, or both."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "session of."

Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "session in which such congressional tags are issued" and insert in lieu thereof "next Congress."

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "sixty-day" and insert in lieu thereof "fifteen-day."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8694) to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia," approved May 29, 1928, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I want to compliment the Committee on the District of Columbia for reporting out this bill which will enable us in the Nation's Capital to see some very fine dramas we have been precluded from seeing because of present legislation which prevents children from acting in any place in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8470) to amend section 6 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I want the RECORD to show that this bill provides an appeal to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board of those dealers refused a license. Is that true?

Mr. SCHULTE. That is correct. It provides for an appeal to the Commissioners.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. That is what I mean, an appeal to the Commissioners from the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

Mr. SCHULTE. That is right.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Is any plan under consideration whereby an appeal may be taken by those protesting the issuance of a license?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to my friend from Michigan that the matter was called to the attention of the committee this morning. It was pointed out that no provision had been made for an appeal by protestants to the issuance of licenses. It was the consensus of the committee's opinion that probably there might be some merit to the amendment, but since the bill was already on the calendar and since it would have necessitated the offering of an amendment from the floor, which amendment would be rather long, the committee felt that perhaps it would be better to pass the bill in its present form allowing the amendment to be put on in the Senate.

I will say to the gentleman that I know of no opposition in the committee to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia," approved January 24, 1934, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The right, power, and jurisdiction to issue, transfer, revoke, and suspend all licenses under this act shall be vested solely in the Board, and the action of the Board on any question of fact shall be final and conclusive; except that, in case an application for a license is denied to one who has previously held a license of the same class for the same premises as applied for in said application, or, in case a license is revoked, or is suspended by the Board, the applicant or licensee may, within 10 days after the order of denial, or the order of revocation, or the order of suspension is entered appeal in writing to the Commissioners to review said action of the Board, the hearings on said appeal to be submitted either orally or in writing at the discretion of the Commissioners, and the Commissioners shall not be required to take evidence, either oral, written, or documentary. The decision of the Commissioners on any question of fact involved in such appeal shall be final and conclusive. Pending such appeal from an order of revocation or suspension, the license shall stand suspended unless the Commissioners shall otherwise order.

"That the right and power be vested in the Board, for good cause shown, to issue permits for the sales of stocks of beverages located in the District of Columbia by individuals, corporations, or associations, partnerships, executors, administrators, being owners thereof, receivers or other representatives of a court, to persons licensed under this act.

"Said Board shall have such other authority and perform such other duties as the Commissioners may, by regulation, prescribe."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. In the event of the absence of the Speaker for the next 3 legislative days, the Chair designates the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] as the Speaker pro tempore.

EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8694) to amend an act of Congress, entitled "An act to regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia," approved May 29, 1928, and I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of said bill. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that debate may be limited to 1 hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and 30 minutes by me.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 41]

Arnold	Douglas	Johnson, Lyndon	Sheridan
Barton	Drewry	Kerr	Simpson
Bates, Ky.	Evans	Lea	Smith, Ill.
Bates, Mass.	Fay	Lemke	Smith, Maine
Bell	Ferguson	McArdle	Starnes, Ala.

Darrow	Jarrett	Sabath	Youngdahl
DeRouen	Jeffries	Secrest
Dies	Jenks, N. H.	Seger

The SPEAKER. On the roll call 340 Members have answered to ther names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. SCHULTE, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana repeat his unanimous consent with reference to the time of debate?

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and one-half by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8694, with Mr. CELLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I feel I should take a few minutes at this time to explain the purposes of the pending legislation, as I believe there may be a misunderstanding among some of the Members as to just what it contains. Let me say at this time that this bill was reported out of the District of Columbia Committee 2 weeks ago by a unanimous vote of the membership present and may I say further, I am confident not one of those Members would think of voting for a measure which would be harmful to children or which would in any way break down the child laws now on the statute books.

The opposition to this bill will tell you that what a great many are trying to do is take children out of the homes and place them at hard labor, but this is not true. The only thing we are trying to do is allow these children to go on the stages and show their ability and they can only do this when they have received permission from the school authorities.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to issue a work permit to any minor so that such minor may appear on the stage of a duly licensed theater in the District of Columbia in any professional traveling theatrical production or in a musical recital or concert providing the minor shall not appear after 11 p. m. nor more than 4 hours in 1 day. The Board of Education must see that the production is not offensive to public decency and that the parent or guardian has made provision for adequate educational instruction and for the safeguarding of the child's health and morals.

I might emphasize at this point that the bill states:

on the stage of a duly licensed theater in any professional traveling theatrical production or in a musical recital or concert.

It would in no way allow children to appear in night clubs, cabarets, or any other places which might be objectionable. Also, the bill requires a permit from the Board of Education before any minor can appear, and gives the Board the right to refuse such permit if, in its opinion, it would be harmful to the child to issue it.

We all know that there have been many splendid theatrical productions which required the appearance of a child in some scene or other. Just as an example I might mention The American Way, which ran for many months in New York last year, and which in my mind every American should see.

However, under existing law, this and many others could not be brought to Washington because of the minors who took part. As a result, the people of Washington who can afford it travel to Baltimore, New York, and other points to see these productions which they do not want to miss. I do not believe it is fair to our local theatergoers or theater owners to prohibit them from having these productions at home.

I hope the Members of this House will consider the bill on its merits and know that your committee has given it very careful consideration from every angle. We feel it should be passed.

I also might mention here that we have in our body a very distinguished colleague, a friend of practically everyone here, who grew up as a child in the theater, and, I might say, was raised in a trunk backstage. No one will deny the fact that he is a great success in life.

I refer to my good friend the gentleman from New York, SOL BLOOM. I know of no man in this House who has more genuine friends or is better thought of or more respected than our colleague. I am mighty proud to number him among my very intimate friends, and I hope it will last so long as one or the other of us are on this earth. There are several other Members who were in the theatrical business during their childhood, and certainly no one will deny that they have been a success in life. Some of the greatest actors we have on the stage and screen today were practically born on the stage, and, in the parlance of the stage, were raised in a trunk. Certainly no one will deny that they are a success. I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield to my good friend and distinguished colleague.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it not a fact that under this bill no child will appear after 11 o'clock?

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLOOM. Furthermore, the manuscript of the play must be submitted with the application so the School Board may be shown what kind of a play it is in which the child will appear?

Mr. SCHULTE. That is right. It is similar to the situation that applies to the plays the children appear in today that are fostered by the teachers in the various schools and by various church organizations.

Mr. BLOOM. Without this legislation a child cannot appear either in concert as a pianist or violinist or on the radio or the stage?

Mr. SCHULTE. No; they cannot.

Mr. BLOOM. Under this bill must the children be 14 years of age?

Mr. SCHULTE. No; they may be of any age.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we have a very restrictive child-labor act in the District of Columbia. As a matter of fact, under existing law children under 18 who play professional concerts or recitals for gain cannot perform in the District of Columbia. This has been settled law, and it is rather rigidly enforced.

Some years ago the first effort was made to relax the restrictions and requirements of the existing act to make it possible for children to appear on the stage. I believe I fought shoulder to shoulder with some of the Members of the House at that time. We engaged in hefty rhetorical battle all afternoon, with the result that the bill was defeated. Now it is back here, and I find myself approaching this measure with rather mixed emotions.

I have a daughter 11 years old. I can imagine how much she would give and how far she would go to see Shirley Temple on the stage in person. But Shirley Temple cannot come to Washington, D. C., if she is under contract, because she is a performer for gain, and it would be a violation of the District Child Labor Act. I have wondered, therefore, at time, whether those whose names are household words in the theater profession might not by some device be brought around, because I think it has both cultural and informative value for the children of the country.

I did not share in the drawing of this bill but I do want to tell you how the matter was approached. Before child actors can perform there are certain requirements that must be met. They must make application to the school board or to an agency designated by the school board. The school board may require that a copy be submitted of the script that is to be used in connection with the performance or presentation of such child. I believe the "may require" is one of the weaknesses of the bill. The word "may" should be changed to the word "shall."

As I read this language, the school board can without cause deny the granting of a license or a permit to perform, and so there is reposed in a local body made up of local citizens certain rights of guardianship and stewardship. If there are any abuses, obviously it is to be expected that the Board would be responsive to the dictates and to the influences of the good mothers of the District of Columbia. I therefore regard that as something of a safeguard.

I do suggest, however, that on page 2, in line 12, the word "may" be changed to "shall" so that instead of letting it be permissive it is a mandatory requirement that the script must be submitted so that local citizens may take a look and see whether any abuses may be created.

Mr. SCHULTE. If the gentleman will yield, I may say there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BLOOM. It was in the original bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Probably some opposition comes up on this bill because no hearings were held. The bill has been in the Committee on the District of Columbia for a long time. The committee reported it out. Unfortunately, I was not in the committee session at the time, because of attendance in the House Appropriations Committee.

A great many leaders of civic groups and other organizations appeared before the committee this morning and indicated or expressed the hope that the bill might be returned to the committee for hearings. Of course, the answer of those who are proposing the bill is that it will have hearings over on the Senate side starting, perhaps, this week. So you may take your choice—there is the situation, with a local agency designated to issue the permits, the requirement that the manuscript must be submitted and authority to issue or deny a permit without any cause whatsoever. So there is at least some safeguarding in the pending measure which we did not find in the bill that came to us several years ago.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Does not this put Congress on record as favoring child labor? I have listened attentively to the speeches that both the gentlemen have made and I have not heard any positive argument why we should vote for this bill. The gentleman states that Shirley Temple might not come here and we might miss her. But Temple does not make personal appearances, I am told. The first gentleman said that men born and brought up on the stage have achieved success and have become Congressmen, but perhaps the men you mention might have become Presidents instead of Congressmen if they had not been forced as children to work in the theater. I see nothing positive in this bill that is going to benefit children.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 5 minutes and yield to the very distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to state that the wage and hour bill does not apply to stage or film children. So this has no effect upon that measure at all. The wage and hour bill specifically excludes them.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I must say to our charming colleague from Illinois, as I stated, this measure does not affect the existing restrictions in the District child-labor provision.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to say that this is a new subject to me, not having been informed until yesterday that such a bill was coming up. I am simply trying to bring to the attention of the House the fact that I have received numerous telephone calls from leading women in the District, women lawyers and welfare workers, who believe they should have the right to present their case because some of us, including myself, have not the experience, perhaps, that they have had.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I stated in the interest of absolute fairness that no hearings were held on this bill and that they preferred a request this morning to the committee that it be recommitted to the subcommittee for further hearings.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my colleague from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. There were hearings held on a bill identical to this measure in 1932, also in 1935, and the objections at that particular time are the same as those that are being offered today, and those particular groups represent themselves as self-appointed dictators in the District of Columbia and object to practically every piece of legislation that is presented to the Congress. They are professional objectors, I may say.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman, in my opinion, is one of the ablest legislators in this House——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And I want his opinion on whether or not the section to have the Board of Education look over the script, supervise the morals, and supervise the working conditions of the child is really enforcable as a practical proposition, placing an additional duty on the Board of Education when the Board of Education has to do the job in every single case.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I asked the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall yield and then I shall make an observation on that.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman may make his observation and then yield to me.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say that there has been probably some reluctance on the part of the Board of Education, although it has not been indicated to me officially, and they are not too anxious to take on the additional burden of examining scripts and examining, as a matter of fact, theaters and the surroundings, and so forth, for the purpose of qualifying such a place as one where a child may perform or may make a presentation.

I rather fancy that they are not anxious to have that additional responsibility, and whether or not it can be enforced depends on the number of applications and the amount of work that may be thrown on the Board. If there were a large number, I would say that it probably would give the Board some cause for real concern in administering the provisions of such a measure.

Mr. BLOOM. I am frank to say to the gentleman that it is practically the same as the laws throughout our country for handling these matters. If we had a mayor in the city of Washington, the mayor would designate somebody. In New York City it is the Children's Society.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Let me finish my statement. The mayor is the one who can permit such a thing in the city of New York. He has the right to say either yes or no. Practically most of the shows when they come to Washington do so after having been produced in New York City, and the people here know what kind of shows they are. The shows that come here are not shows that are fly-by-night shows, or that pass out of existence very easily. These are tried-out shows, and the mayors or the administrators in the different cities have the same jurisdiction over the matter, just as the School Board here does.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. May I say that in the city of New York the mayor has consistently refused to sign permits, except in a very few cases. He has been turning them down, and the city of New York will not permit any child acting or exploitation of children by theatrical agencies, and now they are trying to get the other cities of this country to do what cannot be done in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 5 minutes. We have no mayor in the city of Washington. We have no administrative head other than the Board of Commissioners, and when the Child Labor Act was up some 8 or 10 years ago this responsibility was vested in the School Board, so that all other provisions in the Child Labor Act in the District of Columbia relating to the employment of newsboys, the employment of minors in certain permitted occupations are administered by the School Board today on the basis of hearing and permit.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. And may I point out that this does not apply to itinerant productions, but affects all productions.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very definitely.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. And also may I say that it is not the enlightened policy in handling child problems today to submit them to politically appointed bodies. Such questions as this should be given over to welfare workers, as they are in such rural counties as those from which I come. It seems to me a very sad thing that Congress should turn such a question as this over to a politically appointed body.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If that refers to the appointment of the School Board, it occurs to me that, inasmuch as we entrust to them the laying of foundations for the future lives of children, and as they act as stewards in the care of the child, that responsibility is not misplaced in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MASON. Having issued some thousands of these work certificates as an agent of a school board, I am curious to know how the School Board in Washington is selected or elected. How do they secure their positions on the School Board?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. They are appointed by the judges.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. MASON. Then it is an appointive office rather than an elective one.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MASON. It seems to me that the question raised here by our colleague the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER] is a very pertinent one and that it indicates a certain danger.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me add to that the observation that there is no suffrage in the District of Columbia. Consequently you have no body, no common council, where that responsibility could be lodged in the hands of a group that is directly responsive to the citizens, so you must pick out an agency to administer it. It might be the School Board or the Board of Public Welfare, but they are following the precedent set in 1928 when the administration of the Child Labor Act in respect to permission to employ minors was first lodged in the School Board. Apparently, and insofar as my knowledge extends, the matter has been rather satisfactorily handled, so it is only natural that you make no departure from the established set-up, and if you are going to expand existing law, enforcement of the law should be lodged in the hands of the same agency.

Mr. MASON. I have no criticism upon where the authority is lodged, because in the State of Illinois it is lodged in the school boards all over the State by State law. That is not the point. The point is that you are placing upon that School Board this additional responsibility, which they have no feasible means and no qualifications particularly for investigating, and therefore there is great possibility of harm being done.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot agree that they do not have facilities for investigating, because they have a personnel and they can designate its own group in the School Board to examine, for instance, a licensed theater and determine what the atmosphere might be and also examine a manuscript that would be submitted in connection with the performance, and I would say that they are qualified.

Mr. MASON. But you will have to admit that the School Board of the District of Columbia is limited for funds today and cannot run the schools as they would like to do it today, and this is placing more work and more expenditure upon them.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I will say to my friend that his logic goes off at a tangent at that point, because there would be no quarrel with the administrative body. That quarrel, of course, would be with the Congress for appropriating an inadequate sum in order to do the work.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield myself 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I gather from the debate so far that the School Board is opposed to this legislation. Is that a fact?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot say that it is a fact that they are opposed to the legislation. I understand they have indicated their reluctance to take on this additional responsibility, but it has not been officially indicated to me.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Would it not be proper to hold hearings to find out just how the School Board feels about it, because that is the body that administers this law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think everybody in this body will agree that I made it clear that there had been no hearings on this bill since 1935.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If that be so, as the gentleman has stated, and we charge the School Board with taking care of the welfare of our children, would not the proper procedure be to send this bill back to the committee to hold hearings and ask the School Board for a report for or against the legislation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me answer the gentleman by indirection and say that because of absence from the committee on account of attendance at another committee at the time this bill was reported, I do not accept that responsibility, to suggest that perhaps hearings must be held, but I must abide by the wisdom of the committee.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. From what groups does the demand for this legislation come to exploit these young people and take them out of our schools?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is difficult for me to answer, because this bill was introduced by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I cannot say that one group or another has sponsored the legislation or asked for it.

Mr. GEYER of California. Can the gentleman name some of the sponsors of it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry that I must say I cannot name a single group that may have sponsored the legislation.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to my good friend that this bill was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my fine old friend, who was born in the same town in Illinois as myself.

Mr. BLOOM. There are only two "Pekin-ese" in the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to say in answer to the gentleman that there are very few cases that will come up in the District of Columbia when it comes to dramatic performances. I will venture to say that 50 percent of the cases asking for permits will come from artists, pianists, soloists, and when it comes to finding out whether we should allow a pianist to play, there is no question about it. They simply engage Constitution Hall or some other large hall and give a concert or play with a symphony orchestra. There is no question about it. The number of plays that would come to Washington during a season, where children are employed, would not amount to over seven or eight, in my opinion. Let me answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. The applications must be made by the parent or guardian of the child.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is true.

Mr. BLOOM. And not through any theatrical agency or any other agency who wants to promote a child. The application must come direct from the parent or guardian.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is it exactly. These agencies present beautiful pictures to the parents, and they have the parents make application down at the city hall, and then after the situation is explained to the parents and they realize what kind of exploitation these children are being placed under, many times the applications are withdrawn. Certainly the parents are just as much hornswoggled by these agencies as are the children.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] with reference to the agencies. That does not apply here, because when a child comes to Washington he is coming here with a successful play. He is not coming here to be promoted. The play is already booked throughout the country. There is no promotion in this thing. It is already a successful play.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say, with respect to that observation, it does not prevent the presentation from starting in Washington and then moving elsewhere in the country before it becomes an accepted play with a long run.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And this bill does not limit the performances to a play; it opens the door for all kinds of entertainment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; the language of the bill—and we ought to be exact and precise—is this:

> In any professional, traveling, theatrical production, or in a musical recital or concert.

I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I take it from this bill that if you are 17 years old and have talent you must keep out of Washington to receive theatrical training. Is it possible that in a concert a 17-year-old musician could not take part for gain?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, indeed. A minor cannot perform in the District of Columbia for gain. One of the things that has disturbed me a good deal about the restrictions of existing law is that a child prodigy, let us say phenomenal on the violin or the cello, could not play for gain in the District of Columbia. To make sure that I had read the statute correctly, I talked with the corporation counsel this morning in the District Committee. I wanted to be real sure that I had interpreted the statute correctly, and that is the answer he made.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It would be relatively easy if we recommitted this bill for the committee to bring out a bill that would cover child prodigies and still not include babes in arms that parents wish to hire out to the theater.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say to my distinguished colleague that that is a matter that reposes within the discretion and the bosom of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. When you recommit it, suggest that they keep all children away from the theater if they are 17 or 18.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the test here is whether or not the committee found any other body within the District of Columbia more suitable to administer this law than the Board of Education.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My own opinion, borne out by experience and familiarity with the operation, in some degree at least, of the Board of Education here is that they can be just as well entrusted with this responsibility as any other agency in the District.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Would not this bill make the District of Columbia stand out as having much more lax provisions with regard to this than a great many States in the Union?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I admit that there probably are States that go infinitely further.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And there are many that do not go nearly as far.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct. One might argue very persuasively on either side.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it not a fact that under existing law boys under 16 and girls under 18 are not permitted to appear after 7 p. m.?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And boys from 16 to 18 may not appear after 10 p. m. Is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And children 14 years of age and over may appear on the stage in afternoon performances only.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In afternoon performances but not in evening performances; and the gentleman will notice that the limitation in this bill is 11 o'clock at night.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under this bill a child of even 4 or 5 years of age could appear on the stage if a permit were granted.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; there is no limitation there.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It seems to me the bill is a little ambiguous as to whether or not its provisions apply to radio performances.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman will notice that the locale is described as a licensed theater, and that it embraces any professional traveling performance or presentation, theatrical production, or any musical recital or concert. The gentleman's interpretation is probably as good as mine as to what might be embraced within the term "professional traveling theatrical production."

Mr. ALEXANDER. The meaning does not seem to be clear.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no interdiction on a radio performance that I can see.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the intent of the sponsors of this bill is to take care of some of the injustices that are being perpetrated under the child labor laws in the District. Is that the intent of the sponsors of this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Over a period of years let me say it has been my privilege to have attended concerts in which some child star performed on the violin or piano and was actually under contract and receiving pay.

Now, it is a very superb performance, and sometimes I doubt the wisdom of withholding that from the public, thinking in terms of a child of my own.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. My friend will not admit it, but I think what he is trying to do is get in behind the child-labor laws through the back door. The argument he makes about a child being permitted to work under contract is similar to the argument made on women's protective laws in industry. They said she was being denied her rights as an American citizen, and you are doing this to the children by this bill here.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I answer the gentleman by saying I think he ought to modify his remarks when he said, "You are trying to get in behind the back door."

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I will modify it so far as the gentleman is concerned. I mean this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not trying to get in the back door anywhere at any time on any act. I have tried to set the thing out as accurately and as fairly as I could so the members of the committee may be informed with reference to the issue before them. I am not completely sold on the bill. I think you may argue persuasively on both sides of the bill. All I am interested in at this time is to have the whole factual situation presented to the House.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my good friend and debater from Birmingham.

Mr. PATRICK. I desire to ask just a short question, so help me. Will the gentleman from Illinois state who are the civic bodies, groups, and organizations in Washington that have promoted the bill and will he state the position they take in doing so?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I stated that a moment ago.

Mr. PATRICK. I missed it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In response to a question asked by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] I stated that I am not informed of a single organization that is sponsoring the bill. All I know is the bill was introduced by the chairman of the District Committee. I do know, however, that spokesmen for 18 organizations appeared this morning and requested that action be deferred until hearings could be held by the House committee.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLOOM. Is the gentleman in favor of this bill the way it is written?

Mr. DIRKSEN. With one change in it, namely, a change from "may" to "shall" on page 2, line 12, I rather fancy I can support the bill.

Mr. BLOOM. The bill will be supported by the gentleman?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want it clearly understood that I concede the argument on the other side, but I may go along with the bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman feels, however, that hearings should be held on this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say that, as a general proposition, hearings ought to be held on all bills so that every angle and every aspect may be thoroughly explored.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I notice from the committee report that, under the child-labor laws of the District of Columbia, no child under the age of 14 may be employed. In Pennsylvania it is 18 years of age. It was seen fit to protect child labor in both instances. Now, what is the purpose of this particular bill, insofar as permitting children to go on the stage, even though the department of education of the District may say a certain child is permitted to appear on a program for a short time? With the politics I have seen played since I have been in Washington——

Mr. DIRKSEN. They do not play politics here.

Mr. RICH. Certain people in the District could go out and influence the Board of Education to give permission to a particular child because the father or mother might want to get all the money they could out of that particular child because it is able to do something on the radio to entertain the people.

If the child-labor law is good for the District of Columbia in keeping them out under 14 years of age, and if it is good in my State, and keeps them out under 18 years of age, does not the gentleman think we should wait awhile until we have hearings on the bill and find out whether there are not going to be some people opposed to opening the doors again? We have closed them once. Now, why open them up again?

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I must apologize for trespassing on the patience of the House, but here are the mechanics of the thing. Let us assume they wanted to bring Shirley Temple to Washington. The parent or guardian must first go to the Board of Education and there make a written application for a permit. If the Board desires and so requires, a script must be submitted, then the Board or agency designated by the Board can either grant or withhold the permit. If it is granted, then within the limitations cited in this bill, namely, a maximum of 28 hours a week, and at no time beyond 11 o'clock at night, the child can perform. That is the long and short of it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. That is the long and short of it as far as importing Shirley Temple or someone else in the theater is concerned, but that is not the long and short of it as far as taking a local child out of the local school system and giving him a permit to work for hire in the evenings in the theaters of Washington is concerned.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is definitely correct.

Mr. MASON. That is the point about it entirely.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The Board of Education is the body that will administer this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Correct.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. We are going to vote on this bill without knowing the views of the Board of Education, which will administer this bill. Where does the Board of Education stand on this bill? Does the Board of Education want these additional duties? Is anybody ready to answer these questions?

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman from New York vote for the bill if the Board of Education say they would administer it?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That does not make any difference. My opposition to this bill is basic, because this bill will permit a further exploitation of children, who should be in school, by chiselers up in the city of New York who have been running a racket on these children. They cannot get away with it in New York City, and now they are trying to put it over in other towns. This bill opens the door to flagrant evasion of the child-labor law in the District of Columbia.

I am also opposed to the bill because the administering body under this bill has not told this Congress and has not been given an opportunity to tell this Congress whether it wants this duty or not, and how it feels about this bill. How can we vote on the bill without knowing whether the administrative body under the bill is for the bill or against it, or is ready to undertake the duties, whether it can administer it, and what its views are?

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman will yield, does this House ever ask an administrative body whether or not it wants to administer the duties under a new bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am afraid we have not in the past.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. Here we are passing a rather special brand of legislation and are doing it without hearings. Can the gentleman inform me whether or not there are on this committee any men who are specialists in the field of education?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would have to comb the list in my mind and then seek to estimate their respective backgrounds. Offhand, I doubt very much that I can tell the gentleman whether there are any experts or specialists in pedagogy on the committee.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Does not every Member of Congress join in saying that every single Member elected by the people of his district is selected as a man who is expert on the subject of education?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely, when one becomes a Member of this body there is compounded in him all the wizardry that is extant on every subject under the sun.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman feel we ought to find out what the Board of Education can do under this bill? Should not we have their views?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Inasmuch as there were no hearings, obviously there could not be officially before the committee the opinion of the school board with respect to certain administrative features. Whether they want to administer it, or whether they see difficulties there, certainly it is not officially before the committee.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I should like to point out that it is not just a question of what the school board thinks, it is a question of welfare policy and whether this is for the good of the health of children in general, not some exceptional child like the one that has been mentioned. I should also like to remind the Members that the general policy of all people who do welfare work with children is against extension of child labor.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I remind my genial colleague that the question is more important than that, it is a question of what the Congress thinks, not the school board.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that no hearings have been held on this bill, would it not be in the interest of the children of the District of Columbia to send the bill back to the committee for hearings and a report, and not waste any more time considering it on the floor today? We could then take up the Schulte milk bill and break up the milk monopoly in the District of Columbia which is robbing the people of the District of Columbia and charging 14 cents a quart for milk which the children of the District of Columbia need.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say to my good colleague from Wisconsin that he ought to submit his question to the Chair at the proper time in the proceedings.

I have taken enough time now. I hope, however, that the issue is squarely before the Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the members of the committee that there have been very exhaustive hearings on these bills for years. I hold in my hand a record of the hearings which were held in the Seventieth Congress, which went into this subject most exhaustively. This bill and bills in prior Congresses were the result of the deliberations of President Hoover's White House Conference on Child Health and Protection. These bills have had the unanimous support of dignitaries of the Catholic Church of the District of Columbia, as well as those of the Hebrew faith, and among other supporters have been the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, the Stagehands' Union, the Musicians' Protective Union, the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, of the Methodist Church, now chaplain of this House, who was himself a child actor; the Washington Board of Trade, the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of the District of Columbia, the chamber of commerce, the Mid-City Citizens' Association, the Northeast Citizens' Association, and last but not least, the most important of all as far as thespians are concerned, the Actors' Equity Association, which has a very heavy stake in a bill of this character.

Washington is deprived of seeing many good plays. Producers are concerned because they cannot produce here at the Nation's Capital plays where one, or more, of the thespians are children.

The drama is supposed to hold the mirror up to nature. It is indeed a poor reflection if children are omitted. The stage presents human problems. Human problems require the presence of children.

The New York stage would become moribund if it had restrictions that now obtain in the District of Columbia.

It is true that in New York the law puts a limitation upon the discretionary power of the authorities. It would have been better if the bill before us contained a limitation as to the age of the child actors, below which the Board of Education of the District could not exercise discretionary power and grant a permit to the child actor.

The instant bill allows entire discretion to reside in the Board of Education of the District, regardless of age. The parent or guardian of the minor simply requests the Board to permit the child to act, regardless of its age.

A suitable amendment could be offered even today to correct this situation. The bill does not involve any break-down of general child-labor restrictions. It is not a case of permitting children in factories or sweatshops.

Time was when there were upward of three theaters for the legitimate drama in Washington. There is only one today. The movies made tremendous inroads into the legitimate drama. Strange to relate, the movies permit child actors. There are Shirley Temple, Jane Withers, Deanna Durbin, and formerly Jackie Coogan.

Put the drama upon a parity with the movies as far as child actors are concerned. That is all this bill does.

Helen Hayes, who was a famous child actress and now is one of our foremost character actresses on the American stage, has said this about child actors:

From my own observation I can truly say that the stage child is as well, and in many cases better, safeguarded in the way of health, education, and morals than the children of well-to-do homes. I have always felt that in a very large measure I owe my position on the stage today to the experience and training that I gained as a child actress. It is grossly unfair that the theater, already staggering under so many handicaps, should suffer a further hardship by the exclusion in certain towns and States of plays requiring a child in the cast.

The Actors' Equity Association furnishes a partial list of famous personages who were child actors—that is, Helen Hayes, Ina Claire, Ruth Chatterton, Mary Eaton, Kate Smith, Edith Taliaferro, Mabel Taliaferro, Ernest Truex, Joseph Santley, Fred Santley, Effie Ellsler, Ann Thomas, Della Fox, Minnie Maddern Fiske, little Corinne Lotta, Viola Dana, Mary Pickford, William H. Crane, Anna Laughlin, Maude Adams, William Jefferson, Wallace Eddinger, Frank Craven, Willie Howard, George Jessel, Harry Mestayer, Phoebe Foster, Mary Miles Minter, Queenie Smith, Elsie Leslie, Millie James, Florence Bindley, Lila Lee, Georgie Price, George M. Cohan.

There is a play in New York called Life With Father, a most estimable play. It is a so-called Broadway hit at the Empire Theater. It could not be brought to the District of Columbia because it has four or five child actors therein. Under the present situation obtaining in the District of Columbia you could not produce King John, of Shakespeare; you could not produce Richard III; you could not produce plays like Peter Pan, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, or Pollyanna, because all of them have child—important child parts. Only after Herculean efforts were they able to produce Green Pastures a few years ago.

I remember in my earlier days seeing Minnie Maddern Fiske in some very estimable productions. She was a child actress, and had she not been a child actress you never would have seen her in such superb performances as Tess of the D'Urbervilles or Becky Sharp. Under present conditions you cannot produce here Booth Tarkington's Penrod, which must have child actors. You could not produce Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer; you could not produce Peter Pan; you could not produce Dear Brutus; you could not produce Porgy or Alias Jimmie Valentine, Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, Peter Ibbetson, Roar China, Alice Sit By the Fire, Blue Bird, Littlest Rebel, Good Little Devil—all would be tabu. David Warfield could not revive his great productions The Return of Peter Grimm or The Grand Army Man.

Just think of the anomalous situation! Most sections of the country can see these glorious plays with child actors and actresses, but the Nation's Capital, the hub of the Nation, must be deprived of such treasured pleasure and education. I think it is nothing less than utter ridiculousness that keeps us in such a situation. Cut loose these restrictions that shackle Washington; that make of the District a laughingstock of the Nation.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Before the gentleman breaks our hearts, may I remind him that Shakespeare's plays for years and years were produced without women, and one of the greatest child actors in America was Mary Pickford.

Mr. CELLER. Well, there were no restrictions against male child actors even in the old days. However that may be, Mary Pickford could not work in Washington in the old days when she was a child prodigy.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. She was over 18 years of age when she was appearing in those plays.

Mr. CELLER. The statement has been made that men and women can play the child parts. Let me answer that. Youth might play old age, but age cannot play youth. Only children can play child parts. Otherwise all illusion of the stage is destroyed.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. I wish the gentleman would point out that the RECORD from which he has been reading there is yellow with age. It is at least 12 years old.

Mr. CELLER. Oh, no, indeed; I have given you productions that were not taken from this RECORD. I speak of my own knowledge as being interested in and a student of the current American drama. I see plays frequently in New York. I have seen them and studied them for years. I have given you the benefit of my own experience.

Mr. GEYER of California. The gentleman misunderstands me. I am speaking of the endorsements he has given for this bill.

Mr. CELLER. I am informed that the endorsements that were given for the bill in that Congress are from the same organizations that are endorsing this bill.

Mr. GEYER of California. Without hearings.

Mr. CELLER. You have had hearings and sufficient hearings. The hearings I read from were held in 1932.

Mr. GEYER of California. Eight years ago.

Mr. CELLER. The principle does not change, even in 8 years. Pass this bill and let us have the plays with child actors like Booth Tarkington's Penrod, Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer, Barrie's Dear Brutus and Peter Pan.

I herewith set forth two wires received:

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 8, 1940.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
House of Representatives:

Urgently request your support of H. R. 6991, amending District of Columbia child-labor law. This law needs amending for the benefit of producers presenting plays in Washington. Frequently we have been obliged to change casts or even cancel bookings because of it. Just now we would book William Saroyan's new play, Love's Old Sweet Song, there but cannot because of restrictions applying to children in the company.

THEATRE GUILD, INC.

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 7, 1940.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Although we may differ regarding the ticket code, may we bespeak your support of bill H. R. 6991, which will alleviate the rather onerous conditions regarding stage children in Washington?

Regards.

JAMES F. REILLY,
Executive Secretary, The League of New York Theatres, Inc.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I claim to be one of the original child-labor advocates. When I came to Congress in 1922 that was one of my campaign issues, but I have learned to my sorrow that the 18-years-of-age limitation is a little too much to suit most people to apply to a so-called child-labor amendment. The amendment was proposed in my own district and in my own State and overwhelmingly defeated because these restrictions applied to so-called children up to 18 years of age.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Can the gentleman tell me, as a matter of record, how many States have a law of this kind?

Mr. GIFFORD. I cannot. I have felt that I was one of those people who were supposed to legislate for the Federal city of Washington. I hope to continue. We have had a real hearing today. We are supposed to tell the School Board what to do. We do not necessarily ask them. I have grandchildren that I wish to send to the movies occasionally. I cannot send them. There are so few suitable pictures for them. I wish there were a few more Shirley Temples and other children doing things in pictures. I want to protect child labor as much as anybody, I think, but I have learned that at 16 to 18, these days, they are children no more. They seem to know more than we do. They go places now that we do not. [Laughter.] If we should carry this out to its logical conclusion we should restrict, in a multitude of ways, the places where children between 16 and 18 should go. But times have changed. He took the 17-year-old young lady home. It was after 12 o'clock and he said to her, "What will your Mama say, keeping you out so late?" "Oh," she said, "we might as well sit down here and wait until Mama comes home." [Laughter.]

The situation has changed greatly. When I read this bill and found that in the realm of music even, that is, in a concert attraction, in this city, a young person 17 years of age, and almost 18, would not be permitted to perform for pay, I was very much surprised. My feeling is that the bill is surrounded by sufficient safeguards. I have made up my mind that I must be reasonable inasmuch as I was so unreasonable 18 years ago. We killed the child-labor bill, because we insisted on 18 years of age, which was not really child labor. That is why it has not been ratified. I am congratulating myself that I am a little more reasonable in my demands and enthusiasm. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that someone in a few moments will move to recommit this bill to the committee for further consideration. I hope that that will not be done. Insofar as hearings on this bill are concerned, this bill had lengthy hearings in 1933 and in 1932. The bill has been discussed both in public and executive session by your Committee on the District of Columbia. This is not an involved question, one that would require long hearings. Only one question is involved. Will children be permitted to appear on stage or in other productions in the District of Columbia for pay? That is the only question involved. Hearings can only say, on the one hand, we believe that they should, and, on the other hand, we believe that they should not. A very interesting thing was related to the committee the other day at what I thought was more or less of a hearing. Many of the good ladies of the District of Columbia were heard to protest the passage of the bill, and I am sure that they were conscientious and sincere. After they had finished, the local director of the National Broadcasting Co., WJSV, pointed out to the committee a very interesting case. There is a girl in Virginia who has very remarkable talent. There is a sponsor for her to sing over WJSV at a salary of $25 a week. She was to be permitted to sing, and her schedule was so arranged that she could do it outside of school hours. They found they could not let her do that because of the law that now exists in the District of Columbia, but he pointed out that that girl or a girl of that same age, under the child-labor law in the District of Columbia, could be permitted to work in a 5-and-10 store in the District of Columbia to stand on her feet for 8 hours a day, for six or seven or eight or nine dollars a week. I ask the Members of this House to hold up the hands of this committee. I have been on the committee 6 years. We members of the committee are hard-working people, whether you believe it or not, and we are conscientious, and no one can justly be heard to say that people are denied hearings before this committee. Every Monday morning, including this Monday morning, that committee sits, and citizens of the District of Columbia come before it, and I have yet to see the first one denied the right to be heard on any subject they want to talk about.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Take the girl to whom the gentleman referred who was not permitted to sing. Could she get a permit in the District of Columbia to work during the hours the gentleman stated?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The same girl?

Mr. NICHOLS. It was so stated by the witness, that under the law in the District of Columbia she could. Here is the safeguard in this bill. No child can appear on the stage or in any production in the District of Columbia if this bill passes, unless that child first gets permission of whom? The School Board of the District of Columbia, who are the specialists on youth, made up of men who devote their lives presumably to the protection of youth, and no child can appear until that body, under this law, in each particular, individual case gives its sanction. Is that an ample safeguard? I say that it is, if your School Board is good, and if the School Board is not good, then get one that is qualified to pass on whether or not children should be permitted to earn that kind of salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes. This matter has been referred to here repeatedly, as a matter pertaining to labor. The artists who are appearing on the stage, screen, and radio throughout the United States say themselves that they are not laborers in the sense that we think of labor, but they are artists in every degree. What we are trying to do here, so that my good friend, the lady from Illinois [Miss SUMNER], will not get all excited about it, is this. If this was strictly a labor bill, a matter of protecting little children, who are put to work, such as on farms or in households, I would say to my friend that I would stand up and fight to the last ditch to stop it.

Every mother and father through the United States who have children want to see that child or children a success in life, and thousands upon thousands of parents prefer the stage, screen, or radio. Why, right today, thousands of families are sending their children to dancing schools; they are sending them to vocal schools so that they may prepare themselves to display their talents. This is not labor. This is a pleasure enjoyed by the children. They are all proud of the fact that they can sing or dance, play a violin or a piano. So I want to correct the erroneous impression that is going around that a great many of us want to take children and actually place them at hard work. We do not want to do that. I had the pleasure of being in the show business and I know how happy those children are on the stage. There is not a child in America that is getting a better education today than the children in pictures and the children on the stage. They enjoy every minute of their work. Every minute of it is a pleasure to them, working and marking time so that they may go on and display that talent to the plaudits of the people.

Now, it is not labor in any sense. I again make the statement that if it was labor to work these children 1 minute, in the sense that the lady from Illinois spoke of, I would oppose it with every ounce of energy at my command.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia," approved May 29, 1928, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after section 7 a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 7a. Notwithstanding the provisions of this act, the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, or a duly authorized agent thereof, is authorized to issue a work permit to any minor under 18 years of age, said permit authorizing and permitting the appearance of such minor on the stage of a duly licensed theater within the District of Columbia in any professional traveling theatrical production or in a musical recital or concert: Provided, That such minor shall not appear on said stage after the hour of 11 o'clock in the evening of any day, nor more than 4 fours in 1 day, nor more than 28 hours in 1 week. Application for such permit shall be made by the parent or guardian of such minor to the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, or a duly authorized agent thereof, and, before considering such application, the Board, or its duly authorized agent, may require that it or such agent shall be furnished a copy of the manuscript of such theatrical production or a program of such musical recital or concert. The Board or its agent may issue a permit when satisfied that such theatrical production, musical recital, or concert is not offensive to public decency and that the parent or guardian of such minor has made provision for adequate educational instruction of such minor and for the safeguarding of the health and morals of such minor."

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHULTE: Page 2, line 12, after the word "agent", strike out the word "may" and insert "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I rise at this time, Mr. Chairman, to point out one or two features with respect to this bill that somehow or other have been overlooked.

The first thing we should bear in mind is that irrespective of the age of the child, and that means all the way below 14 years of age, the child may work on the stage 4 hours a day and 7 days a week. There is no denial of that.

Second, despite the hearings which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] mentioned and which incidentally took place in 1932, this bill—practically the same identical bill—was overwhelmingly defeated by this House in 1935.

The third point which I want to mention and which I could not make clear in the form of asking questions, is this: I do not contend that we must ask whether the Board of Education is in favor of this bill or not. That is not my contention at all. If this Congress thinks this bill is good, irrespective of what the Board of Education may feel, we should pass the bill. But my point is this: We provide in the bill that the Board of Education will issue these permits. The Board is going to read the scripts. The Board will supervise the working conditions. I think it is only reasonable for us to have the representatives of the Board of Education before us and inquire of them whether or not they can carry on this work; whether it is feasible and practical for them to carry on this work. Here we are being asked to vote on this bill despite the fact that there is no evidence before Congress to the effect that the Board of Education has been questioned as to the feasibility and as to the practicability of administering the various functions that this bill confers on the Board of Education.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that under the provisions of this bill a young minor might be able to obtain a permit to appear on the Gayety burlesque stage in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is it a licensed theater?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the Board of Education thinks that the script is not offensive and all of the other requirements of the bill are fulfilled, he may.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Does not the gentleman know that the work of acting is more nerve-racking and more injurious to the health of children than exercise ever can be?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am coming to that. I am very certain and confident that if you had before this Committee the leading educators of this country on this subject of child acting, you will find that the overwhelming opinion of the leading educators of all faiths and denominations, public schools and private schools, is opposed to having children work commercially on the stage except in very rare instances.

The mayor of the city of New York has refused consistently, except where there is a case of a child genius on the violin or something like that, to grant this permission.

Now, let us analyze the arguments for this bill. They say to you that you are depriving the people of Washington of seeing Shirley Temple, although she could appear in the afternoon performance under existing law. They say we are depriving the city of Washington of seeing certain plays where child actors are required. If you want to provide that the people of the city of Washington can see geniuses, say so in your bill. Set up a board. Set up some kind of an organization that will make that permissible. But what are you doing? For the sake of one or two or three people, or one or two or three shows, you are opening the door wide open to what? To what is one of the most pernicious rackets in existence. I am glad to expose it on this occasion. It is this: The chiseling agencies go into the poor communities of the city of New York, and they encourage many of those children who they think have talent that can be exploited, some who jig, some who sing, and they go to the father and mother and they sign them up with a contract, and then ship these kids out; because they cannot exploit them in New York, they ship them out to towns where it is permissible.

They are subjecting these children to nerve-racking strain, children who should be in school, who should be at home, who should grow up as normal boys and girls. They are sent out under abnormal conditions. Let me add further that the parents get very very few dollars in return. The child's health is impaired, the child's nerves become unstrung. Who profits? The chiseling gang that is behind the movement; they profit. Now, if you want to open the door to this kind of practice in Washington, then support the bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN, having resumed the chair, Mr. CELLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8694) to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia," approved May 29, 1928, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BOLLES. I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOLLES moves to recommit the bill H. R. 8694 to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 83, noes 53.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Obviously there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 135, not voting 108, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a resolution of the Pomono Grange of Tioga County, Pa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by my colleague, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. JENKS] before the Textile Square Club of New York, on March 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day and any special orders previously entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from a Boston newspaper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief article from the Poultry Tribune.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain correspondence with reference to the information I sought to gather by resolution, which was acted on this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two articles, one appearing in the Washington Post and the other appearing in the New York Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, there has been much controversy and publicity on the migrant situation. I wish to speak on this subject at this time and to set forth facts and data showing how this migration is affecting not only the country as a whole but particularly the State of California and my district, the Tenth Congressional District. I dwell especially on California because that State receives a great portion of the migrant population.

About a year ago the California delegation met in regard to the migration of people to California and after we had studied the problem some, a letter was drafted and sent to President Roosevelt suggesting that migrant camps be built, but in other places than California. At that time I protested against any more migrant camps in California.

But due to the fact I was chairman of that committee, I signed the letter which was sent to the President. As each day passes, the situation is becoming more acute and distressing. It has come to such a point because the remedies used in aiding these migrants have been toward relieving the immediate needs of indigents, thereby placing an additional burden in the way of relief, hospitals, school facilities, employment, and housing on the citizens of States who receive the migrants. It is conceded that interstate migration is not confined to just one or two States in the Union; therefore the problem carries a more serious outlook, for, if it affected only a small community or one State, the problem could be solved, but, insomuch as it has a national aspect, it deserves consideration and attention upon that basis.

The problem not only affects those States receiving the migrants but also those who contribute the migrants, for, if the ratio of evacuation continues at the high figure it now is, soon there will be States whose population will be practically extinct, and therefore result in other States having a capacity population, and being unable to supply sufficient employment, housing, hospital, and school facilities. The Farm Security Administration has been providing housing facilities by way of migratory-labor camps. I grant that the intentions of the Farm Security Administration have been humanitarian and sincere; however, these migratory-labor camps in the State of California are now established to such an extent that, as the years pass by, each town and city in California will have an accompanying migratory camp. Therefore you see that this situation cannot go on and on indefinitely. Even at this time the residents and citizens of these receiving States are aroused and belligerent to some extent, for the burden of taxation is becoming exorbitant.

If the Farm Security Administration continues its policy of placing upon relief all those who cross the border to California, and thus aid them in establishing a residence, it is difficult to see how the State can maintain itself through the years to come. The migratory-labor camp serves only as a temporary lodging place, and during the past years, at the termination of 1 year, those migrants have been thrown upon the taxpayers of the county and State; but, 2 weeks ago, the California Legislature passed an act whereby the period of time has been raised to 3 years instead of 1 year, and, therefore, the migrants will have to be taken care of by the Federal Government for an additional 2 years. The construction of migratory-labor camps serves as an invitation for more migrants to come to California, and are a clearing house for additional relief upon the community.

I have been speaking in generalities, but now let me place before you figures that will bear up my statements—cold, exacting figures, which do not lie.

However, before making any comparisons, I wish to explain that, in using the various scales of payment of the States I shall mention, I assure you that no offense is intended, as the figures are merely stated as comparative. I have always had the utmost respect and admiration for the Members representing those States and the people they represent.

I shall use in my comparison of figures the States of Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Missouri, as compared with California and the average of the United States. I want each and every one of the Members from those States to know that I am doing this only to show the trend and explain why people have drifted to California.

Since 1930 it is estimated that California's population has increased 1,500,000. Most of this increase has taken place in the last 5 years. The exact population increases are as follows:

Kern County, in the Tenth Congressional District, 70 percent since 1930 and 48 percent since 1935.

Madera County, in the Ninth Congressional District, 52 percent, all since 1935, and 35 percent between 1936 and 1938.

Tulare County, in the Tenth Congressional District, 54 percent since 1930 and 46 percent since 1935.

Kings County, in the Ninth Congressional District, 44 percent since 1930 and 35 percent since 1935.

Fresno County, in the Ninth Congressional District, 26 percent, practically all in the last 2 or 3 years.

Causes for continued heavy migration are given as follows:

Unemployment; displacement of farm operators, tenants, and workers by machinery; inadequate local relief; ill health; and increased moving due to automobiles.

Where do they come from? The Farm Security Relief rolls in 1938 showed the origin of the migrants as follows:

Oklahoma contributed 42 percent, Texas 16 percent, Arkansas 11 percent, and Missouri 7 percent. Between 75 and 80 percent of the migrants come to California from these four States.

SCHOOLS

In Tulare County alone, the total elementary school enrollment has increased on an average of 1,100 to 1,200 each year for the past 4 years. This increase would not result in a serious problem if it were spread throughout the schools of the State. However, the fact is that the migrants are concentrated in labor camps in a few sections, and the schools in those sections receive the brunt of the increased enrollment through the migrant influx.

There is a migratory-labor camp near Visalia, Calif., in the so-called Union School District. This district has a taxable valuation of $1,051,825, and the school tax per $100 has increased from 79 cents in 1935 to $1.12 in 1939. In addition, it was necessary for the county Board of Education to supply $27,560 from the unapportioned fund. This has been appropriated during the past 2 years, and if the amount had been raised by taxation over a 2-year period, it would have meant an additional rate of $1.40 per year. Other school districts affected by the influx of migrants are as follows:

Farmersville—valuation, $376,135; school tax in 1935, 68 cents; in 1939, $1.11.

Woodville—valuation, $707,160; school tax 54 cents in 1935; and in 1939, school tax, $2.22.

Pleasant View district—valuation, $796,400; school tax in 1935, 61 cents; in 1939, school tax, $1.

Similar conditions exist in other counties in California, and, I ask you, Is it any wonder that the taxpayers in those districts are greatly opposed to the construction of migrant camps and the concentration of migrants?

In Tulare County, during the past 5 years, there has been considerable construction to meet the need placed upon the schools by the influx of migrants. Eight entirely new school plants have been constructed; two of these are attended by migrants' children only.

The county and district tax levies for schools have increased in the past 5 years, as follows:

	Percent
Kings County	282
Tulare County	270
Kern County	186
Madera County	144
Fresno County	134

The average daily attendance in schools has increased as much as 100 to 150 percent in this period, one district showing an increase of 300 percent.

HEALTH EXPENSES, ALSO CORRECTION AND CHARITIES INCREASED

In 5 years, health and sanitation expenses have increased:

	Percent
In Kern County	97
In Kings County	77
In Madera County	66
In Fresno County	37
In Tulare County	30

SOCIAL-WELFARE COST OF OPERATION

The social-welfare cost of operation has also increased, and during the past 3 years this is proven by the following figures:

	Percent
Tulare County	85
Kings County	102
Kern County	159
Madera County	155
Fresno County	66

RELIEF, CASE LOADS, AID TO CHILDREN

Now, let us compare the case load of relief, as between Oklahoma, Arkansas, and United States average, and California. Compiled by Government and State agencies:

Oklahoma has been paying $3.50 per case load per month; Arkansas averaging $4.68; United States average, $23.45; and California, $31.10, or six to nine times that of Oklahoma and Arkansas.

For old-age relief, Arkansas pays $5.96 per month per case. Oklahoma pays $17.61 per month per case. United States average is $19.36. California pays $32.45 per month per case.

However, since January 1, California is paying an additional $5 per month.

Right here may I pause to ask if this does not show that the United States should have uniform aged-relief payments? No matter whether you live in Florida, Oklahoma, Ohio, or in California, every aged person throughout the United States should receive the same just amount of money.

For aid to children, Arkansas pays $8.09 per month per family; Oklahoma pays $12.08 per month per family; United States average is $31.35; California pays $42.23 per month per family for aid to children.

For aid to the blind, Oklahoma pays $14.86 per month, while California pays $48.06 per month.

WAGE-SCALE COMPARISONS

Since it has been stated that the majority of migrants in California went there with the purpose of seeking employment, let us consider and compare the wage scales of Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, the United States average, and California.

In Arkansas farm laborers, per day, without board, are paid $1.05; in Texas the farm laborer is paid $1.30 per day; Oklahoma pays its farm laborers $1.55; and the United States average for farm laborers is given to be $1.59; but the State of California pays its laborers $2.80 per day.

But, regardless of the amount paid to farm laborers by any State, it is unfortunate that these people must migrate 1,500 miles or more to seek employment. Self-preservation is the first thought in every man's mind, and therefore we cannot condemn the action of these people.

Nevertheless, by their migration to the laboring and farming centers of California, they have brought hardships, not only upon themselves but also upon the local resident workers, for the migrants have the willingness to work for lower prices, and thereby throw local residents on relief.

On September 19, 1938, the California State Federation of Labor, in regular convention, adopted a resolution petitioning all agencies of the Federal Government to provide adequate and immediate relief for these unfortunate people in their own home communities, and further resolved that the Federal Government aid and encourage these idle thousands to return to their respective States, and that they be given proper aid and assistance by the Government. The State Federation of Labor wrote in their resolution as follows:

The Farm Security Administration is soliciting and encouraging hundreds of indigent families to migrate to our State for the purpose of eking out an existence in our agricultural districts; and

This same Farm Security Administration extends immediate relief to these thousands of families under the supposition that there will be work available for them in the agricultural districts.

The State Federation of Labor's resolution also reads:

These refugees have been and are unable to secure sufficient employment in the farming belt, and are now raiding the craft industry to work for any wage and under any condition the employer may impose, and thereby destroying the wage structures of our organized workers by taking the jobs of thousands of men and women of the State Federation of Labor.

QUESTION OF LARGE FARMS AND FRUIT RANCHES

There has been much misinformation about big business controlling the agricultural lands of California. The figures in that connection are enlightening. There are 1,864 apricot orchards in California; 1,345 of them are 10 acres or under, and includes 46 percent of the entire apricot area.

Three hundred and seventy-seven orchards from 10 to 20 acres make 26 percent of the whole; 114 orchards are from 20 to 40 acres, or 15 percent of the whole. This list accounts for 90 percent of the total acreage devoted to the growing of apricots.

Those figures that have to do with small farms will, of course, attract attention. Twenty-two percent of the ground tilled by farmers is made up of 10-acre lots, 17 percent from 10 to 20 acres, 25 percent from 20 to 50 acres, 11 percent from 100 to 175 acres, 3 percent from 175 to 260 acres, and 4 percent from 260 to 500 acres, which makes about 92 percent of all the land devoted to farming in the State of California, leaving less than 7 percent in the hands of big business.

MIGRANT CAMPS IN CALIFORNIA

The Tenth Congressional District of California has at the present time three migratory camps, and with the building of the proposed camp near Woodville, Calif., will make a total of four migratory camps in my congressional district.

Other congressional district in California having migratory camps are as follows:

	Camps
Twentieth Congressional District	1
Ninth Congressional District	2
First Congressional District	2
Nineteenth Congressional District	1
Third Congressional District	2
Second Congressional District	1

This makes a total of 12 migratory camps in the State of California.

I have received from individuals and organizations many letters and resolutions protesting the establishment of additional migratory-labor camps.

Such resolutions have been received from the Tulare County Board of Supervisors; Lemon Cove Chamber of Commerce; Tulare Center Farm Bureau; Visalia Chamber of Commerce; Orosi Farm Bureau; Exeter Kiwanis Club; Porterville Farm Bureau; Exeter Chamber of Commerce; Tulare Grange, No. 198; Exeter Lions Club; Tipton Lions Club; the American Legion, Department of California; the American Legion Posts of Tulare, Kings, and Mono Counties; Alta Post, American Legion, Dinuba; Pomona Grange, No. 5; Parent-Teachers' Association, Porterville.

I will not read any of the resolutions at this time, but I will ask the Clerk to read the resolution received from the American Legion, whose administration includes parts of three congressional districts.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to have the Clerk read the following letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
Tulare, Calif., February 27, 1940.

Hon. ALFRED J. ELLIOTT,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR ALFRED: In accordance with instructions of the delegates to the fifteenth district of the American Legion, Department of California, in a meeting held in Tulare, Calif., February 25, 1940, below is a resolution approved by the delegates. The fifteenth district of the American Legion consists of the legion posts in Tulare, Kings, and Mono Counties.

"Whereas the Farm Security Administration of the Federal Government have built a number of camps for migratory workers in the southern San Joaquin Valley; and

"Whereas there is now in existence more than sufficient housing for all the migratory labor needed in agriculture in the counties of Kern and Tulare and there is a large concentration of surplus labor that cannot be used by agriculture or industry, has been maintained here at public expense, and is a constant menace to the well-being of our communities: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the fifteenth district of American Legion, Department of California, at meeting assembled at Tulare, February 25, 1940, protest the building of further camp or housing facilities for labor by the Federal Government, and we request the Farm Security Administration to advise those seeking employment throughout the Nation that there are no opportunities for them to secure work in agriculture or industry in California. That they spend what money they have available to rehabilitate those unfortunate people in communities where their distress has originated. That they return these thousands of idle people to a place where they can find opportunity for work. We call upon the California delegation in the Congress of the United States to urge these views upon the Federal Government and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Administrator of the Farm Security Administration, Washington, D. C., and the Administrator of Farm Security Administration for the State of California, and to the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senators of the United States from the State of California."

Your consideration of this resolution will be appreciated.

F. C. SCHUREMAN,
Fifteenth District Adjutant, American Legion, Department of California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, the question is simply one of whether or not the Federal Government should expand and increase the migrant camps, and thus invite new migrants to a State already unfairly burdened with indigents it cannot usefully employ.

Certainly the Federal Government should not offer further inducements for more to come.

I reaffirm my stand made in 1937 on the policy that the Government should rehabilitate these indigents into their home States, starting immediately reclamation and land-conservation programs.

Where the people of one's district or one's home county appeal to the Federal Government that no more migrant camps be built there, and by showing definitely that the tax burden is too great for the people at home to carry, and the Federal Government refuses to cooperate with them in taking that tremendous load off their shoulders, I am wondering what Members of Congress would think of such a situation. I wonder how many of you realize the seriousness of this problem in the congressional districts which are so affected. I want to be fair, but I think it is time that the Members of Congress start operating some of these agencies of Government themselves, and not leave it to one person appointed under an administrative measure. I will read at this time from a letter of Colonel Harrington, dated Washington, D. C., March 15, 1939, addressed to President Roosevelt. He suggested legislation which should provide for Nation-wide planning, that might take the form of authorized action along the following lines:

(a) The resettlement of migrants who are now in California and other destination States, and who can become self-supporting there.

(b) The return of those migrants who are willing to resume residence in their State of origin and giving assistance in establishing them there.

(c) The resettlement of other migrants in those areas where employment suited to their ability is most likely to be found.

I, myself, feel that we will have to care for these people undoubtedly as we are at the present time, but why not work out a program such as we work in the State of California. Let us provide something for these people to do in their respective States.

If their soil no longer serves to produce a crop, let us put those people back in their respective States, provide them with a home there, and reclaim the soil to the point where they will produce crops again. Then we will be doing two things at once instead of spending funds and not accomplishing anything.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. I suppose the gentleman saw in the paper a few days ago where some 20,000 of these migrants were scattered up and down along the Atlantic coast. Does the gentleman realize that this situation will become more and more serious; these migrants will continue to seek out the places where there are no discriminations? You know that under our present system of freight rates Oklahoma, Texas, and Arkansas have the highest freight rates of any section of the United States, which requires the people there to pay higher freight rates, requires the workingmen to pay higher rates for the things they consume and produce, and they do not manufacture one single thing down there that they wear or one single thing that they have in their homes. Then we are prevented from having any industry down there because in the first place we are discriminated against by these discriminatory freight rates, and we are required to pay the same minimum wage as is paid in the highly industrialized cities. Therefore it is reasonable to believe, and we know that these people are going to seek the higher prices that are paid in the North and the East and in California. They will go away from these discriminatory freight rates. They will get away from these discriminations and go to sections of this country where they are not discriminated against. I say to you that the people who have gone from Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas to California are pure-blooded Americans, and they are seeking to better themselves and to avoid the discriminations that this Congress has imposed upon them or permitted to be imposed upon them, and that the Federal Government, the Secretary of Agriculture, cannot replace those people down there and enable many of them to make a living or to sustain themselves on the American standard of living.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is quite true.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] is quite true, but I think he should include in his statement the exorbitant and unjust freight rates of the Northwest section, including Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Nebraska, because I do not believe the freight rates in Arkansas are any more unjust or any higher or any more out of line than are ours. Does the gentleman have a freight rate of more than 15 cents per bushel on wheat for a distance of 400 miles?

Mr. KITCHENS. We have the highest freight rate in the Southwestern zones in the United States. That is, Arkansas, East Texas, and Oklahoma.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think this is a vital subject, and a point that is well worthy of the consideration of this House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You cannot expect anything else than that these people from these inland sections, these landlocked sections, will go to the coast where living conditions are lower, freight rates are lower, under this rule that we have operated under, imposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission for so many years.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. The gentleman has given an excellent description of the most serious situation confronting the State of California today. The gentleman represents an agricultural district, and I understand is a farmer himself. I wonder if he agrees with the statement made in New York City the other night by Carey McWilliams, California commissioner of immigration and housing, in a radio address over Town Hall of the Air, when he said as follows:

Grapes of Wrath—

Speaking of the book written by John Steinbeck—which, incidentally, is an accurate account of the living conditions of migratory labor in California.

I want to ask the gentleman if he agrees that that book is an accurate description of the living conditions that confront migratory labor in California in general? We will admit that there are exceptions where these people are placed under extremely ill-housed conditions, but is that a true picture of the general situation as it exists in California today?

Mr. ELLIOTT. It is not; and I will say further to my colleague from California: I perhaps know the San Joaquin Valley, my congressional district, as well as any man who lives in California. I know more about it than the man who wrote the book, Grapes of Wrath. I think that is the most damnable book that ever was permitted to be printed and put out for the public to read.

Statements are made in that book that women and children should never read. I could take any Member of this House of Representatives to places here in Washington that are just as much a disgrace with regard to living conditions as any spot in the Tenth Congressional District or the State of California. I can take you across the street from the Senate Office Building and I can show you large families living in brick structures with just one door and a small window. I will admit that people do live in tents in California in the harvest season; but, my God, they certainly have got fresh air, and that is more than I can say for some of these slums I have seen in the District of Columbia and various other places in the eastern cities.

Why pick out a State and start dumping them there, as in California, when the figures I gave the House of Representatives show what the American people in that State are doing for these helpless ones? I feel sorry for these people, just as sorry as anybody in the United States. I have some employed at the present time, paying them $3 a day; and I am happy to do so. I do not believe there is a problem confronting the American people today so great as the one about which I am now talking. We spend hours debating little bills, yet here we are confronted with the great problem of finding a place for these people to live and of providing them with jobs and thereby saving the waste of Federal funds. I maintain that building Federal migrant camps is not solving the problem at all. You provide a place for them to live temporarily but do you provide anything for them to do? They are there in such great numbers that there are 7 people for every job. To put 1,500 or 1,600 people in a camp without giving them some means of earning a living is no real help at all.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. NORRELL. The gentleman has made a very fine statement. Personally I know that the people who have gone out to his State from Arkansas have been well cared for. In addition to what has been said with regard to the cause of the migration, does the gentleman not believe that another factor has been the Federal policy of old-age assistance whereby the National Government pays into a State an amount of money equal only to what the State itself pays out in old-age pensions, that this causes people to migrate from States which have no pension system, or a small one, to those which pay greater pensions?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution. Let me say further along that line that I believe that before this Congress adjourns, it should approve uniform pensions for the aged people of the United States regardless of where they live, with a policy under which they would receive the same amount of pension; those people would not migrate from States which pay $7 or $8 a month pension to a State like California, where they receive $40. This is no longer a local matter, no longer a State matter, it is national in character and must be dealt with as such.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I know the gentleman agrees with me in the statement that California has done everything possible to meet this situation, but we must have national help or the State of California is going to go bankrupt. Is that correct?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard statements made that the farmers of California are against these migrating people. I do not agree with these statements at all. The farmers in my State, particularly in my district with which I am so familiar, go out of their way to assist these needy people. Many of the migrants reach California sick and in ill health. The interest of the people of California is amply demonstrated by the fact that counties have increased their hospital staffs, and built new buildings. Tubercular sanitariums have been increased to several times their original size. Why? To care for these people who have come to the State. Who is paying the bill? The taxpayers of California.

Instead of running around trying to find or stir up a quarrel between laborers in agricultural areas and the farmers we should do everything in our power to unite those groups, because one depends upon the other, employer and employee are mutually dependent regardless of the business, whether it be farming or industry. Cooperation is the keystone.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I believe that another factor causing people to migrate into the gentleman's State is the fact that many of the farmers have been droughted out in what is known as the Great Plains area. When they are droughted out they go into the States of Washington, Oregon, and California looking for a place to live. We find many economy-minded Members of the House voting against reclamation appropriations whereas, as a matter of fact, if we provided that money, which is always paid back into the Treasury, we could keep those people on the farms in the Great Plains States and save California, Washington, and Oregon much of the trouble they now have as a result of our not building up the land and water resources in the Great Plains area. Am I not correct?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman is entirely correct. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a recent article by Hubert Kay on the accomplishments of our distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a letter addressed to a newspaper in my district concerning this problem.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[From the Antelope Valley Ledger-Gazette, Lancaster, Calif.]

"OKIE" GIRL HITS "GRAPES OF WRATH"; FINDS CALIFORNIA FAIR

of Wrath against the people of California for their treatment of migrants. It was written by a young mother from Oklahoma, orphaned at an early age, who arrived in California less than a year ago. This letter, since its first publication last week, has been widely quoted and has brought much attention.)

DEAR TULARE TIMES: I have just finished reading a story about "migrant horde." It sure did make me mad the way people run down California. Lies—dirty mean lies * * * and this letter is not from a Californian but an Oklahoman.

I don't believe the things I read in that story because people are not as mean in California like the stories that you read and hear about; and, believe me, I am not writing this just for fun, or that I don't know what I am talking about, because I am not one of those girls that had an easy life. My mother died when I was born and I had to work hard for my living and I liked it. I did not find people mean to me. The world treated me O. K.

DEAR CALIFORNIA: I think it's a dirty shame the way these migrant stories are printed so the world can read them. I came to California nearly a year ago and I am not one bit sorry. California treats me swell.

My husband had a friend here in California who wrote us a letter to come to California and he would help him get work—so we came to California.

Back in Oklahoma my husband worked hard for $30 a month. We had to walk a mile for water that was fit to drink and burned a stinking oil lamp at night. Yes; and go hungry sometimes. Here in California we got a job, $60 a month, just driving tractor; lights in the house, water right in the kitchen, and all the good tested cow's milk we want.

It makes me tired to hear people around me whining what they were used to back home. I could write a story about what they were used to back home. They make me feel ashamed how they abuse this State. I am not blind. I see plenty.

If they would stop whining, "Taint fair; it ain't fair," they would see for themselves the hard work it took to make this county around Tulare and all around what it is today.

I have seen the bosses work hard all day and all night while the hired man had a good night's sleep. And it's not "Good morning, boss," he hears but, "Taint fair." "Back home it was like this, or like that." Why don't they go back home to what they were used to. Oh, yeah, I could tell a few of them what they were used to. Some people want a lot for nothing.

I've seen people who loved to be on relief and I have heard this saying many times, "Let's go to California and get on relief." I've heard them planning what to say and hide, so the relief wouldn't be wise. Back home, I've seen stock die because people were too busy talking about California relief to care for them.

I saw a poor cow die having a calf one day. I asked the man, "Why don't you help that poor cow. I know a little help will save her." He just looked up at me and said, "Oh, it's too much trouble. We are planning to go to California. I hear relief is pretty good there." And so that man and his family came to California.

That's what's wrong, too many on relief. It gives them too much time to sit around and breed trouble. And it gives them too much time to have more babies for California relief to keep.

It's a funny thing, we could always find work. I guess it's because we wanted it. Please forgive me if I talk too plain for some people, but it's the truth and the truth hurts, and I am in the mood right now to write it.

It's a funny thing that some people are not satisfied no matter where they live. I've seen them come back to Oklahoma for a visit from California, driving a beautiful car and bragging what they made since leaving Oklahoma. I notice they don't stay back home, and when they get back to California it's, "Taint fair."

When we arrived in California, the pal, an Oakie that is not a pal any more, was driving a beautiful new car and living in filth and nearly starving to death. They had to sit on old boxes to eat what they had, just because they were trying to be a big shot on the outside. Yes; and those folks were on relief one time. They tried to get my husband to get on relief. "Tell them this, and tell them that. Put a hard-luck story to them. You got to act to put it over on them." That's the way the Oakies talk about California, who have all they can do to look after their own.

Well, California, here is one Okie that's for you, and, believe me, I mean every word of it.

I notice the Oklahoma people don't help one another here. The pal that wrote us to come to California treated us so mean that one morning I left his place. I sat under a tree nearly a day, waiting for my husband to come back from looking for work.

Across the road lived some of my own people from Oklahoma. They did not ask me in, but it was a California family that noticed me and my baby. They stopped and asked me what was wrong. I told them my story, and those people took me home, gave me my supper, and that dear woman of the house bathed my baby for me. And that's not all. They kept us for a week and found my husband a good job. They are my best friends today.

A California bus driver paid our way from a small town to Visalia. He noticed we didn't get on the bus and asked us, "What's the trouble?" We told him we were broke. He put his hands in his pockets and said, "Pay me back some day when you can," and he paid for our coffee and doughnuts. He, too, is a Californian.

Another thing that gets in my hair is the things you read about poor girls who had to go wrong after they got to California. The story I was reading told of a poor girl who ended up with a hobo, with tears in her eyes, after she got to California. Well, let me tell poor Betty, she did not have to end up with a hobo.

I was up against it one time when I lost my job. Like I told you before, my mother died when I was born and I had no one. But that did not make me go the wrong way. Oh, no; there's too many kind people in the world.

I went to the police and told them my story. They sure were swell to me. They found me a good place to stay for the night, and I didn't end up with a hobo or rich man. I soon found myself another job doing housework, all the good food I wanted, and bedroom, in a district attorney's home.

Some girls I knew were shocked to think I went to the police and told them I was broke. They would do this and that before they would sink so low. They were too proud.

I am proud myself, but I would not do the things they would do when down and out.

There are too many homes that want girls to help with the work for a girl to go wrong, and I mean good, kind homes.

It's the ones who were shiftless and lazy in Oklahoma who are out here in California trying to get something for nothing, complaining "'Tain't fair."

Again I say, the "Migrant Horde" is a pack of dirty lies. California people are as fine as any in the world and are willing to help anyone that wants to make an honest living.

—From an Oklahoma Girl, 23 years old.

P. S.—Mr. Editor, I am not well educated enough to word this letter the way I would like, but it will please me very much if you print every word of it, if you wish, and I hope you do. Thank you.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Mr. Frank J. Taylor that appeared in the Forum magazine of last November, dealing with the California migrant situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the problem that has been discussed here this afternoon is one I started to talk about 4 years ago. No one else talked about it then. The first time I got up on the floor of this House and said I felt it was important that steps be taken for the rehabilitation of people in the areas from which this migration was coming, I received very little response from anywhere.

WE NEED MORE WORK ON THE MIGRANT PROBLEM—NOT LESS

Since then the situation has changed. It has changed rather tragically on the whole. In the first place, may I say that the gentleman who just preceded me has, in my judgment, made a most eloquent and forceful appeal for a greater amount of work by the Federal Government concerning this problem and not less.

The burden of his argument is a very forceful one for the establishment of a uniform and general system of old-age pensions in this country which will apply to all sections of the country equally and leave less inducement for people to migrate from States where low pensions are paid to States with higher ones. His argument has brought before the House the magnitude of a situation which has two great major factors in it: First, the unemployment situation in American industry, and, second, the problem of American agriculture, which is bottomed on inadequate returns to the farmer, exhaustion of our soil and natural resources, and a number of other factors. I am unable to see how objection to a program of trying to give clean, decent places to some of these people to pitch their tents is in accord with the positive approach to its solution. I know that people naturally do not welcome a great and sudden influx of people into the area where they live, where they pay taxes, and where are located their school districts. I wish that some program could be worked out so that the location of these particular camps might be in places where there would not be objection.

I also realize how difficult that would be, and certainly I am not going to advocate the cutting down of any of the constructive work being done either in California or elsewhere on this problem. It seems to me what California has a right to ask and what California ought to ask with all the vigor at her command is that in view of the fact that she is carrying a large part of the burden of human need in this Nation, because of the fact these people come from all parts of the country to our State, therefore we have a right to call this a Federal problem and to insist that the burden of dealing with it shall be borne in major part by the Federal Government. In this connection may I say it would be entirely just for the school district which is burdened beyond capacity, I have no doubt, by the increase in the child population due to the migration of these people, to expect grants in aid to enable that school district to deal with the problem of education. I also agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] that our people have made a very great effort to meet this problem and are laboring under a great difficulty. There is one school district in Los Angeles County, in my district, where the school population of that district has tripled in the past 3 years.

AN AGE-OLD PROBLEM AND THE ONE MEANS OF REALLY SOLVING IT

Mr. Speaker, may I point out furthermore that this is no passing matter. This is a part of an old American tradition. Ever since this country was founded people have been moving west. They have been moving on in search of a solution to their problem some place else if they could not solve it where they were. Now, however, the frontier is gone and we are up against a situation where there is only one kind of expansion remaining to the American Nation, only one way in which mass production can be made possible, only one way in which we can reemploy the people now unemployed, only one way that we can over a long period of time make for prosperity of agriculture, not only in California, not only in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, but every place else, and that is by making possible mass consumption to accord with mass production; by raising the standard of living of the American people and by an earnest effort to discover the sound and proper manner in which to reflect an increase in production due to mass industry in a corresponding increase in mass consumption on the part of the people.

We are not going to solve this problem, California is not going to solve the problem, and no one else will solve the problem until this central thing is done. I am not going to talk today about the things that I think ought to be done. I have spoken on that subject many times.

PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION MUST BE BALANCED

I believe our method of bringing into circulation the medium of exchange should be in accord with the Constitution. I think when this Nation as a whole needs an additional volume of money to transact business because the production of wealth is increased, it is up to the National Government to put it into circulation without increasing the national debt. I believe we need a general system of old-age pensions in this country. It costs industry and agriculture all the income that they pay out to produce the goods and crops which they turn out.

The total national income is equal at all times to the cost of producing the goods that agriculture and industry turn out. If that be true, then agriculture and industry must get back at least that much if they are going to proceed with profitable operations, but if, as is true, 15 percent of our national income is today saved, if it is true that 15 percent is neither spent nor promptly invested in new capital goods and new capital equipment, then obviously you cannot employ all the people nor even continue to produce as much as before. The problem of producing enough, the age-old problem of mankind, is solved.

We are confronted with a brand new problem and we do not know it, namely, the problem of enabling our country to consume what it produces.

So the things we have been talking about here today—such as the migrant camps—are things that affect only the immediate attempts to mitigate a problem, a problem the real solution of which lies along some of the lines that I have just mentioned.

CALIFORNIA'S HOPE LIES IN GREATER WELL-BEING IN REGION FROM WHICH PEOPLE MIGRATE

The gentleman who preceded me said that we ought to provide in the region from which these folks come the means of enabling them to remain there. Oh, yes; I agree thoroughly with that, but that means it is going to cost money. It means in many cases you will have to have a program of soil conservation, that you will have to have a means of enabling more of those farm folks to earn a little money on the side through means like that.

It means you are going to have to be in earnest about the proposition of seeing to it that the farmer secures his fair share of the national income. It means, to me, anyway, that I, as a Californian, have to have a very deep and profound interest in the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority, for example, in raising the standard of living and enabling the people to get along better in that section; that I have to have a profound interest, yes, in parity payments to the farmers, even though not one penny of it goes into my district; and that I must have an interest in the rehabilitation of the people in all the United States, because, after all, unless that is done you cannot stem this migration. It means that we must work for reclamation—for lands where some of these people can go and start out on their own again.

Now California is up against a great problem.

I do not find any evidence whatever that the Farm Security Administration has encouraged this migration. On the contrary, they have spent $134,000,000 in loans to people in other States to attempt to enable them to stay where they were and make a go of things, but they have spent only $6,000,000 altogether in California.

The 12 camps that have been built in California have a total capacity of 7,200 people. The persons who know anything about California agriculture know what an infinitesimal drop in the bucket that is compared to the number of people that are needed at certain seasons to harvest California's crops.

In addition to the number to whom grants have been made in such States as Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, and other States to the north, 119,000 families have applied for loans but could not get them. These loans made to people because they did not have security, not because they did have, are today 80 percent current, and yet we threw a $25,000,000 item out of the agricultural appropriation bill for farm-tenant loans, which would have been secured loans, because we thought we were balancing the Budget. Those loans have been gilt-edged from the very beginning. They were not farm-security loans, even.

If you want to solve this California problem you have to face up to the problem of unemployment, to the problem of agricultural welfare in the States where these people come from. As a matter of actual fact, the total volume of migration to California has varied sharply in recent years. In 1937 it was the largest, when 90,000 people came into our State in immediate need of manual labor.

That was when there were 5 camps in the State, and today there are 12. In 1939 there were 64,000 people, far too many, but not as many as before. I do not believe the construction of camps is the cause of their coming. Indeed, we find that 45 percent of all this migration into California has come to the county I have the honor to represent in part, namely, Los Angeles County, where there are no camps at all.

When those people have come there, it is true that in many cases the result has been that they have gotten jobs that formerly went to people who worked for higher wages. That happened. In other words, the State of California is today up against very largely the same problem as the whole United States was up against when we had large-scale immigration into the country.

In my judgment, the solution of the problem lies not in the direction of curtailing Federal activity, which is helpful in meeting this problem and in bringing about a more decent method of handling it, but rather in an extension of those things which, as I say, I believe we have the right to expect.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SHOULD BEAR COST OF RELIEF

The one thing that seems to me most clear as a first step in this matter is this: I ask you to imagine yourself a resident of a California community where seasonal labor is required. I ask you to imagine that you find that there are a large number of homeless people, people with no other place to go, who have moved in there and work as much as they can find work, but for whom after awhile there is no work left any more. Those folks have been following the setting sun to greater opportunity. They have been doing exactly what Americans have always done. As the gentleman from Arkansas has said, by and large they are the salt of the earth. They are of old American stock, deeply religious folks, most of them, too.

On the other hand, persons who have little homes, who have their community built, who have their school districts organized are naturally concerned; they are worried; they are distressed. We have tried to maintain high standards in various ways, in old-age pensions, for example, and matters like that. We have not done so very well ourselves, but we have done better than some other States have been able to do. This has been partly due to the greater amount of wealth in our State, I am free to admit.

Here is all the stuff of possible social conflict. My appeal primarily is that it be recognized once and for all that the problem of interstate migration is due to national problems, due to national unemployment, and due to national distress of agriculture, and so on, and that it be recognized as a Federal problem and not a local one to be dealt with as best it may by the States that are the recipients of migration.

Therefore we should pass legislation here in this House to provide that whenever there is need for medical attention, whenever there is need for relief of people who are not citizens of a certain State to which they have moved, the Federal Government should bear the expenses, but it should be administered locally. Oh, this will help a little bit, but, fundamentally, the things I spoke about a few moments ago are the only things that will help; and, fundamentally, the thing that California wants more than anything else is to have legislation that will enable people to live and live decently in other parts of the country so they will not need to move; and if you really mean this then we must work upon not only the members of our delegation, but of all the delegations to see to it that we push forward with a solution of the unemployment problem, to see that we push forward with a solution of the problem of agricultural distress. Much has been done to this end, but we cannot rest. We cannot wait for an election year to pass. We cannot wait a single week or a single month without giving to these problems the most earnest and the most continuous attention that can possibly be given to them.

I have hoped that out of this great problem there will be a great gain. I have hoped that it will teach us all, those of us who come from California and those of us who come from other parts of the country, that this great Nation is all one Nation and that the problems that affect the people of one part of the country inevitably react upon the people in other parts of the country; that one part cannot be prosperous without all the other parts being prosperous; and if one suffers, all others must suffer, too. I have hopes that, having discovered this, we will likewise begin to realize that never can any nation be prosperous if it attempts to leave behind in its forward march one-fifth or one-sixth of its population. I have hopes that we will understand that to try to economize at any point, largely at the expense of human need, is always wrong, and that there has to be a better answer than that, a more fundamental answer.

Some way that will not unbalance the Budget? Yes; some better way to do it—all right—but until you find that better way it is necessary that you see to it that you do not make the same mistakes that have been made before. It is necessary that you see to it that as your people produce, so they must consume, and that we find ways in which we can either solve that problem of excess savings and a lack of consumer buying power or else we find a way to compensate for it in order that we may have not only a continuous and steady production in this country and a continuous and steady income to our Federal Government, but also a Budget balanced on a decent and fair basis. [Applause.]

I have another speech here, but I know that there are many Members of the House who are rather anxious to get on with other business. I thank you very much for listening to me, and I assure you that there is a complete speech here on the subject of unemployment that I did not deliver this afternoon. I thank you very much.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public service of our late friend and former colleague, Hon. Royal C. Johnson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] I ask unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a joint statement by a group of distinguished Democrats, dealing with the question of tariff making by the Executive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a statement by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York on the foreign purchases of silver.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under an order previously made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for 15 minutes.

INCREASE IN FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it has become increasingly evident as this session progressed that Federal expenditures day by day are steadily increasing and that notwithstanding the efforts that are being made to avoid increasing the national debt by shifting the borrowing to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation instead of direct borrowing through the Treasury, that the debt situation of the United States is more and more becoming a bar to economic recovery. Until we get to the point where we are balancing our Budget and where we are permitting industry to employ our people, the condition of the United States is continually becoming worse.

An agricultural appropriation bill has been reported to the Senate carrying increases over the amount carried in the House totaling approximately $300,000,000. This is made up of:

Surplus Commodities Corporation, approximately	$90,000,000
So-called parity payments, approximately	212,000,000

As to the surplus-commodity payments, I call attention to a quotation from the Saturday Evening Post of last week, as follows:

> BENTONVILLE, ARK.—The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation shipped 3 carlots of Washington relief apples here. Benton is one of the first five apple-producing counties in America, with 30 carlots now in cold storage here for a lack of a market, and more than half a million bearing apple trees.

This is just one of many instances of the way our money is being wasted by this organization. Its officers have that supreme qualification which has been a requisite for appointment to administrative positions all through the Roosevelt administration—total incompetence. This is not an isolated case but is one that can be duplicated thousands of times. This appropriation should be watched very carefully, and the House should make every effort to either do away with it or reduce it very substantially. If there is any alleged need, that need should be carefully covered and the item not just included without any basis whatever.

The proposal to continue so-called parity payments has a much less valid basis than the other item. At the present time wheat is selling in Chicago for a little over $1 a bushel. Its producers are being paid 9 cents a bushel on account of soil conservation and 10 cents on account of parity payments. Dollar wheat in Chicago permits a farmer to operate successfully. There can be no excuse for additional payments to farmers either on soil conservation or on parity payments when we have dollar wheat. With dollar wheat and these payments, farmers are receiving $1.19 per bushel.

With reference to cotton—cotton is 11 cents a pound in New York. The market on the farm is certainly 9 cents. With the cotton farmer receiving 9 cents on the farm, 1.6 cents for conservation payments, and 1.55 cents for parity payments, it makes a total of 12.15 cents per pound. My understanding is that cotton farmers who can get 9 cents for their cotton are pretty well taken care of. That is, with modern machinery and modern handling, that 9 cents lets them grow cotton and make a profit. Why we should hand them 3.15 cents is beyond me.

Corn at Chicago is about 57 cents. Soil-conservation payments of 10 cents are provided and 5 cents parity payments, making a total of 72 cents. During our best years, if a farmer got 60 cents for his corn he did not do so bad.

I am putting this out in tabular form, indicating what the farmer is now getting and what he will get in 1941 if the parity payments are continued and if the $212,000,000 is appropriated for parity payments and if the market price stays the same:

	1940				1941
	Price	Soil Conservation payment	Parity payment	Total	Price	Soil Conservation payment	Parity payment	Total
Wheat	$1.00	$0.09	$0.10	$1.19	$1.00	$0.09	$0.09	$1.18
Corn	.57	.10	.05	.72	.57	.10	.05	.72
Cotton	.09	.016	.0155	.1215	.09	.016	.0155	.1215

The result of the soil-conservation payments has been to crowd farmers out of wheat, cotton, and corn and into dairy products and into other agricultural products which are facing the same kind of a situation. To put it another way, the total cash farm income in 1939 was $8,518,046,000. The total income of farmers from corn, wheat, and cotton was $1,331,521,000. This means that we are paying to farmers who contribute 15.6 percent toward the total agricultural income a bonus amounting to approximately $800,000,000 this year, and the result of that operation is to reduce the price of other farm products such as fruits, vegetables, dairy products, poultry, and livestock, so that the producers of these commodities will not fare so well.

When the promoters of the so-called parity proposition came before Congress, with wheat at 60 cents, corn at 40 cents, and cotton at 6 or 7 cents, they had a right to say that the price was below a fair one; when they come to us at a time when the price is high enough to yield a moderate return, and we have already provided $500,000,000 for soil-conservation payments to continue, are we not in a situation of some of those people who would deceive the farmer for political purposes, crying "Thief, thief!" when there is no thief?

At this time and with the situation that appears to be confronting the country there is absolutely no excuse for continuing the so-called parity payments in 1941.

I am not going to say what is a fair price on the farm; it depends on the farmer's method of production; it depends upon the price of farm labor; it depends upon the taxes the farmer has to pay; and the general average price of the things he has to use. I am going to say that you cannot determine that price by what the price was 25 years ago and be fair. I am going to say this: That you cannot continue such large payments to farmers for so-called parity payments when the market prices are what they are today and when the soil-conservation payments are being used to destroy the 84 percent of agriculture which does not receive much of the soil-conservation payments and none of the parity payments.

Continually the debt is growing larger. Continually it is getting to be more and more a bar to the return of prosperity. I ask the agricultural representatives to stand four-square against these parity payments at this time so that we may have an opportunity of keeping down the appropriations to a moderately reasonable figure and preventing such a large deficit as to totally prevent recovery and the employment of our people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under an order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE APPROPRIATION TO COMBAT VENEREAL DISEASES

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, in a few days the House of Representatives will be face to face with the question as to whether the warfare against venereal diseases in the United States shall go on with zeal and effectiveness or whether it is to be starved by a lack of the necessary funds to a point where it is certain to be disorganized, disintegrated, and in many places entirely abandoned.

This is an issue that ought to challenge the attention of the American people.

I am posed here today in what for me is a very unusual role. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have helped to cut innumerable items, but in my 9 years of service on the committee the times when I have advocated the raising of Budget estimates could be enumerated on the fingers of one hand, with one or two fingers to spare. This is one of those rare occasions. The Budget Bureau is a man-controlled instrumentality, and, being human, it is not infallible. It is likely to err, just as we are all likely to err. In my opinion its general tendency, especially in recent years, when zeal for recovery has been a strong impelling force, and experimentation has been the order of the day, has been to recommend excessive appropriations, which have not always harmonized with sound economics and the national welfare, but in this matter of an appropriation to fight venereal diseases I think the Budget has cut too low.

It was my privilege last year to lead the fight in the committee and the House which resulted in the Budget item of $3,000,000 for this purpose being increased to $5,000,000, which is the amount available for the current fiscal year—1940. There is a statutory authorization for $7,000,000 to carry on the antivenereal campaign during the fiscal year 1941, but the Budget Bureau has recommended that the amount be cut back to $3,000,000, the sum appropriated for the first year of the 3-year program. The Budget's action has created no end of sadness and disappointment among the sincere people who have thrown all of their energies and resourcefulness into the war on this devastating scourge, as they see in it the virtual collapse of all their plans.

BILLIONS FOR WAR PURPOSES, THOUSANDS FOR HEALTH

We are spending astronomical sums, the magnitude of which no human mind can conceive, for preparedness against wars which are not likely ever to happen, which, pray God, never will happen, and which I do not think ever will come, if we keep out of world meddling and attend to our own affairs, and in our zealousness in that direction we seem to overlook the fact that we are up to our necks in another war, a war not of the future but of the present, a real war and not one of the imagination—a war against insidious and malignant disease in our own country. The number of persons killed and disabled by syphilis every year in the United States would make the American casualties in the World War seem small in comparison. Every year there are 500,000 new cases of syphilis in the United States and at the very minimum twice that many new cases of gonorrhea—an appalling picture.

It would challenge the descriptive ability of a Victor Hugo or a Dickens to portray the tragedies that have been brought into countless thousands of the homes of our land by the stealthy antisocial diseases which this appropriation is set up to combat. Along with their other terrible effects, syphilis and gonorrhea are responsible for a conspicuous proportion of blindness in this country. Current studies of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness reveal that more than 25,000 blind men, women, and children in the United States—approximately one-sixth of the entire blind population—lost their sight as the result of syphilis or gonorrhea.

Do not these poor mortals, groping in eternal darkness, touch our heartstrings? Even if they did not, even if we were to forget all humanitarian considerations in our thought of these pitiful unfortunates, the fact remains that the cost of educating and otherwise assisting sightless persons throughout their lifetime is a notable item in the public budget. Up-to-date records of schools for the blind in all sections of the country show that about 12 percent of the blind children lost their sight through syphilitic infection and about 8 percent through gonorrheal infection—a total of 20 percent whose blindness can be traced directly to venereal diseases. Scarcely less despairing are the statistics relating to the adult blind. At least 13 percent of the blind adults in the United States are sightless as a result of syphilitic infection and at least 4 percent as the result of gonorrheal infection. The pity of it is that most of these tragedies are needless.

It is a proven fact that prospective mothers who are infected with syphilis can bear healthy children if prenatal antisyphilitic treatment is administered in time. If all cases of syphilis among expectant mothers could be discovered, which is possible through blood tests, and followed up with early treatment, their babies might be born into the world without being doomed to blindness. Oh, there are many things to be done to curb this awful infliction on the human race, and the campaign, so full of hope and promise, has only fairly begun! Let us not starve it by withholding the necessary funds.

COLLAPSE OF ANTIVENEREAL CAMPAIGN FEARED

Let us consider for a moment the disastrous effects that would result if this appropriation should be reduced, as proposed by the Budget. That, I think, would be nothing less than a major blow to humanity. I do not know how better to describe the certain and inevitable effect in a word or two than to say that it would take all of the heart out of the antivenereal campaign. It would knock the props out from under all that has been so well builded up to date. It would mean the virtual collapse of the antivenereal campaign on the widespread scale of efficiency on which it has been projected and carefully thought out.

After years of efforts the interest of the States has at last been aroused to a high pitch and the program is now going ahead with the utmost degree of harmonious coordination and cooperation. Taking away Federal funds will mean that the plan of combating venereal diseases which has been so carefully devised will be tremendously affected, abandoned entirely in some places and in other places drastically curtailed, and the sufferers will be the millions of victims, actual and potential, of this dreadful disease, who should be the objects of our tenderest solicitude. The States which are now cooperating splendidly with the Federal Government would lose interest and spirit. It is not an overdrawn picture to say that in some States the work would be completely wrecked and in even the most prosperous States progress would be halted and retarded.

If we think of that gloomy prospect and then contemplate the hopeful prophecy of Dr. William F. Snow, of New York, one of the world's greatest authorities on venereal diseases, I doubt whether there will be any sentiment for reducing the appropriation. In a letter to me Dr. Snow makes this statement:

I would say that, to my mind, there is no doubt whatever, of our ability eventually to stamp out venereal diseases in this country if we can go forward uninterruptedly with the appropriations for Federal assistance to the States envisaged in the Venereal Disease Control Act of May 24, 1938.

STATES DOING THEIR PART

I have stated that under the stimulus of this Federal appropriation the States, counties, and cities are showing themselves alive to their responsibilities and are doing their part willingly and with alacrity in this antivenereal campaign, and I wish I had time to cite illustrations of cooperation to prove this undeniable fact. It has been understood from the beginning that no payments of Federal money were to be used to replace existing State or local appropriations for venereal activities. Congress distinctly had in mind aiding States to expand and perfect their facilities and personnel for conquering syphilis and gonorrhea. There was no thought of assuming responsibility for either administration or costs in the several States and Territories. With this understanding the States have risen nobly to their obligations.

In the present fiscal year 1940, for which Congress appropriated $5,000,000, the States and their subdivisions have appropriated upwards of $7,000,000, and current data indicate that from all sources to date approximately $2 of State and local funds are available for each Federal dollar. By the close of 1939 every State, the Territories, and the District of Columbia had established bureaus or subdivisions for administration of the venereal disease control program. In 1938 such units existed in only 27 of these 53 areas. Every State now employs case finding and case workers.

Meanwhile, under the aegis of this program, important scientific research projects in problems relating to diagnosis and treatment of syphilis and gonorrhea are making substantial headway.

Special training courses for physicians and public-health administrators have produced more and better trained personnel. One of the most hopeful signs is the change in the public's attitude. No longer is the word syphilis spoken with bated breath. The new view is that syphilis is a great evil, not to be hid under a bushel and ignored but to be sought out and eradicated. There is no longer any doubt about the general public's understanding and support of the program, or the appreciation of the services by sick people in need of diagnosis and treatment for these diseases.

TESTIMONY OF STATE HEALTH OFFICERS

I wish I might read letters that have come to my attention from scores of State health officers attesting to the progress that is being made toward stamping out venereal diseases in their States under this program. In a letter expressing his appreciation of this Federal aid, Dr. Verne K. Harvey, director of the State Board of Health of my home state, Indiana, says:

There is much to be done yet in syphilis control. We have only begun to scratch the surface.

Dr. George W. Bowman, an eminent expert, who has been appointed to head the division of venereal diseases in Indiana, is in complete agreement with Dr. Harvey in regard to the value of this Federal appropriation.

Dr. C. D. Bowdoin, of the Department of Health of the State of Georgia, writes:

We now have approximately 100 clinics established in the State of Georgia and a number of our older clinics have been reorganized. Drugs are now furnished free to clinics and private physicians for all patients. Our organized health counties are showing greater activity than ever and we are very much encouraged over prospects. Allotments of Federal money for venereal disease purposes have made possible a program which undoubtedly will be of inestimable value to our future generations.

Dr. W. B. Grayson, State health officer for Arkansas, writes:

I believe all of the States can make better use of their allotments for the fiscal year 1941 than they did for the first year, due to the fact that they now have some plans and programs operating, and the service is very popular and in demand.

Dr. F. P. Helm, of the Kansas State Board of Health, writes:

We would deplore any future reduction in our allotment, or the authorized appropriation. It would be disastrous for us to get the thing going well and then not have the funds to carry on.

Dr. Harry F. Parker, State health commissioner of Missouri, says:

To begin a new program, it was necessarily delayed in securing and training of personnel, and for that reason we were unable to complete our plans. We hope during the coming year to have all our funds budgeted to widen the scope of the work.

Dr. Fred S. Kent, for the Department of Public Health of Vermont, writes:

The funds available the last 2 years have meant a greatly expanded program for Vermont. We have operated on a five-point program. Federal funds have made this possible.

And so on, over and over again, in a hundred different ways, the State health officers from all of the States, who are in close touch with the venereal problem, express their faith in the Federal program and testify that the Federal investment has already meant restored health and employment for thousands of people who have been successfully treated for syphilis and gonorrhea, who would not have had such treatment if the Government had not taken the initiative in offering Federal assistance to the States in launching this Nation-wide campaign against the venereal diseases.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE PHASE

There is one other phase of this problem I should like to discuss briefly. It perhaps is not the most important phase and yet it is really important. I refer to the national antivenereal campaign in its relation to national defense. In a warring world our thought and attention are being centered as never before in national defense. It is well when we think of preparedness to bear in mind that we cannot fight a war with an army that is lowered in morale and weakened in endurance by disease. We have heard a great deal about where our first line of defense is and I think I know where it is located. I think our first line of defense is in the fine, healthy, vigorous manhood of America. I would like for some expert to tell me how we can expect to win wars with men whose morale is broken and whose bodies are weakened by disease.

In this connection I wish to read to the House a letter I have just received from Gen. John J. Pershing, who commanded the American Expeditionary Force in France and who is now the highest ranking officer in the American Army. When I thought of this venereal-disease problem in its relation to national defense I thought of General Pershing as the highest authority whom I could consult. I sent to him the following letter:

JANUARY 31, 1940.

Gen. JOHN J. PERSHING,
Tucson, Arizona.

DEAR GENERAL PERSHING: There is now pending before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives an estimate for an appropriation to the Public Health Service to provide funds for grants to the States to combat the venereal diseases. The appropriation is in response to the La Follette-Bulwinkle bill, passed on the same subject several years ago.

The same matter was before the House last year and at that time I took occasion to make some study of it and became interested in it. My studies led me to statements made by yourself during the war on the importance to the military forces of the control of these scourges. At this time when the country is aware of the necessity for preparedness, it seems to me that this matter is of unusual importance. I write to respectfully suggest that you send to me a short statement of your views on the subject so that I may present them to the committee.

We shall all be interested in your opinion on the matter, as we are in your continued good health.

Very sincerely,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

GEN. PERSHING'S WISE ADMONITION

Writing from his winter home in Arizona he sends me the following reply:

TUCSON, ARIZ., February 17, 1940.

Congressman LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: In your letter of January 31 you request a statement of my views on the question of social diseases.

Upon our entry into the World War it was well known that these diseases had always been a serious handicap to the effectiveness of armies. At the outset, therefore, we instituted regulations by which we were able to keep the incidence of venereal diseases at a lower rate than ever before known in our own or any other army. A very different and appalling national situation is presented by statistics today. As military preparedness depends largely upon the health of our Nation, the prevalence of these diseases would be a serious problem in a national emergency. Moreover, we owe it to posterity to do something about it.

The Public Health Service has undertaken to solve this problem, and I am gratified to know that you and the Appropriations Committee are interested in its importance.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. PERSHING.

This is not an ordinary testimonal. It is a testimonial from the head of the Military Establishment, the general of the Army, who know all about the subject. When he says that military preparedness depends largely upon the health of our Nation and that the prevalence of these diseases would be a serious problem in a national emergency, he speaks an almighty truth that cannot be controverted.

LET US SPEND A FRACTION OF OUR WAR COSTS TO RELIEVE HUMAN SUFFERING

We are spending for national defense this year $2,000,000,000 and next year the appropriations for that purpose will be around $1,800,000,000. I do not have the slightest doubt that this proposed small appropriation of $7,000,000 to stamp out venereal diseases would be worth more to the cause of national defense than a battleship, yet the amount proposed to fight venereal diseases is not more than one-fifteenth of the cost of a modern battleship and a mere bagatelle compared with the total national-defense appropriations. I believe in adequate national defense, but I do not think that such an overwhelming preponderance of our national expenditures should be for the destruction of life. Let us think a little more about saving life and allaying misery. The difference between the authorization and the amount provided for in this estimate for the antivenereal campaign would mean many more clinics, many more treatments, and many more cures in the warfare against this awful disease, and the cost would be a very small fraction compared with the money we are spending for preparations to destroy life. This campaign against syphilis is a going campaign; it is a well-organized and well-directed campaign; and let us not do anything to stop it just when it is becoming effective. The smallest naval unit costs more to construct than this proposed appropriation to build up the health and hope and happiness of mankind. But dismissing entirely the national defense value of the appropriation and directing my plea, for whatever it may be worth, to the humanities, I would like to leave in the minds of Members this thought:

When we are pouring out such colossal sums for the instruments of death and destruction should not we, as representatives of a Christian Nation, appropriate this relatively insignificant amount, not to destroy lives and wreck worlds, but to relieve human suffering and save and conserve life and health in our beloved land?

I leave that question with you and I thank you for your kind attention. [Applause.]

I present for the thoughtful consideration of the House certain illuminating documents which I have received, including letters from Dr. William F. Snow and Dr. Thomas Parran and a statement by Mr. Alan Johnstone, as follows:

THE AMERICAN SOCIAL HYGIENE ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1940.

Honorable LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW: I wrote you in my preliminary acknowledgment of your letter of February 26 that I would bring to your office today some data and material relating to your very pertinent questions regarding progress made under the Federal appropriations for control of venereal diseases. The attached correspondence and tabulation convincingly show, I think, that real progress has been made and that Congress should appropriate the authorized $7,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940–41 in order to avoid any danger of this program lapsing, or losing the enthusiasm and practical benefit of uninterrupted public support and local as well as State activities.

You ask, first, "What kind of a set-up has been established under the appropriations?"

(a) The United States Public Health Service has organized its Venereal Disease Division with regional offices so as to give the most helpful personnel advice, and assistance to the States and their subdivisions in developing the most effective venereal disease control and treatment activities.

(b) In addition, the Public Health Service has provided a limited number of experienced consultants on syphilis, gonorrhea, and administration of venereal disease control measures, who are available for consultation and field assistance on unsettled and difficult problems in relation to these diseases.

(c) The Public Health Service is making available to State health officers mobile diagnosis and treatment units and other facilities for demonstration purposes where demonstrations will accelerate the understanding and launching of more effective methods.

(d) Similarly, the Service is providing important assistance in adequate record keeping and particularly in prompt tabulating of data, for current use in health departments not yet equipped with modern mechanical devices for such purposes.

(e) In many other ways, such as providing source material for public-information programs of the States and communities and in developing research with particular reference to more effectively applying existing knowledge in diagnosis, treatment, and public-health control, the Public Health Service Division of Venereal Diseases is operating to cut the costs and increase the effectiveness of existing State and local programs for dealing with the venereal diseases.

The Federal set-up sketched above has been very important in relation to interpreting to States and communities the purposes of Congress in providing the venereal disease Federal grants-in-aid, and in arriving at mutually acceptable conditions for allotting and expending these grants without centralizing control with the Federal Government or handicapping the freedom of planning and carrying out the work to be done in the several States.

(f) On the basis of this Federal set-up, every State has already established a venereal-disease division with a director of venereal disease control work. These divisions or bureaus have made remarkable progress in the 2 years of operation of this act. The Surgeon General's reports are convincing on this point.

Without going into detail, it may be said that the objectives of these bureaus and their cooperative relations with county and city health-department staffs and citizen groups have been concerned with (1) finding existing cases of syphilis and gonorrhea; (2) getting these persons (especially the early infectious cases) under adequate treatment promptly; (3) building up nursing and social-service follow-up activities to prevent these cases from infecting others; (4) informing and educating selected groups of the population in ways and means of safeguarding themselves from infection.

(g) In carrying out the above State and local programs, the following facilities have been concentrated upon in these first 2 years: (1) Providing dependable and accessible laboratory diagnostic aids and securing the cooperation of physicians in utilizing these laboratory facilities to the best advantage in controlling syphilis and gonorrhea; (2) distribution of drugs to clinics, institutions, and medical practitioners for use in cases particularly where provision of free drugs is important; (3) provision of medical consultant services in centers of greatest prevalence of these diseases; (4) similar provisions of special nursing and social-work consultants.

The reading of letters and statements in which the several State health officers have described their activities provides most interesting and encouraging evidence of the setting up of practical administrative procedures for putting at work the joint Federal-State funds for venereal-disease control.

2. "To what extent will that set-up and its capacity for effective service be diminished or destroyed if the appropriation for the fiscal year 1940-41 is reduced to $3,000,000?"

(a) Correspondence and testimony last year indicated how damaging health officers and informed citizens throughout the entire country viewed the possibility of a reduction to $3,000,000 for the current year. The steady growth of State and local activities since that time, on the basis of the $5,000,000 appropriated substantiates the wisdom of the congressional decision to appropriate the $5,0000,000 authorized for the fiscal year 1939-40.

(b) The reduction at this time of the expected $7,000,000 to $3,000,000 would, in the judgment of health officers and citizens who have observed this work most closely, result in completely wrecking the work in a large number of States, and would stop progress even in the most prosperous States of the Union.

(c) Probably, however, the most damaging influence would be the loss of enthusiasm and confidence on the part of everyone concerned. It should be kept in mind that during the present fiscal year, only three or four State legislatures are in session, and the State and local medical and public-health authorities cannot look to their legislatures to provide any emergency funds even if the States could afford to provide them to take the place of the expected allotments for Federal assistance for the last 6 months of the year 1940. It should also be kept in mind that it will be that same period between July and December 1940; that State legislators and citizens everywhere will be considering State, county, and city budgets for consideration and adoption, beginning January 1941. If Congress now considers the money situation so difficult that $7,000,000 confidently counted upon for Federal participation in this program must be cut to $3,000,000, both the quality and the quantity of good work which is now being done will suffer to a much greater degree than is represented by the approximate 60-percent reduction in money.

The reading of letters received from State and local health officers indicates in specific terms what the actual losses would be, and on this basis it is conservative to express the opinion that the syphilis germ will regain most of the ground it has lost in the last 2 years if this reduction to $3,000,000 takes place.

3. "What plans have been made for the future?"

(a) The reports of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service and the several State health officers show that definite plans have been made for perfecting the administrative and technical facilities to provide fully satisfactory laboratory and diagnostic services within the next few years in all the States and Territories.

In this connection, one of the greatest factors is competent personnel; and the continued growth of adequate training facilities for the required personnel constitutes one of the important items in plans for the future.

(b) The encouragement of steady growth of active participation of the medical, nursing, and social work professional groups is another vital factor in rapid progress toward the control of syphilis and gonorrhea. The appropriation of the $7,000,000 will enable the Federal, State, and local authorities to include in their programs effective cooperation in this direction.

(c) The constant objective, of course, is to get beyond the immediate program of finding and treating of more and more cases to the real preventive measures program of increasing the number of people who are not exposed and who can be taught how to avoid exposure. It is perfectly sound administration to concentrate in these early years upon finding cases and getting them under treatment, both for their own sakes and for the benefit of communities through rendering such cases promptly noninfectious. But as in other diseases which have been controlled, it is important to have in mind the great mass of people who have not yet been infected and who may be safeguarded from infection by knowledge, by protection of their environment, and by additional measures which may from time to time apply to them as individuals or groups. In these directions, the steady development of public information and education regarding the venereal diseases is important. For the same reasons, it is important that men and women planning marriage should be particularly examined and protected from infecting each other and the families they are founding. Similarly, it is important to protect children by requiring prenatal examinations for syphilis and by other types of group examinations, carefully worked out and tactfully applied.

Once the big job has been done of finding and getting under treatment all the syphilis and gonorrhea cases which have accumulated in past years because of secrecy and lack of action, this whole field of new and effective measures for prevention can be tackled. When this point is reached, results may be expected in a rapid decline of new cases of these diseases because their nature and difficulties of spread are such that they will yield ground rapidly under a determined and continued preventive medicine program in which not only health authorities, physicians, and the allied professions but the general public as well are engaged.

In your letter of February 26, you state that you are "impressed with the great importance of this anti-venereal-disease campaign." I join you heartily in this viewpoint. General Pershing recently said, as chairman of the American Social Hygiene Association's Anti-Syphilis Committee, that he had accepted that chairmanship because of his "desire to help this body of distinguished and representative men and women stimulate voluntary support of the health authorities and arouse local leadership in all parts of the United States. If this can be accomplished; and if these groups of our people, both individually and collectively, will take hold of this problem and stick to it, there is no doubt whatever of our ability eventually to stamp out venereal disease in this country. Let us go forward from this social hygiene day with courage, and with confidence in our ability to accomplish this great task than which there is nothing more important in our national life."

Applying General Pershing's view not only to the importance of the general public's participation but to the continued participation of Congress in this program, I would say that to my mind there is "no doubt whatever of our ability eventually to stamp out venereal diseases in this country," if we can go forward uninterruptedly with the appropriations for Federal assistance to the States envisaged in the Venereal Disease Control Act of May 24, 1938.

Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM F. SNOW, M. D.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: I have not made any mention of the present limited emergency or national defense, because the vital importance of this venereal disease control work should be considered on the basis of its value to people in civil life and to their children, irrespective of any necessity for military and naval forces or other personnel for national defense.

However, everything which is done now in this matter for the sake of civilians will immediately benefit and reduce the cost of medical care and preservation of high standards of health among the military and naval personnel now in training or being selected for future service.

In this sense, the entire $7,000,000 asked as an appropriation might be counted as a wise and most profitable national-defense expenditure.

W. F. S.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LUDLOW was granted leave to include in his remarks three letters and a brief statement.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, February 29, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. LUDLOW: Your letter of February 26 has been received, and it is very encouraging to know of your continued interest in the venereal disease control campaign and your desire to continue this work in the most effective manner.

Replying to your question as to what amount was asked for venereal disease control work for the fiscal year 1941, I wish to report that when the original budget estimates for the fiscal year 1941 were prepared, the Public Health Service asked that the full $7,000,000 authorized in the act of May 24, 1938, be appropriated. The Federal Security Agency reduced this estimate from $7,000,000 to $5,000,000. The Federal Security Administrator advised us that the reason for the reduction of our estimate was his stated policy for this year of not asking for an increase in appropriations for 1941 over 1940, except when made necessary by new legislation or new or enlarged facilities. Subsequently, the estimates as submitted to the Congress contained an item of only $3,000,000 for the control of the venereal diseases by the Public Health Service in the fiscal year 1941. The reasons for the latter decrease were not given.

Replying further to your inquiry of February 26, I wish to state that the proposed $2,000,000 reduction in the appropriation for the control of the venereal diseases represents almost one-fifth of the total amounts being expended by Federal, State, and local governments for this purpose. During the last fiscal year, as well as the fiscal year 1940, there has been considerable expansion in the diagnostic, treatment, and case-finding work pertaining to the control of the venereal diseases and this expansion has been stimulated largely by the Federal grants-in-aid for the purpose. It is obvious that if the total governmental funds employed for the provision of fundamental venereal disease control services are decreased by almost 20 percent, the services themselves must be correspondingly decreased. If State and local governments become discouraged through failure of the Federal Government to provide funds in accordance with the authorization contained in the act of May 24, 1938, the extent to which services may be reduced will be even greater should the State and local governments follow the example and make reduced appropriations themselves.

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS PARRAN,
Surgeon General.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW, M. C.,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

STATEMENT BY MR. ALAN JOHNSTONE PREPARED FOR CONGRESSMAN LUDLOW

Syphilis is more expensive than dollars. At this time when this Nation is giving its attention to military preparedness it should recognize the enemy within its gates as well as think about its enemies abroad. Public enemy No. 1 in times of war and in times of peace is syphilis. It kills and maims more soldiers and sailors and more men, women, and children than any known disease. The late Sir William Osler, one of the founders of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, said that 10 percent of the population of American cities had syphilis either in an active or dormant stage.

At the Second Battle of the Marne, the French Army had more soldiers in hospitals from venereal infection than from battle wounds. In the draft army of 4,000,000 men recruited in America in the World War the percentage of those called under the Selective Service Act who had a venereal infection ranged from 0.4 percent in the State of Oregon to 12 percent in the State of Mississippi. The program inaugurated by the United States Army, United States Navy, and the Public Health Service during the World War period to reduce that rate of infection was the most remarkable achievement in sanitary science in this generation. It was conceived and prosecuted by a modest patriot whose name is Dr. William Freeman Snow, who has appeared and urged the necessity for this current appropriation. He worked first with that great sanitarian, William C. Gorgas, then Surgeon General of the United States Army, and Major General Ireland (retired), former Surgeon General of the United States Army. If Dr. Gorgas were living today he would say that no appropriation before this Congress is more important than this one. General Ireland, who is living today, says just that.

When I addressed the Congress on this subject last year, I had occasion to quote the statement made to Lord Milnor, the Secretary of War of Great Britain. General Pershing, after an extended and bitter experience with this baffling problem on the Mexican border, reached and expressed the conclusion that venereal disease is the most powerful enemy an army has to face.

The La Follette-Bulwinkle bill declares war on these diseases. It proposed an initial appropriation of $3,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1939, $5,000,000 for 1940, and $7,000,000 for 1941, and thereafter such appropriations as the Congress deemed appropriate for so long a period as is necessary to conquer this curse. The Congress appropriated $3,000,000 in 1939, $5,000,000 in 1940, and the question is, Will the Congress appropriate $7,000,000 for the year 1941?

Fine progress has already been made. These funds are to be used by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service as grants-in-aid for health authorities for the several States of the Union. For every dollar invested by the United States in this campaign more than $1 is supplied from local revenue. For every recruit mobilized in the national campaign against these conditions, many recruits join the local forces. A statement of the results achieved to date from the appropriations already authorized is handed me by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. Let me brief it for you:

In 1939, 5,600,000 blood tests for syphilis were made, as compared with 3,600,000 in 1938. The number of persons seeking treatment showed proportional gains. Almost 60 percent more persons were brought under treatment for the first time in the fiscal year 1938–39 (315,000) than in 1937–38 (197,000).

Clinics have increased. In 1939, 2,405 venereal-disease clinics reported to the Public Health Service an increase of 37.7 percent over 1938 and an increase of 287 percent over 1930, when only 659 clinics reported. Treatments administered in these clinics increased from 5,200,000 in 1938 to 8,000,000 in 1939. Free drugs distributed to private physicians and clinics for treatment of indigents rose from 2,800,000 doses in 1938 to 4,700,000 in 1939.

As a result, during the fiscal year 1938–39, 103,000 persons were discharged from clinics as cured or with syphilis arrested. In 1937–38 the figure was 25,000 less, or 78,000.

Progress in prenatal and premarital detection of syphilis has been achieved. Nineteen States now require examinations including blood tests for syphilis of all applicants for marriage licenses, and 17 States require physicians to perform blood tests for syphilis on expectant mothers.

The medical statesmen of this country favor this appropriation in full, as well as the sanitarians—both national and local—yet the sinews of war get encouragement from war. The mothers of this country who know the terrible toll in death and pain that they and their daughters might suffer from these scourges favor this appropriation. The great religious leaders are for it. The soldiers of this country, both past and future, favor this appropriation. Young men and women—the future fathers and mothers of the citizens of the United States—favor this appropriation. It is not unreasonable to hope that since we know the danger of these diseases; that since the doctors know how to fight it; that since we are making progress in the fight and since the overwhelming body of informed opinion is behind the fight giving force and weight and rigidity to the cutting edges of our weapon, that the Congress of the United States in the interest of all people and for their protection will vote their money to do their work.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 12, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Son of God, who in the days of Thy flesh didst oft repair to the secret place for communion with Thy Father: Grant that as we come into Thy presence we may find it a sanctuary, secure from the clamor of the world, where no controversy penetrates, where no rivalries can live within its gates of peace. Here may we step out of the shallows of impetuosity into the clear depths of love; here may we unlearn the passion that worketh ill to our neighbor and find our futile questionings lost in a certainty deeper than our inquiring minds. And, as we turn again to respond to the call of the world's great need, toiling feverishly and often beyond our strength, when the evening bell still tarries and our work is still undone, do Thou open then the crystal fountains whence the healing waters flow, that again we may walk with Thee in the garden in the cool of the day. In Thy name, O blest Redeemer, do we offer up our prayer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, March 11, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FRAZIER submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

"The funds continued available (by the Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Act, 1941) during the fiscal year 1941 for refunds of processing and related taxes shall be available during such fiscal year for the payment, hereby authorized under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to any person who raised or produced and marketed hogs for slaughter on which there was levied, collected, or paid a processing tax under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (of 1933), or his legal representatives, of so much of such tax as was in fact borne by such person: Provided, That the amount of such tax borne by such person with respect to any particular quantity of hogs shall be deemed to be an amount equal to the processing tax payable upon an equal quantity of hogs at the time such particular quantity of hogs was marketed minus any amount by which the spread between the average hog-product value at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed and the average hog price at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during such month was less than the amount of such processing tax plus 65 cents for each hundredweight of such particular quantity of hogs: Provided further, That the rate of processing tax levied, collected, or paid with respect to any particular quantity of hogs marketed by a claimant under the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed to be the rate prevailing on the day following the day upon which such hogs were marketed by such claimant: Provided further, That any claim for payment under the provisions of this paragraph shall be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue after the date of enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1941, and proof upon such claim must be submitted prior to December 31, 1941: Provided further, That the allowance or disallowance by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of any claim filed under the provisions of this paragraph shall be reviewable in the same manner and to the same extent that the allowance or disallowance of a claim filed under the provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 is reviewable under section 906 of such act: Provided further, That account sales kept by a vendor, or a vendee, or by an agent of either, with respect to a particular quantity of hogs shall be accepted as proof of a claim for payment under the provisions of this paragraph with respect to such quantity of hogs: Provided further, That no part of any payment made under this paragraph in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with obtaining such payment, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding; and any person violating the provisions of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. FRAZIER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed. (For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL FUNDS OF CERTAIN CREDIT CORPORATIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may offer a resolution, not for immediate consideration, but to be considered in accordance with the rules of the Senate, and for the information of the Senate I ask that the clerk read the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 243), as follows:

Whereas the President, in his Budget message of January 3, 1940, estimated that it would be feasible to reduce by $700,000,000 the capital funds of certain credit corporations established by the Government at various times as emergencies have arisen; and

Whereas the credit corporations referred to in such message were not specifically enumerated, and repeated requests to have the Director of the Bureau of the Budget identify or enumerate such corporations have been denied; and

Whereas it is essential, in the public interest, that full information with respect to the reduction of the capital funds of such corporations be furnished to the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Director of the Bureau of the Budget is hereby requested to submit to the Senate immediately a list of the credit corporations whose capital funds are proposed to be reduced, in accordance with the Budget message of the President of January 3, 1940, and the amount of the proposed reduction of capital funds in the case of each such corporation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement regarding the subject matter of the resolution I have just sent forward.

On January 12 I wrote to the Director of the Budget, Mr. Smith, requesting detailed information with respect to the $700,000,000 it is proposed to divert from credit corporations to be placed into the General Treasury to avoid the necessity of asking Congress to increase the Federal debt limit of $45,000,000,000.

The Director of the Budget replied on January 17 that he was not prepared to furnish this information. On February 28 I wrote him again. Today I received a personal visit from Mr. Smith, at which time he stated that the information was not yet available, and that at least several weeks would elapse before Congress could be informed as to the details of this diversion of $700,000,000.

This detailed information should have been included in the Budget when it was submitted on January 3. I am astonished to know that the information is still incomplete.

This is a vital question, as it directly affects the appropriations now being made by Congress and an increase in the debt limit. I therefore felt it incumbent upon me to offer a resolution calling upon the Director of the Budget to furnish immediately this information to Congress.

No device should be adopted by the administration to evade by subterfuge the legal debt limit.

It is possible, and probable, that these diversions will not meet with the approval of Congress, and the Members should know this before pending appropriation bills are enacted which, unless the diversion is made, will necessitate exceeding the legal debt limit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7084. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in adoption in the District of Columbia," approved August 25, 1937;

H. R. 7114. An act to amend paragraph (c) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, as amended by act approved February 27, 1931;

H. R. 8470. An act to amend section 6 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act;

H. R. 8639. An act to change the name of a portion of Twenty-fourth Street NW. to Williamsburg Lane;

H. J. Res. 465. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 466. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the Presidential inaugural ceremonies of 1941.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

H. R. 7084. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in adoption in the District of Columbia," approved August 25, 1937;

H. R. 7114. An act to amend paragraph (c) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, as amended by act approved February 27, 1931; and

H. R. 8470. An act to amend section 6 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 8639. An act to change the name of a portion of Twenty-fourth Street NW. to Williamsburg Lane;

H. J. Res. 465. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 466. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the Presidential inaugural ceremonies of 1941; to the calendar.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, in a speech in the Senate on July 29, 1939, I referred to an article appearing in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, written by Mr. Marquis W. Childs, its Washington correspondent, concerning a trip I made to Mexico in 1937. The implications of the story were to the effect that I had improperly used my position as a Senator to further some foreign oil deal, which was entirely untrue. The wrong impression about me given by the article was due more to its implications than to the actual wording of it.

The facts stated in the article were substantially correct, but the interpretation put upon them was entirely wrong, and I resented it.

I had been informed by a source which I then considered to be responsible and reliable that the writer of the article, Mr. Childs, had received compensation from someone other than his employer for writing that story; and I made that statement on the floor of the Senate on July 29, 1939.

The person from whom I received my information has been unable or unwilling to substantiate the statement he made to me.

I now believe that the statement I made on the floor of the Senate, that Mr. Marquis W. Childs received compensation from someone other than his regular employer, was not true; and I deeply regret the incident, and ask permission to withdraw the statement.

I am doing this voluntarily. I have not discussed it with Mr. Childs or his counsel, and I have no arrangement with them whatsoever.

I merely want to correct what I think was an injustice to Mr. Childs.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8641) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senate that the bill has reached such a stage in its passage through the Senate that unanimous consent will be required for the Senator to offer the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I was advised last night that the regular order had been demanded prior to the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct; but the bill was on its passage. The Senator may pursue either one of two methods: For the purpose of offering his amendment he may move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time, or he may ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will make a brief statement prior to my request. On yesterday I submitted an amendment providing an expenditure of $8,000 to defray the expenses of delegates to an Indian conference to be held in Mexico. The amendment contained legislation. A point of order was made against the amendment, and the Chair held the point of order good. Since that time the State Department has drawn a new amendment hoping, trying, and seeking to eliminate legislation. I desire to offer that amendment. It carries the same amount of money, but, as I understand, is not contrary to existing policy. It is not legislation.

I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was advanced to its third reading be reconsidered, to the end that I may offer such an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma to reconsider the vote by which the bill was carried to its third reading? The Chair hears none. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 18, after line 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

"FIRST INTER-AMERICAN CONGRESS ON INDIAN LIFE

"For the expenses of participation by the United States in the first Inter-American Congress on Indian Life, to be held at Patzcuaro, Mex., in 1940, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; stenographic reporting, translating, and other services by contract if deemed necessary; rent; travel expense; local transportation; transportation of things; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, and periodicals; stationery; equipment; official cards; printing and binding; official entertainment; costs of assembling, installing, packing, transporting, safekeeping, demonstrating, and renovating a suitable exhibit, and the purchase of supplies incident thereto; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, fiscal year 1940, to remain available until June 30, 1941 (convention on the Pan American Union, adopted at Habana, Cuba, February 1928, ratified by the President March 6, 1931; Resolution XCIII, adopted at Montevideo, December 24, 1933; Resolution XIII, adopted at Lima, Peru, December 31, 1938), $8,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, yesterday, when the bill was before the Senate, the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] offered an amendment similar to this one. He is not now on the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, I may suggest that it is a well-established principle that the President cannot be dictated to in making appointments, and he will make these appointments; so I suggest that if a provision of that kind should be placed in the amendment it would have to go out in conference, or else the whole item probably would have to go out in conference. I am sure it is the intent of the State Department to have a liberal representation of Indians in attendance upon this conference. I make that statement authoritatively.

Mr. FRAZIER. Under this amendment, the President will make the appointments?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no objection, but I thought perhaps the Senator from New Mexico might want to offer another amendment. However, he is not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The additional amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to call up an amendment which I have on the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Amend section 9 by striking out the period at end of subsection (b) and adding the following "Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to officers or employees of the Federal Government residing and voting in any State where State laws do not forbid the officials and employees of the State or local agencies of the general class above described from taking any active part in political management or political campaigns."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I desire to make one correction in the amendment. Instead of reading "at the proper place in the bill", it should read "after the period in line 18, add the following."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, before I proceed to explain the amendment I wish to make a statement.

Regardless of whether or not my amendment is agreed to, I expect to support the pending bill. I sincerely hope my amendment will be agreed to. I believe it should be agreed to; but if it shall not be agreed to, I will support the pending legislation so long as section 9 of the original Hatch Act remains upon our statute books.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Gladly.

Mr. HATCH. I am trying to ascertain the exact place where this amendment comes in the pending bill. The copy of the amendment I have reads:

After the period in line 18, add the following—

On what page, may I ask the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment comes at the end of the committee amendment, on page 7, after line 18.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the legislation contemplated by the Hatch bill runs into the difficulty of enacting laws for our dual form of government.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Gladly.

Mr. NEELY. I inquire of the able Senator from Colorado if I am correct in believing that his amendment is based upon the theory that the Congress should not tie the hands of Federal employees to a greater extent than the hands of similar employees of the various State governments are also tied.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is exactly the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to inquire whether or not this amendment is one which is subject to division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not subject to division.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Colorado is not willing to have the amendment divided, he may say to the Senator from Washington, because, unless the first section of the amendment is adopted and agreed to, the Senator from Colorado will vote against the adoption of the second section.

The able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has stated the situation exactly. The purpose of the amendment is to bring about cooperation between State laws and Federal laws instead of coercion, as is the case now, under the original Hatch Act. Cooperation is substituted for coercion.

As I stated a moment ago, so long as section 9 remains in the original Hatch Act I believe that the Congress is under obligation to the people of this country to change that law. The provisions of section 9 in their effect upon the welfare of this country are not at all wholesome. That act does not contribute to the purity of politics in any degree; it does exactly the opposite; and that is why I have offered my amendment, in the hope that section 9 may be modified.

As was stated a few days ago by the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the eight sections of the original Hatch Act are entirely separate. I do not believe there is a Senator on either side of the aisle who is not in favor of the first eight sections of the Hatch Act. According to the newspapers, and according to some of the debate which has been carried on in the Senate, any effort to amend or change or modify section 9 is an effort to scuttle the Hatch Act. I do not hold to that opinion at all. I hold to the opposite opinion. I do not believe that section 9 is the heart of the Hatch Act. I think that section 9, instead of being the heart of the Hatch Act, is a cancerous growth upon the Hatch Act, and that it should be modified or removed.

I desire to read from section 9 so that Senators may understand exactly what are the provisions of the section to which I refer:

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election.

I skip some of the language and go to some of the exceptions, which are found several lines below the language I have just read:

For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments.

In other words, the exemptions are to the statement "for the purpose of interfering with an election," so that section 9 makes it perfectly lawful for the President and Vice President of the United States to use their official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election. The same applies to the heads and assistant heads of executive departments and to the officers in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator does not mean that under the law as a whole the officials he has mentioned are at liberty to use their official influence or authority for the purpose of interfering with an election, does he?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the way the law reads.

Mr. HATCH. That is the way the section reads; I referred to the law as a whole.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The law as a whole does not apply to the particular officers mentioned.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator read section 2 of the act, and tell us why it does not apply to those particular officers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As I have said, I am in complete accord with everything in section 2, and everything that is in sections 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8; but we are talking about section 9.

Mr. HATCH. I prefaced my statement with the words "the law as a whole," and the Senator is seeking to create the impression—and I do not mean wrongfully—that the Congress of the United States has left the President and other officials at liberty to use their official authority to interfere with elections.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It has not left them to do that; it has directed them to do so.

Mr. HATCH. I call the Senator's attention to section 2, where what he is mentioning is made a criminal offense; and in that section there are no exceptions whatever. The Senator may then continue in his line of argument.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Section 9 directs them to do that very thing; I am talking about section 9, and section 9 is the part of the law which I wish to have modified. It is the only part of the law which I do wish to have modified. It is the only part of the law in which I wish to have changes made. I am in complete accord with all the other sections. As I have said, section 9 is not in the interest of pure politics, it is in the interest, as I see it, of impure politics, and I believe the Senate should very seriously consider the provisions which appear in section 9.

The point which should be kept in mind is that an attempt is being made by the proposed legislation to do something about elections which are not held in Washington, but which are held in the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Gladly.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the effect of the Senator's amendment, it would be not only to make the pending bill, if enacted, ineffective in any State where no State law had been enacted on the subject, but it would also apply to section 9 of the present law, so that the present statute would not be effective in any State unless and until the State adopted a similar law with respect to its employees. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is true as to section 9 only. Section 9 would not be effective in any State unless the State passed a law to make its provisions apply to their employees and officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Section 9 is regarded by many people as really the heart of the present Hatch Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is not so regarded by the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Colorado regards section 9 as a cancerous part of the Hatch Act and not the heart of it at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a difference of opinion as to that. I ask the Senator whether he knows of any other Federal law denouncing certain things as unlawful the enforcement and application of which is made dependent upon the act of the legislature of a State in passing a similar statute?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; I think amendment 21 to the Constitution of the United States does that very thing. That amendment makes certain things unlawful. It sets up and prescribes what the States shall do and what the Federal Government shall do in regard to prohibition, and it states that certain things are unlawful.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is based, possibly, upon the theory of the commerce clause of the Constitution in regard to the transportation of liquor from one State to another, and so forth, as affecting the laws of a State which has adopted prohibition. But we might say the same thing might apply to our automobile statute. There is a statute on the books making it a Federal crime to steal an automobile and transport it into another State. There is also a law making kidnaping a Federal offense. It seems to me that the Federal Government cannot pass a criminal statute, or a penal statute of any sort, and make such law applicable only in a State whose legislature passes a similar law pertaining to its own employees or any other group of citizens.

In other words, the universality of a Federal statute denouncing anything as unlawful should not depend upon the whims of any legislature, or of any State authority, and particularly is that true where the statute which the Senator seeks to amend applies only to Federal employees. We undoubtedly have the right to regulate the conduct of Federal employees, and such regulation, it seems to me, should be universal. If we should say that while we have the right to regulate Federal employees and their conduct in elections or otherwise, such regulation shall not apply in any State unless the legislature has placed the same regulation and restriction upon its own employees, there would be lacking the universal application of the law which there should be. There would be a spotted application.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Under the provision of my amendment the Hatch Act might apply in the State of Kentucky and not apply in the State of Ohio. It would all depend upon the citizens of the State of Kentucky and the citizens of the State of Ohio. In other words, we should have learned from the prohibition experiment that it is not possible to purify to a greater degree than the people of a State desire. There is no use trying to purify a State from Washington if the State does not want to be pure. We have to leave it to the people of the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to cite another example, if the Senator will permit me. The Senator asked me a question a moment ago as to whether we had any law along this line. We do have such a law. The Congress adopted a formula in 1935, as I recall, in connection with unemployment-compensation insurance. The Congress passed a law assessing a tax upon employers and employees. Then it provided in that law that if any State passed an unemployment-compensation law, the employers and employees of such State could get 90-percent credit on the taxes they owed to the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, but it was not a penal statute; it was not a criminal statute. It was merely a statute based upon the theory that the Federal Government was putting up a certain amount of money, which was to be either matched or substantially increased by the taxes that would be levied by local legislation.

Our cooperative statutes have been based largely on the theory that they offered an inducement to the States to take similar action, such as our contributions to highways, which have to be matched by the States, and our contributions to old-age pensions, which have to be matched by the States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; and if a State does not do certain things, the Federal law is not operative in the State.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not operative in the State under those circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the principle of this measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree with the Senator that the same principle applies, because if a State is not willing to make its contributions to old-age pensions, and to unemployment, and to highways, the Federal Government does not under that law feel obligated to go in itself and contribute money with which to build highways.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I say that if a State is not willing to clean up its politics, the Federal Government may go in and clean up a small part of its politics.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is a perfectly sincere opinion entertained by the Senator from Colorado. Sincerity characterizes all his opinions, and I respect him for his opinion, because I know his sincerity. But we are not dealing with a contribution made in order to induce a State to make a similar contribution to carry out a certain purpose. We are undertaking to deal with certain Federal employees, and the pending amendment, I think, would apply to State employees paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. But would it not be equally as logical to pass a law to limit the application of our statutes against counterfeiting unless a State also passed a counterfeiting law? Would not the same principle apply in that case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I greatly respect the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky, as he well knows, but it seems to me that he is demonstrating the fanaticism with which this whole legislation is looked upon by some Senators and by the people of the country, when participation in a little caucus in one's own community is compared with the crime of counterfeiting and the crime of kidnaping.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Long ago we made the distinction which the Senator from Colorado is pointing out. When we refer to murder, to robbery, to counterfeiting, or crimes of similar character, we have in mind what the Senator from Kentucky well knows come within the Latin term "malum in se"—wrong in itself. But the kind of crime the Senator from Kentucky referred to is one which is a crime merely because it is prohibited.

There is not anything fundamentally wrong about one attending a caucus. There is not anything fundamentally wrong about being a delegate to a county convention. As a lawyer, the Senator from Kentucky knows there is nothing in the nature of crime in such an action. We are not talking about crime. We are talking about a prohibition against a legitimate political activity. When we come to the question of an illegitimate, or pernicious, or unlawful political activity, we are not talking about anything that is prohibited in the section to which the Senator from Colorado is referring.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not, of course, claim to be as good a lawyer as is the Senator from Michigan——

Mr. BROWN. I admit that the Senator is a much better lawyer than I am, so he does not need to claim it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recognize the difference between things which are offenses because they are prohibited by some statute and things which are bad within themselves. It may be—that I concede—there is nothing fundamentally wrong or immoral or bad in attending a caucus or a convention. If there were, then I would be a notorious criminal.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator would be in jail for a long time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have attended many of them. But there is a vast difference between going to a caucus or a convention of your own accord, when you have been chosen by those who have power to choose, and the thing which I think is malum in se, so far as this particular legislation is concerned, and which is the objective of the bill introduced by the Senator from New Mexico originally, and the bill introduced by him now; that is, the power of someone to influence or coerce, either by domination or by threat, the exercise of the right of suffrage.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. I do not think that the stealing of an automobile and its transportation from one State to another can have so damaging an effect upon our political institutions and upon organized society as the power of some man to say, "Unless you vote as I tell you to vote, or unless you make a contribution to some campaign you cannot hold a position under organized society." I do not believe that I am exaggerating the effect and the evil results of this sort of a situation, and it cannot be minimized merely by comparing it to voluntary attendance at a caucus held in a courthouse, or voluntary attendance as a delegate at some function.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky, like the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Georgia, whenever he discusses the question of prohibiting political activity, gets into a discussion of political activity which is illegitimate, which is pernicious, which is wrong. I do not believe there is any Senator present who is not willing, by statutory action, to condemn that kind of political activity, although, to make myself perfectly clear, there is a good deal of objection to having it done in the States by the Federal Government. But, as the Senator in the latter part of his remarks pointed out, in attempting to prevent iniquitous practices on the part of some officials who might be guilty of improper or pernicious political activity, the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Kentucky attempt to condemn all political activity.

Perhaps the term "all" is a little too inclusive, but they certainly condemn many political activities which are entirely proper.

It can be conceived that a collector of internal revenue whom the Senator from Kentucky has recommended to the President, and who has been appointed to office, would of his own volition desire to attend a political convention. It is conceivable that the United States district attorney at Grand Rapids, Mich., who was confirmed upon my recommendation by the Senate day before yesterday, might want to make a political speech in behalf of the Democratic Party. It is my contention that the effort to bring all persons connected with the Government within this prohibition does more injury and damage than good.

I think, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] well said the other day—and it was somewhat along the line of my own thought—that the Senator from New Mexico should take advantage of the opportunity of deferring this matter for a few days, or a couple of weeks, in order that he might attempt to define the iniquitous, the pernicious, the improper activities which are always referred to by Senators when they discuss this situation.

The Senator from Colorado and myself and others are talking about political activities which have for 150 years been considered entirely legitimate, which it is now proposed to strike down because some persons perhaps have used their powers improperly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to take the time of the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. BROWN. I think he is willing to have the Senator take all the time he wants to take.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to observe that it is difficult to define by language in a statute even the word "pernicious" as applied to politics, and we all know that "pernicious political activity" is a flexible term, and its interpretation depends upon the facts of each case.

We have thousands upon thousands of rural mail carriers all over the United States; and once in a while one of them who is naturally politically inclined gets into trouble because he has been charged with talking to the patrons on his rural route about some candidate for office, and someone makes a charge against him of pernicious political activities. An inspector is sent out to examine the facts and make a report to the Civil Service Commission and to the Post Office Department. In every case of that sort the "perniciosity," if I may coin such a word, depends upon the facts as they are found in the particular case. So it is utterly impossible in a statute to define "pernicious political activity."

If my collector of internal revenue and the Senator's collector of internal revenue are to be allowed under the law to go as delegates to a convention, why not allow their deputies also to go? They are American citizens, and they hold only a minor office under the collector of internal revenue. If the deputy is allowed to go because the collector is allowed to go, how much influence ought the collector to be allowed to exert over his deputy as a delegate to the convention? The deputy may not happen to favor the candidate favored by the collector; and if the collector desires to put on pressure under threat that "unless you vote as I want you to, for my candidate, your job will be terminated tomorrow or at some other time," how are we to control the distinction between the right or the obligation and the moral question? I think a moral question is involved. I am not dogmatic on the subject, but it seems to me that a moral question is involved. Where are we to draw the line between the collector and the deputy collector, or between the United States marshal and the deputy marshal, or between the district attorney and the assistant district attorney? If we cannot draw a line of distinction between them, how can we draw the line as between any of the others who are subject to appointment?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I wish to bring one point to the Senator's attention, and then I shall subside.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to reply to the argument submitted by the Senator from Kentucky. I am in favor of letting the people decide the question. If they want to send an internal-revenue collector or his deputy to a convention, I am willing for them to decide the question. I do not think we ought to decide it in Washington.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator has made a very good reply.

I call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] to the fact that he has drawn the line in his bill. He would permit the Senator from Kentucky, ALBEN W. BARKLEY, to go to a convention, but he draws a definite line of distinction between him and the collector of internal revenue whom the Senator from Kentucky may have recommended for appointment. In my own consideration of this matter I cannot see why we should condemn the collector of internal revenue, whom the Senator has recommended for appointment, and not condemn the Senator himself. The Senator is just as likely to be guilty of that type of politics as is the collector. Of course, I am only using the Senator as an example.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that. I am probably subject to the same temptation. If the collector happened to be a delegate, and I wanted to "put the screws" to him in order to compel him to vote my way in the convention—

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the Senator would do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; but I could do it, and I would be subject to the same sort of temptation.

However, there is another difference, if the Senator will permit me to restate it. It has been stated over and over again. I think we are consistent in the attitude that we not only have a right but we owe a duty to the people to present to the people their cause, and the manner in which we have performed our duties.

That is a duty which we owe to the people, because they choose us. But they do not choose the collector or the deputy collector; and if the collector, the deputy collector, and all the others are to be permitted to exercise political influence and take part in politics, why not repeal the law which prevents rural mail carriers from engaging in political activity? I dare say the average rural-mail carrier has more influence on his route than have all the politicians in the State.

Mr. BROWN. How about the sheriff of the county? He is in exactly the same position; but his is an elective office.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are not dealing with the sheriff of the county.

Mr. BROWN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; we are not attempting to deal with the sheriff of the county.

Mr. BROWN. If he were an executive officer the law would apply to him. Perhaps it would not apply to the sheriff, but it would apply to the county engineer, who is elected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not in most cases.

Mr. BROWN. That happens to be true in my State.

Mr. BARKLEY. In my State county engineers are appointed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not wish to take any more time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I thank both Senators for the contributions they have made to the debate. I wish to get away from legalistic questions. I am not competent to debate them in a chamber full of constitutional lawyers. I know very little about the law; but I do know something about the farm, and I know something about how natural laws apply.

My home county in Colorado is away out in the sagebrush, but we have grain fields. We have prairie dogs, and we have coyotes. The prairie dogs eat the grain, and the coyotes eat the prairie dogs. Normally the coyotes eat enough of the prairie dogs so that there are not enough prairie dogs to do much harm to the grain. That is the way it used to work.

Then the ladies decided that they wanted to wear pretty furs—imitation mink and other furs made of coyote hides—and the hunters, trappers, and coyote poisoners went into that section and killed off most of the coyotes. When they did that the prairie dogs increased and destroyed the crops, and the people had to move out of the region. The hunters destroyed the even balance which nature had provided. Nature has provided that kind of balance in many ways. We are destroying that balance by legislation of this character. We have city machines, State machines, and Federal machines, or are supposed to have them; but when we destroy the Federal machine we make the city machine or the State machine more powerful, and do not purify politics at all. We simply change the power from the Federal machine to the municipal machine or the State machine.

Last week a Senator gave me a good illustration of how such a thing works. The particular Senator to whom I refer is one of the most able Senators in this body, a very distinguished Senator and a man of unquestioned integrity and honesty. He has fine ideals and the courage to state those ideals in many ways and on many occasions. It is not necessary to mention the name of the Senator, and it is not necessary to name the State from whence he comes, except that I will say that the State is not Colorado.

This is the story the Senator told me: He said he was running for renomination in a Democratic primary which was to be held in September. In his State was a very large city presided over by a mayor who belonged to his party. This mayor, like many mayors, was ambitious and wanted to control more than merely his little municipality. He wanted to control the whole State. He wanted to have in Washington the kind of Senator who suited his purposes. He had no fault to find with the integrity of the Senator who was serving in Washington. He could not find any fault with him or his ability to represent his State well, because the Senator was doing a splendid job. However, the mayor did not like him, because he was not a cog in his little municipal political machine, and he wanted to replace him by one of his own henchmen. So he set about to defeat the Senator and unseat him in the Democratic primary.

The Senator sent word to the mayor. He said, "I understand you are about to declare war. That is perfectly all right. Perhaps war should be declared. However, I want you to understand that in this war, if it is declared, there will be two battles. The first battle will occur in September at the Democratic primary, and the second battle will occur next spring when the city in which you live nominates and elects its next mayor. You have a powerful machine. It is recognized, and I recognize it. Perhaps you can win the battle against me in September; but I want you to understand that in the second battle I shall have a machine.

While I do not now have a machine, I shall start out and organize a machine of Federal employees—and there are many of them in your city—and in the second battle you will have to look after yourself."

The mayor was a pretty smart politician. He could see the point well enough. So he said, "All right; we will not have any war," and the Senator did not have to organize a machine to fight a machine.

That is the kind of situation we are up against in connection with the proposed legislation. We talk about destroying a Federal machine; but when we destroy the Federal machine we make the city machine or the State machine that much stronger. We do not get away from machine politics by such action. We simply transfer the machine from one unit of government to another. That is the whole difficulty with this kind of legislation; and that is the very thing that the amendment I have offered seeks to correct.

If I were writing the Hatch bill, which we have before us, I think I could reduce it to one paragraph of four or five lines. This is all I should put in it:

> It shall be unlawful for any branch of the Federal Government to allocate any Federal funds to any State or any agency of any State unless and until that State by law shall adopt all the provisions of the original Hatch Act.

That is the way I should write the second Hatch Act. Coercion? Of course it would be coercion. It would be the same kind of coercion that the Congress of the United States wrote into the Unemployment Compensation Act. It would be the same kind of coercion that is written into the second Hatch measure—a little more extensive, a little more effective, but exactly the same principle of coercion. If we are to coerce the States, why not coerce them effectively? If we want to get rid of machine politics, why not coerce the States to get rid of machine politics, instead of following the line of the present Hatch Act?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I gladly yield to my colleague.

Mr. ADAMS. I am wondering if the Senator's amendment may not have been suggested by the statement made by the majority leader a few days ago. The majority leader made this statement on the floor:

> Mr. President, I am for this bill. I am for it because it undertakes to place on the same footing all employees who draw their salaries from the Government of the United States. I do not think it is fair to tie every Federal employee to a tree and allow every State employee who draws his pay from Washington to roam at large over the woodlot, play politics, exercise his influence, and bring about intimidation or coercion in State highway departments, among old-age pensioners, or among those who are unemployed and who are looking to Washington and their State capitals for relief from unemployment.

As I understand, the Senator's amendment is an effort to carry out the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that there should not be a rule applied to Federal employees which does not apply to State employees. The Senator from Colorado is reaching it simply by a different method. He is saying in a negative way that the Federal employees shall not be tied to a tree if the State employees are not also tied. The Senator from Kentucky says, "Well, we will tie the Federal employees"—and they are tied—"and then we will penalize the State if an employee violates the provision as to State employees."

I merely wondered if that is not the purpose. I am thoroughly in accord with the views of the Senators from Kentucky, one of whom seems to be missing, that we should eliminate pernicious activities in politics, and I will say that I look to the Senators from Kentucky for wisdom and for learning and for experience——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And especially experience.

Mr. ADAMS. Because in my State we have not had such conditions. When I ran for the Senate at the last election there was not even a complaint filed with the committee investigating the election as to the conduct of affairs in Colorado. Apparently in Kentucky the Senators there and others realized how terrible it was to have State and Federal employees taking part in politics. I know it was said openly; I know what the report shows. So I yield to the experience of the Senators from Kentucky, willing to follow them and only ask them to go the whole way, and say that we will apply the same rule to the State employees as to the Federal employees. It is quite as iniquitous for a State employee to go to a political convention as for a Federal employee to go. I am not debating the bill. Probably I shall follow my colleague in voting on the bill, and I desire, as I say, to follow the wisdom and the experience and the recommendations of the Senators from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank my colleague for what he has said, because he has stated the case exactly and precisely. I now yield to the junior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator very much. Since my name has been mentioned in the debate, as has also the name of my colleague, who is temporarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. ADAMS. I trust the Senator realizes that I said nothing other than in the most complimentary way.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator. He only mentions his fellow Senators in complimentary terms, for which I am very much pleased.

I can answer for myself that during 1938 many complaints came to the attention of the people not only in my State but all over the country. On both sides accusations were made of playing politics and the use of Federal and State employees in the election.

I think the original Hatch bill proceeded on the assumption that employees of the Federal Government had a job to do, and one of the jobs was not to take part in pernicious politics. "Pernicious politics," of course, I can explain to the Senator, is when the fellow on the other side does something to you.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; "pernicious politics" is when an employee attends a caucus.

Mr. CHANDLER. In the ordinary acceptance of the term as employed by politicians of the country, a fellow on the Federal pay roll who is for you may be doing a great service for the country and may be highly meritorious, but if he helps your opponent, that is "pernicious politics."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am talking about the definitions appearing in the Hatch bill, the matter we have under discussion here, and "pernicious politics" is attending a caucus among your neighbors, attending a convention——

Mr. CHANDLER. I doubt if it goes that far.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Attending a convention and running for office. That is what "pernicious politics" is.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have yielded to the Senator from Kentucky, and when he concludes I will then yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHANDLER. The view I have—and I think that view is also shared by my colleague—is that when the Federal employees are knee deep in politics at the special instance and request—and I might go further and say at the direction of many of those who are at the head of bureaus and boards and commissions in the city of Washington—they are engaged in pernicious political activity. I was asked why I did not complain when one of my fellow citizens was proposed for a position in the Cabinet of the President of the United States, and I said, "Why should I complain about this man because when he was asked, 'Did your boys play politics in Kentucky,' he said, 'Why, when they set in on us we caved in.'" That was as good an answer as anybody on earth could give to the charge that he had been playing politics.

When someone came to Kentucky and asked me if State employees were helping me, I said I thought so. He said, "Is everyone helping you?" I said, "Everyone I know anything about." I was honest and straight about it; I did not deny that all the State employees in Kentucky were doing everything they could in my behalf. I think they were.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If they were not, the Senator would have discharged them, would he not?

Mr. CHANDLER. I would have considered it. I do not say I would but I certainly would have considered it. [Laughter.]

The official in Washington who has charge of a great governmental agency said when the politicians sat in on his organization his organization caved in; that is, they played politics, and in playing politics they were spending the money of the people of the United States, the taxpayers of the United States, appropriated by the Congress of the United States in order to give work to men and women who had no jobs and who were hungry. We had a right to protest that, and it was protested not only in Kentucky but all over the United States.

I did not know then, I will say to the Senator from New Mexico, that I would ever be a Member of the United States Senate, but I have no right to become a Member of the Senate of the United States and say to the Federal employees, "You are employed and are paid from the money appropriated by Congress and obtained from the taxpayers of the country to do a job for the people of America, and you cannot belong to political organizations and contribute 2 percent or some other percentage of your money in order to elect somebody to public office in the United States," and then say to State employees who are paid in whole or in part by the Federal Government that they may do as they please. I have no fear about my present situation in my State; the Governor of my State is my very good friend. He served for years as Lieutenant Governor. I sponsored him in his campaign; I stood by him and urged his election and said to the people that if he was elected I felt that he would make them a great Governor; and I am glad to say he is making them a great Governor. But I have no right now to say that I want Federal employees, as my colleague said, muzzled and tied to a tree and that I want everybody else free. I am for this bill on a broader ground; and I think some of my colleagues have missed the broader ground——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I want to broaden the ground a little.

Mr. CHANDLER. And that is that the people of the United States, in general, I will say to the Senator, are weary of spending the money of the people of the United States for politics—pernicious politics—to perpetuate men or systems or machines in office. I read an article in a home newspaper this morning which said, "If the Hatch bill passes it will virtually eliminate the playing of politics not only by the employees of the Federal Government but by employees of the States who are paid in whole or in part by the Federal Government"; and the article also said the passage of the Hatch bill would free 16,000 workers who would like to go about their business and not feel that they were compelled to contribute or required to be present at political meetings. They will still be for you if they are for you; but the people are sincerely desirous, in my opinion, of bringing about a condition in the politics of the country. The Senator from Michigan yesterday said the bill is a sword; I say it is a shield. I say that the elections in the future—the people of the several States and of the whole country would like to have the elections returned to them, so that they may decide them, without the expenditure of billions of dollars of money of the people of the United States to influence and control elections.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will yield as soon as I finish an observation. I am in wholehearted accord with what the Senator from Kentucky has said, and the purpose of my amendment is to broaden this measure, to get rid of political machines. The Senator from Kentucky says he is not afraid of the machine in Kentucky, for his friend operates it.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not the reason, I will say, why I am for the bill. I did not assign that as the reason.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator misunderstood me. I understood the Senator to say he did not want to broaden it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to broaden it, so as to cover municipalities and everybody that shares in the distribution of Federal funds. Of course the Senator from New Mexico is not going to go so far as that; a practical proposition, for if he included the heads of departments and Cabinet members he might have the President against his bill. The Senator wants to pass his bill. I am willing to vote them all in except the President, and I said the other day that in 1938 I would have been willing to vote to put him in; but now I am not willing to go that far. I would, however, go far enough to put in everybody else who spends the money of the people of the United States for politics and in order to perpetuate himself in office.

Personally, I do not have to be in office. I have had all the offices my people have to give to one man; and I want to try to cast my vote so that I will protect our vanishing money. We have already spent more money than we have, and none of us knows where to find the money to pay our bills. We cannot continue to spend it just to elect people to office.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. How about the State employees in the Senator's State?

Mr. CHANDLER. After this bill passes there will be no State employees of any consequence left.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There will not be any State machine?

Mr. CHANDLER. There will not be any effective political State machine in my State if this bill is passed. It will take the highway department, it will take the old-age pension department, it will take the unemployment-compensation department, and there will be virtually nothing left.

I make the prediction that if this bill is passed—and it ought to pass—the States will immediately put all of their people in the same position. You are asking them in advance to do something, but they will do it. The law sponsored by the Senator from New Mexico was a vision. I believe the Senator from New Mexico saw in advance, sooner than any of the others of his fellows, what the people had in mind and how weary they had grown because of the bad treatment they had received. If this bill passes—and it ought to pass—as soon as the legislatures of the several States can get to it, they will make it just as effective in regard to the people who are left.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the very thing the Senator from Colorado wants to do. The Senator from Colorado favors the passage of the pending Hatch bill.

Mr. SMATHERS, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. If both of the distinguished Senators from the State of Kentucky are as powerful in the State of Kentucky as I believe they are, and both are now friends of the present Governor, and they want a Hatch Act in the State of Kentucky, why do they not go to the Legislature of the State of Kentucky and ask to have it enacted by that august body, which can very properly write a Hatch Act for the State of Kentucky, instead of coming to the Congress of the United States and asking us to legislate for the State of Kentucky?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. There were two or three things I had in mind when I asked the Senator to yield.

First, he said that an employee could not attend a caucus of his neighbors. I wonder where the Senator gets the authority for that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is in the Hatch Act, as I read it.

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator read the opinions of the Attorney General covering the act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have read the opinions of the Attorney General, but I go to higher authority than that. I go to the Hatch Act itself.

Mr. HATCH. The Attorney General of the United States is reasonably good authority for interpreting a provision which will be applied by the different departments, and by them alone.

Mr. GUFFEY. It is a good provision, is it not, until the Supreme Court passes on it?

Mr. HATCH. I will answer the Senator from Pennsylvania in a moment if I have time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not want to argue these legalistic opinions.

Mr. HATCH. The rulings of the Civil Service Commission over a period of 50 years, interpreting exactly the same language, ought to be reasonably good authority.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the Senator contend that under the Hatch Act an employee of the Federal Government may run for office?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir; that was not what I asked the Senator. He may not do so, and he should not do so; but the Senator made the statement that he could not attend a caucus of his neighbors. Such extreme statements have been made on the floor that I want to tie down some of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think that is a true statement. From my reading of the act, if I were a Federal employee you would never get me into any caucus.

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator read the rulings of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator had done so, he would have found in them their permission, given to all employees in the classified civil service, to attend.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Civil Service Commission does not pass the laws of Congress.

Mr. HATCH. I am referring to a law of Congress, in exactly the same language, passed in 1873, and interpreted by the Civil Service Commission. Senators should not beg the question. They know that is a reasonable interpretation; but there is something more that has been said here to which I wish to call attention.

On yesterday a great deal of argument was made——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I object to the Senator replying to everybody on the floor of the Senate in my time.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; I will wait and discuss the matter in my own time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is fine. I want to get through.

Mr. HATCH. But I do want to mention these extreme statements.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, while we are mentioning the Civil Service Commission I think the Senator perhaps has overlooked the reasonableness of the discrimination of the Civil Service Commission. They provide that employees are prohibited from organizing political parades, but they may march in the parades. [Laughter.] That is subdivision 12 of this pamphlet.

I just wanted to add a word along the line of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. There is another provision of the rulings of the Civil Service Commission that will permit employees to attend meetings as a spectator, but that is all they may do.

Mr. ADAMS. That ought not to be allowed.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] as well as the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] commented upon the demand which had swept through the country to eliminate officials from control of activity in politics.

Mr. CHANDLER. Officials who spend the money of the people.

Mr. ADAMS. In the Hatch bill we are talking not about spending money but about political activity. That perhaps has something to do with spending money, but more probably it has not. In other words, if the street sweeper in the city who happens to be brought within this measure wants to become a candidate to a convention, and wants to go to a political meeting and make a speech on his own time in the evening, under this situation he is prohibited from doing so. That does not involve spending money. What we are reaching out for under this measure is to prohibit any influence, any activity, any participation in the actual management of politics or the conduct of political campaigns by persons who hold public positions.

What I am coming to in my further acceptance of the views of the Senator from Kentucky is recognizing, as he declares, that the public feel that the elimination of office-holders from political activities is a thing which they wish. Whether it be right or wrong, the Senator feels that that is the desire. If that is the desire in Kentucky, and if it is the desire in other States, I think we may trust the legislatures to do the thing that the people want. What the junior Senator from Colorado is trying to do is to carry forward this movement—reform if it be—at one time; to carry it forward fairly; to take out the Federal employees, take out the State employees, take out the municipal employees, take them all out at the same time, and to say that you may not take out one group of these employees and leave the others free to go.

In my State the present supplement to the Hatch Act will take out some State employees. It will not take out others. I have assumed that if, as a matter of statute, funds were given to a department of the State we could not turn over to a commission the authority to take money back from them. In other words, we prescribe by statute a statutory formula for the apportionment of highway moneys. I do not believe we can turn over to the Civil Service Commission authority to take back, as a penalty, moneys which we have given by statute. In other words, it would perhaps leave free the great highway organizations, and perhaps others.

The cities are practically not brought in by this amendment to the Hatch Act. In other words, it is limited to such employees as are exercising functions in connection with some agency financed by the Federal Government. That includes a very small part of the city group. I do not like to draw invidious comparisons; but, if there is any rating, the city organizations will not rate at the top from the standpoint of a test for political purity, and yet the city organizations will be left freer from control than any other. It is proposed to take out all of the Federal Government and a part of the State, but practically none of the city. I think that is inverting the situation rather than improving it; but I come back to the one thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And when we destroy the Federal so-called machine, do we not at the same moment increase the size and the power of the city machine?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I think the Hatch bill as it stands today means turning over to the great cities of the United States the domination of the United States, the nomination of candidates for President, the nomination of candidates for Governor, the control of politics in all the States which have great cities. I think that is the inevitable result. Now, that may be desirable. I am merely pointing it out as what I think is a fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is exactly in line with my thinking, too.

Mr. O'MAHONEY and Mr. CHANDLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Colorado and of the Senator from New Mexico, I should like to explain in a few words, if I can, what seems to me to be the underlying difficulty in this whole controversy.

Perhaps it will not be inappropriate for me to begin my statement by recalling that when the Senator from New Mexico offered his first amendment, the so-called Hatch amendment, to control W. P. A. expenditures, he had no more unreserved supporter than the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I can certainly corroborate what the Senator has said; he not only supported the amendment unreservedly, but, I may add, enthusiastically, and very helpfully.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly; I am glad to have the Senator say that, because there never was the slightest doubt in my mind that the funds appropriated by the Federal Government for the relief of the unemployed and of the distressed should not be diverted in any possible way for political purposes. It was for that reason that I gave my enthusiastic support to the Senator from New Mexico in the attempt, at that memorable session of Congress in 1938, to secure the adoption of that safeguarding provision.

On the other hand, when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] offered his amendment to eliminate section 9 from the Hatch law, I supported it, and I know that the Senator from New Mexico could not understand at the time why I supported that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator from Wyoming that which I say to every other Senator on the floor; I may not understand why a Senator votes the way he does vote, but I know that every Senator, and especially the Senator from Wyoming, had what he believed to be ample and sufficient reason for casting the vote he did cast.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I appreciate the Senator's kind remarks. Now I say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] that I cannot see my way clear to support his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is a very great disappointment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The very reason which actuated me in voting for the Miller amendment is the reason why I cannot vote for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

I am inclined to believe that frequently we take the will for the deed. There is no question that the purpose of the sponsor of the original Hatch bill is a high and noble purpose, and one which should be carried out. The question is, however, does the language here effectuate the purpose which the Senator has in mind? I will explain why I think it does not.

The Senator from Colorado would release from the provisions of section 9 of the present Hatch law all Federal employees in States which do not have a similar law. What are the provisions of section 9? There are, in section 9, two separate provisions, and they are debated as though they were one. There are two prohibitions, and all who are discussing this question seem to imagine that there is only one prohibition in section 9. This law has been advertised all over the Nation as the "clean politics" law, in the assumption that it would prevent abuses. Let us read the first sentence of section 9 of the present law, to see if it would have that effect:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

Mr. President, I do not think anyone can deny that that is a sound provision. No public servant should use his official authority for the purpose of influencing an election. Public office is a public trust, as one great Democrat once said. It is not a partisan trust. Public officers owe their first allegiance to all the people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to have the Senator read section 2.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall read it in just a moment.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Colorado has the floor, and the Senator from Colorado yields to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I merely wish to say at this point that I am in hearty accord with the statement just made by the Senator from Wyoming, and I have been anxious to have a chance to say this, because in the discussion of an amendment which I offered a day or two ago I stated that my purpose, in part, was to defeat the Hatch bill. Lest there be any misunderstanding, I have been anxious to have this opportunity of saying that I do approve that part of the Hatch law, and subscribe entirely to the statement just made by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I desire to say also that if section 9 went that far and then stopped, the junior Senator from Colorado would also agree with it; but unfortunately it does not do that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if I may trespass a little further on the generosity of the Senator——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I intrude to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator could reconcile the situation if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado were limited so that the provisions of the second sentence of this section should not apply.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator anticipates exactly the point I am seeking to make. I want to make it clear that there are two prohibitions contained in section 9. The first is a prohibition against the use of official authority.

Mr. President, no person who is elected to any public office should for one moment be permitted to use his "official" authority or influence for the purpose of affecting the outcome of any political campaign, whether that political campaign is a Federal campaign, or a State campaign, or a county or a city campaign. When a public official uses his official authority, he is using the power that is vested in him by the law of the land for the service of all the people, and that power should never be prostituted for any partisan purpose.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I am glad to hear the Senator from Wyoming voice such an emphatic denunciation of the use of a political office for the purpose of determining an election. I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico give his definition of pernicious political activity.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I finish my thought?

Mr. SMITH. I merely want to interject at this point that I knew a President who went into a homogeneous Democratic State and denounced a Member of this body as being an apostate to all the doctrines of democracy, despite the fact that that Senator held the endorsement of his people to the seat he occupied. That President went into other States and used his tremendous official power, the power of the office, the power of his prestige, the power which attends the Chief Executive of the Nation, and personally denounced members of our party, and indicated whom he would like to have to represent those States.

What is the use of our standing here and attempting to curtail the little fellow out in the country, a mere appointee, and say that he shall be removed from office, but leave out the greatest political office we are capable of giving a man, the Presidency of the United States, when a President uses his tremendous power to discredit a faithful member of the party to which that President allegedly belongs?

I know this does not interest some who may hear me, because I am getting to the crucial point of this whole matter. Why do we not incorporate a prohibition as to all officials, from highest to lowest? Why do we not condemn the Chief Executive of the United States who rides ruthlessly and roughshod over a lesser one politically—yes; get my meaning—a lesser one in office? Why, during a debate lasting for days, do we not hear a man on the floor mention the disgraceful proceeding to which I have referred, the Chief Executive not only attempting to bring the Supreme Court to the point where he could dictate to them, but going into my sister State and denouncing one of the worthiest Members of this body as being an apostate to the doctrines of his country?

Why should we leave the President or his Cabinet out of this matter? If we are to curtail—abridge, as the Constitution says—the rights of citizens, let us not start on the poor fellow who cannot help himself, but let us go to the throne and say, "You shall not do it." If we are to be men and have clean politics, let us have a clean President and a clean Cabinet.

I know that it will be charged that I was one on whom the attempt was made; but that was not nearly so bad as in the case of the attack made on my colleague in Georgia. I am not making this statement because I feel strongly toward the person. It is the practice which I dread and fear. He is not the only one who ever did it. De mortuis nil nisi bonum. The other man is dead, but he did identically the same thing in my State—the great statesman, Woodrow Wilson. The evidence is documentary.

Let us be brave men. Let us clean house where the cleaning should be done.

I wished to refrain from calling attention to this matter, but I thought it was my duty as an American citizen to do so, believing in equal rights to all and special privileges to none, as the fundamental doctrine we are to live under if we continue to live. I was much intrigued by the vehemence of the Senator from Wyoming when he declared that all elected officers who indulge in pernicious political activity should be put under the same restraint as the ordinary little fellow.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator misinterprets the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes, Mr. President. I thought the Senator from Wyoming would run. I thought he would. I see the Senator from Wyoming is beginning to hunt an alibi now. He does not want his restriction as to elected officers to apply to the Chief Executive.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from South Carolina knows very well that the Senator from Wyoming never yet hunted an alibi.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina directed a question to me, calling me by name, and I desire to answer his question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. SMITH. What does the Senator denominate as pernicious political activity?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from South Carolina has heretofore related somewhat at length certain conditions existing in this country, and he has praised the language of the law which forbids official interference with elections of all kinds, and I wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina that the language of the law to which he refers is my language. I wrote it. That language applies to the President of the United States, and it should apply to the President of the United States, no matter who he is or to what party he belongs. It was so intended. It applies to the Senator from South Carolina, and to me, and to every other Senator or official of the United States of America. It is made a criminal offense to violate that section of the statute. And more than that, the Senator from New Mexico has endeavored throughout the year to make it impossible for any President—I do not care whether it is the present President or one to be elected next time—to go into the Senator's State or the State of the Senator from Georgia and use the enormous patronage of his office to elect someone simply because he has that patronage and that influence. I want the people of South Carolina and the people of Georgia to choose their own representatives in this body and elsewhere. That is part of the purposes of the legislation, and the Senator from South Carolina believes in such legislation.

Mr. SMITH. Of course, I believe in it if we are to have any at all.

Mr. HATCH. The proposed legislation is intended to do exactly the same thing. I have answered the question of the Senator from South Carolina, and have answered it directly, that I do not approve of coercion of the voters in a State by the President of the United States or anyone else. Now let the Senator ask that question of some of those who are opposing this legislation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I certainly feel that I have done a service to the United States by getting that frank expression from the author of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I have said it many times on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. I know the Senator has.

Mr. HATCH. And my actions carry out my words.

Mr. SMITH. Now, I wonder if the Senator from Colorado will allow me to interrupt him? I should like to hear the Senator from Wyoming give his reason why the statement that brought me to my feet did not include the President of the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I did not say that.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, I thought——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, no; the Senator was putting words in my mouth which I did not utter. I may remark that the Senator arose to his feet to make his comment while I was endeavoring to explain to the Senate the difference between the two activities which are prohibited by section 9, but which are confused as though they were one.

If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, I think that I shall be able to make my view clear and I shall then allow the Senator from Colorado to return to his own argument without further interruption from me.

I was saying, when I was so graciously interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina, that the first sentence of section 9 makes it unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Government to use his "official" authority or influence, and I was stating my complete agreement with the prohibition.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I cannot yield until I have set forth the two objectives with which the section under discussion deals.

Mr. President, the second sentence of section 9 embodies a prohibition altogether distinct from that which is banned by the first sentence. It provides that no officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

It seems to me to be perfectly clear that a person in office may take part in a political campaign without using his official authority.

There is nothing wrong in managing a political campaign nor in participating in one. Political campaigns are a necessity in a democratic government, and a public officer has as much right to take part in a campaign as any private citizen so long as he does not use his official authority or influence to affect elections. There may be good reasons why public officers should not be permitted to take an active part in campaigns. One of these is the concept upon which the civil-service rule is based, namely, that a person who has been granted a position in the public service which is without term and is not dependent upon elections should not undertake to influence such elections.

However, the distinction between the use of official authority and participation in political campaigns has been clearly recognized; and I will say, since I see the Senator from Maryland upon the floor, that this very question arose in the Committee on Campaign Expenditures during the campaign of 1938 in connection with an incident that occurred in the State of Maryland.

Complaint was made to the committee that a collector of internal revenue had summoned his employees into his office and had instructed those employees as to what he wanted them to do. The Committee on Campaign Expenditures denounced that as an invasion not only of ethics but of the rules laid down by the Department of the Treasury and laid down by the Civil Service Commission. That, Mr. President, was the use of official authority for the purpose of interfering in an election, because that man brought into his office the employees of the Federal Government, who were under him, who perhaps owed their employment to him, certainly who had to look to him for any recommendation for promotions or for assignment work. And so when that official called those employees into his office and told them what he wanted he was violating this fundamental principle which prohibits the use of official authority.

Mr. President, it would have been an utterly and completely different thing if, after the office were closed, when the working day was over, that same collector of internal revenue had gone to a political meeting and stood upon the platform and made an argument for or against a candidate, because then he would not have been using his office time or his official authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have already yielded to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me finish the sentence. These two concepts are mentioned in the two opening sentences of section 9. First, official authority shall not be used. Second, no employee shall engage in any active political work.

Then comes the closing sentence, which was properly described, I think, by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] as an escape clause:

> For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include—> the President and Vice President * * * persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of President; heads and assistant heads of executive departments; officers who are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

What?

I have no doubt from what the Senator from New Mexico has just said that it was not his purpose to exempt any public official from the prohibition against the use of official authority, but it was his purpose to grant to the President, the Vice President, and the Cabinet members and the others named an exemption from the prohibition against participation in campaigns. The law is so drawn, however, that it grants an exemption from both prohibitions, and this defect is not cured by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. BARBOUR rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so, to whom? The Chair has previously stated that the Senator from Colorado has the floor, but certain Senators seem to disregard that fact.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to the Senator from Maryland for a brief comment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield at present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will wait.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has made a very constructive contribution in his analysis of section 9, and I wish to perfect my amendment in line with his suggestion, so that the first section of my amendment will read——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair suggest to the Senator from Colorado that only one portion of the printed amendment has been read. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado apparently comprises two separate amendments on two different questions, and therefore cannot be offered as one amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Colorado begs to differ with the Chair. It has already been ruled that this amendment is not divisible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the only ruling which has been made was as to the portion of the amendment which has been stated, which is the portion appearing in lines 1 to 8 on page 1 of the printed amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is all one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is constrained to rule that there are two amendments, to different sections of the bill, and therefore they cannot be offered at the same time. The Chair does not think there is any question about the parliamentary status.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, what the Senator is asking is to modify his own amendment, regardless of that question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to modify my own amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was calling the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that only the first amendment has been stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, we will not argue that point now. I wish to go ahead and perfect my amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, while the Senator is looking at that——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have it all before me now, and I wish to read it at this point. My amendment will now read, in line with the suggestion of the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In line with the argument of the Senator from Wyoming. I do not want to be responsible for an amendment or change which I have not yet seen.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I accept that amendment, too. This is the way the amendment reads, as perfected by the Senator from Colorado:

> SEC. —. Section 9 of said act of August 2, 1939, is amended by striking out the period at the end of subsection (b) and adding the following: "Provided, That other provisions of this section except the first sentence shall not apply to officers or employees of the Federal Government—"

And so forth. Does the clerk have that language?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish first to yield to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I am in complete accord with what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has said about the first sentence, and I am in complete accord with what the Senator from New Mexico said about that sentence. I wish to preserve that sentence. What I have heretofore said about section 9 does not apply to the first sentence in section 9.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I merely wish to keep the record straight. The comment of the Senator from Wyoming was most accurate as far as it went; but, in order that it may be completed, let it be said that after the Senate committee pointed out that the action of the collector of internal revenue in Maryland in calling in his entire office force of about a hundred men and in effect telling them to vote for one of the two candidates then running was in violation of the law and the rules of the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department said that according to its construction that was well within the collector's right.

In order to keep the record straight, let me also call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that collector is still in office. I do not want to bother him. He is welcome to stay there. But when high-sounding messages come from high authority it would be a good idea to back them up with some sincerity rather than merely utter a lot of pious words.

Furthermore, not only was the collector of internal revenue called to Washington, but the collector of customs over there was called to Washington, and they were told for whom to vote. They came to me with tears running down their cheeks telling me that they would have to vote for a certain opponent.

I should like to ask this question, and then I shall finish: Would it be a violation of political ethics to go into a State in the midst of a heated contest and there, in the presence of the other candidate, say that a bridge is to be built across a certain stream, even before the engineers have passed upon it, and that it must be started right away—as if the other candidate were doing it—and then, after the election goes the other way, for those who made those statements to require dynamite under them to get them to build the bridge?

My point is that all the fine words about making the people responsive in elections to their rights as defined by the Constitution are just so much finger snapping. If we want good elections, some corrections ought to be made as a result of the 1938 elections. We did not need such a law to make corrections. Some of those who are now so pious and on such a high pedestal had best look into their own actions, without telling others on a lower level how they should conduct themselves in an election contest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Maryland for his contribution. I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator from Colorado has changed his amendment. None of us on this side of the Chamber heard the changes. I ask that the clerk read the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think the suggestion is a good one. I ask that the clerk read the perfected amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to add the following section:

SEC. —. Section 9 of said act of August 2, 1939, is amended by striking out the period at the end of subsection (b) and adding the following: ": Provided, That other provisions of this section except the first sentence shall not apply to officers or employees of the Federal Government residing and voting in any State where State laws do not forbid the officials and employees of the State or local agencies of the general class above described from taking any active part in political management or political campaigns."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] for making his very constructive suggestion. I believe he has greatly improved the amendment I have offered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have not improved the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; I have. I take the glory and the honor. However, the Senator gave me the suggestion. His analysis was the basis for the improvement which I made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I was quite interested in the debate which took place in regard to the purge. I was interested in what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] had to say about it, and what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] had to say. I wish to say to those distinguished Senators that I claim the honor of being the first victim of the purge attempted by this administration. That was back in 1934. I did not have to wait until 1938 to read in the newspapers about what was happening in Georgia. I did not have to read the newspapers about what was happening in South Carolina, in Maryland, or in New York City. I knew, because I had some experience in 1934 which I wish to relate to the Senator from South Carolina.

I was a candidate for reelection as Governor on the Democratic ticket. A very fine lady opposed me, which she had a perfect right to do. So far as I know, she has never been in any Democratic caucus or any Democratic convention, or any other place where Democrats gather. Therefore, I suppose that, politically speaking, she was very pure. However, in 1934 this very estimable lady was invited to the White House in Washington. She made a trip by air from Denver to Washington to attend a social function to which she had been specifically invited. From the White House she announced her candidacy at that social function.

Her campaign manager in that election was a very high official, an Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Oscar L. Chapman. He still holds the position. The lieutenants in her campaign were other Federal employees, and they carried on a very active campaign in my State.

When the election was over, and the votes were counted, it was found that she had carried only 1 county. I carried the other 62. The day after the election she came to Washington and was made Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

So I claim the honor—if it be an honor—of having been the first victim of the attempted purges which took place in this country. It seems to me that the administration leaders might have learned a lesson from what happened in Colorado, but they did not seem to. I do not fear such things. I do not object to them at all, because the people will take care of them. We can leave such questions to the people in Colorado, and to the people in South Carolina, Maryland, Georgia, and all the other States.

In New York something else happened. It did not happen on account of the Federal machine in New York. That was not the factor which changed the result in New York as against the results in other States. What happened in New York was that the effective municipal political machine changed the result and made the purge a success in New York.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up much more time of the Senate, except to say that the existing Hatch Act exempts the President, the Cabinet officers, assistants to Cabinet officers, their secretaries, and the Diplomatic Service. It does not affect them. They are exempted. They are left out. I do not for 1 minute believe that they were left out because the Senator from New Mexico wanted them left out. I believe he would have included them, and that he would not have made such exemptions had he had his way about it. But they are exempted. We talk about pure politics, and about the Hatch Act being an act for pure politics, and yet we leave those exemptions in section 9.

Mr. President, I heard what the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] said the other day about an assistant to an assistant somewhere in the Department of Justice, a man by the name of Rogge—and, judging from what the Senator from Florida said about him, he was a rogue. He told us what happened in Louisiana, and what happened was perfectly legal and lawful under the Hatch Act.

Mr. HATCH. O Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator in that statement. If the statements are true, it was a violation of law instead of being legal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That may be the Senator's opinion but I want to read to him section 9 and see whether it is true or not. This is the way section 9 reads:

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

And it goes on to exempt—

(1) The President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments.

That is what Mr. Rogge is—assistant head of a department—and he acted in everything that he did under the exemption, which made his actions legal and lawful under section 9 of the Hatch Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, has the Senator from Colorado concluded?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has spoken about exemptions under the act. It may be that the exemptions are too broad, and it may well be that some of those exemptions should be removed; but I ask the Senator, if that is his opinion, if that is his judgment, why does he not offer an amendment, as the Senator from Missouri did the other day, proposing to strike out the exemptions from the law, instead now of offering an amendment which would destroy the law itself?

There is a very simple method to get at the matter which the Senator from Colorado has in mind. If he wants to get rid of the exemptions, and if the exemptions are wrong, let him offer amendments, and I may join him in some of them.

As to the argument concerning Louisiana, I was dumbfounded when the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] made that argument, for a deputy attorney general of the United States is not an assistant head of a department. If he went into Louisiana and interfered with an election, as was charged on the floor, certainly he violated the provisions of the act; but instead of rising here and seeking to destroy the law, why not demand an enforcement of the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator interrupted me several times to tell me what the Attorney General had stated the law to be. He accepted what the Attorney General said about the law as being superior to what the law itself provides. I want to go back to the law; he says we should go back to the Attorney General. I presume that the Attorney General must have found that this man who was one of his subordinates was working within the law.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Colorado presumes that the Attorney General has found such a state of facts to exist. I make no such assumption, and, judging by the rulings the present Attorney General has already made on the law, I venture the statement that if the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Florida can show that a Deputy Attorney General went into the State of Louisiana or any other State and sought to interfere with an election, Attorney General Jackson will promptly remove that man from office in compliance with the terms of the law.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield in a moment. I suggest, instead of trying to destroy the law, the only law on the statute books of the United States which would tend to prevent doing that thing, that the Senator try to make it stronger instead of weakening it. If it is wrong for officials to go into Louisiana, and the law is not sufficiently strong to prevent it, if that is what it was intended to do, then strengthen the law, but do not pull its teeth. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Neither the original Hatch Act nor the bill that is pending before the Senate defines an election. What was going on in Louisiana was not an election by the meaning of the Constitution or within the meaning of the law as the Supreme Court has laid it down. While I do not approve for a moment of what Mr. Rogge did in Louisiana, I think that Mr. Rogge might make out a pretty good defense by simply saying that he was not engaging in an election. It was a primary that was going on in Louisiana, not an election, and, therefore, he did not take part in any election, however reprehensible his conduct may have been.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator from Indiana. I have not condemned the Deputy Attorney General. I knew nothing of the facts. I say if they are facts, if he did go into a sovereign State and attempt to dictate and control the affairs of that State in a primary or in a general election under the law prohibiting political activity, he should be removed from office, and the law is broad enough to cause his removal. Political activity applies to primaries just as well as to general elections.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may ask him a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to know of the Senator what distinction he makes between general elections and primary elections in this bill. There are places in the bill where the terms are used in the alternative, either election or primary, as I recall, and other places where they are used separately, which would indicate that he had a distinction in his mind in the application of the law to a primary and to a general election. Section 9 applies apparently only to elections, while other sections apply both to elections and primaries. I will be glad to have the Senator inform us on that subject, especially in view of the Newberry case.

Mr. HATCH. I will be glad to inform the Senator on that subject.

In the first place, he misconstrued the purposes of section 9 when he said it was intended only to apply to general elections.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what is stated in section 9; it does not say anything about primary elections; and in other sections it says primaries and elections.

Mr. HATCH. It says "active part in political management or in political campaigns." The Attorney General and the Civil Service Commission have both ruled that those terms apply to primaries and elections.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why does not the Senator include both primaries and elections in his bill?

Mr. HATCH. Because we thought political activity includes them both. In some of the other sections, where it is made a criminal offense and where reference is made specifically to elections of Federal officers, in order to make it certain that it would also include primaries, the words "primaries or nominating conventions" were included; but it was unnecessary to include them in section 9 under which political activity generally is forbidden. I do not think there can be any question about that. I do not want to keep the floor too long.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no time limit running.

Mr. HATCH. I understand there is no time limit running.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is another question I should like to ask. I understood the Senator to state that section 9 did not apply to primary elections.

Mr. HATCH. I said the term "political activity, political management, and political campaigns" includes all elections—general, special, primaries, and every other kind. If that is not plain enough, I do not know how to make it plainer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have asked the Senator, and he has not answered, why he used the word "primary" or "nomination" in some sections but not in others.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will listen, I will explain again. I said that in section 9 we used the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns" because it was broad and general; that it was not necessary to specify a general election or primary, as it was all-inclusive. In the other sections to which the Senator refers all-inclusive terms were not used. Therefore it was necessary to describe and set forth the legislative intent, and so we included both general elections and primaries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call the Senator's attention to section 2 of the act, from which I quote:

> To use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the election or—

Mark the word "or"— > the nomination of any candidate.

So the Senator uses both terms. It is not limited to elections but includes nominations, while section 9 of the act does not include primaries.

Mr. HATCH. In section 9 the term "political management, political activity, and political campaigns" is used.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator confine that to elections or to primaries?

Mr. HATCH. I am sorry the Senator does not follow me. I have answered the question over and over again.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think the Senator has explained it to anybody's satisfaction except his own.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say once more that in section 9 of the act it was the intention to adopt the rulings of the Civil Service Commission, and by the use of the term in that section "political activity, political management, and political campaigns," which had been construed to include both general elections and primaries, we thought it was unnecessary further to specify. It is my contention that section 9 does prohibit political activity in general elections and special elections and in primaries.

Now I should like to discuss for a moment the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado in which he seeks to amend section 9 by providing, in substance, that section 9, permitting the political activity of Federal employees, shall apply only to States which have similar provisions.

To my mind, Mr. President, that would almost completely destroy section 9 if it were adopted. It would leave practically every State in the Union without this legislation. I do not know how many States have similar legislation, but I know they are very few in number. The States being perfectly willing for their employees to go out and engage in all sorts of political activities, pernicious and otherwise, under the Senator's amendment, the Federal Government would say, "We want our employees to be just as active, perniciously and otherwise, as yours are." Regardless of what standards the States may set up, we are letting them set up standards for our employees.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senator again falls into the error I have been trying to point out all through the debate. He says that the Federal Government is saying to the States, "Your employees may engage in some pernicious activities." If the Senator would confine his bill to activities that are pernicious, he would not find very much objection to it in the Senate, but he, like the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Georgia, and all Senators who have discussed that particular phase, continually refers to improper practices, to illegitimate practices, to pernicious practices, while the Senator's bill, and section 9 of the law, condemn activities which no one in the world has assumed were pernicious, improper, or illegitimate, because he there condemns political activity and political management, and he does not confine the condemnation to pernicious political activity and management.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I fail to see the application of the Senators' argument to the particular point I am now discussing, which is the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. As I was saying, the adoption of that amendment will, in my opinion, undo all that we did at the last session of the Congress, and will turn loose upon the several States, without any restriction whatsoever, all the employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to ask the Senator a question, but it is not quite on the point he is now discussing. If he will indicate a little later when it is agreeable to him to have the question asked, I do not want to interfere with the thread of his discussion.

Mr. HATCH. It is agreeable now. I just do not want to take up too much time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HATCH. I yield first to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I notice in the bill, on page 5, part of section 12, in the clause exempting certain officers from its operations, the following language:

> And who determine policies to be pursued by such State in the State-wide administration of State laws.

I should like to have the Senator define what a policy-making officer is, other than a legislative officer.

Mr. HATCH. Really, at this particular moment I do not care to go into a discussion of that feature of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is why I indicated that if the Senator later on would yield I would ask the question at that time. I withdraw the question.

Mr. HATCH. I will try to do so. Although, as I say, I am trying to refrain from keeping the floor today, if possible, for obvious reasons, I want to say to the Senator that he might get me to join him in striking out any of those exemptions that are not proper. I am not so keen about excepting those persons.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him right there, I will not bother him again. What is in my mind is, Why should we exempt a policy-making officer, who naturally would have a good deal of authority and influence, and whose word would carry on without his approaching anybody in his department—why should we allow him blatantly and loudly to advocate anything he pleases in a political way, and then prohibit the punch-card girl, who does not do anything but just punch cards all day, from taking part in political activity? Why should we do that while we permit the policy-making man, whose voice would be heard throughout the whole State, to blow off all he please? That is what is in my mind.

Mr. HATCH. I will tell the Senator frankly why that provision was included in the bill; and if there is no reason for its inclusion, that is all right with me.

There are, in this Government of ours, in both the National and the State Governments, offices which are essentially political in their nature. I have frequently said on the floor during this debate that those officials many times have to go out on the stump, over the radio, and on the platform, not only telling the people but actually selling the people their theories and ideas of government. They not only have to do that but they have to have the privilege of going out and repelling attacks when their policies are assailed; and the reason for that exemption is to enable those officials to discharge an essential part of our form of government. But the girl who punches cards, as the Senator says, does not formulate any policy. The district attorney does not formulate any policy. He prosecutes criminals.

Mr. CONNALLY. He cannot do so under this bill, of course.

Mr. HATCH. He never did, with or without the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. He is free, though, to speak out his mind in his precinct meeting.

Mr. HATCH. I have not yielded to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HATCH. The job of the district attorney is to use the powers of his office for the enforcement of laws written by the Congress, and that is all. He has no discretion. There is no reason for the collectors of internal revenue and all these other employees to get out on the stump and take part in campaigns. I may say to Senators who are so worried about curbing the political activity of these officials that it has always been the program and the statement and the declaration of the Democratic Party that the best service that type of employee can render to his party is the kind of service he renders to his Government. If you give me in my State a good district attorney, a good collector of internal revenue, a good United States marshal, who is discharging in an honest, efficient, and patriotic manner the duties of his office, for which he is paid, I have confidence in the people reelecting to power the party that gives them such service.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If there are such good collectors of internal revenue, and such good marshals, and such good United States attorneys, does not the Senator think they ought to have the right on their own time, if they want to, to go out and take part in political campaigns that would further the interests of the party that put them in their positions?

Mr. HATCH. If the experience of the years in this country had not demonstrated that it is a right which not only can be, but has been and is today being abused in every district in the country in which this law is not in force, I should agree with the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator think we ought to punish the abuses of this privilege instead of the use of it?

Mr. HATCH. We are trying to prevent abuses. We are curtailing no rights. We are not placing any handicaps or hindrances upon the party or the officials.

Mr. MINTON. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it is a matter of opinion; and it is a matter of opinion as to which the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from New Mexico are not in accord and are not in agreement.

On yesterday, when the Senator from Indiana spoke so fervently on the subject of holier than thou, he did not refer to me, I know. I think he made that perfectly clear. I think he knows that I have never stood on the floor of the United States Senate, or anywhere else, and assumed a holier-than-thou attitude or position. I have been perfectly willing at all times to confess my shortcomings, faults, and mistakes, which are many—too many—and I recognize again the honest differences of opinion. I accord to the Senator from Indiana the same right to his opinion that I have to mine; and I give him credit for honor, integrity, and courage in standing on the floor of the Senate and battling for his view on this legislation.

The Senator from Indiana said to me on yesterday that I was "cockeyed." I do not say that the Senator from Indiana is, was, or ever will be "cockeyed"; but I do say to the Senator from Indiana that he is wrong, he is mistaken, and he does not need to have this bill defeated. The record of the Senator from Indiana is one on which he can run before the people of his own State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I understood him a moment ago to make the statement that my amendment destroys the Hatch Act.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I think it does.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It does not do anything to any of the first eight sections. It leaves this sentence in section 9.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I said section 9, I think. If I did not say section 9, I want to limit that statement to section 9.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is fine; but I want the Senator to limit it to only a part of section 9. My amendment does not affect the first sentence in section 9. The Senator said he was very proud of being the author of that section, and I want to congratulate him. He has a right to be proud of the statement that is made in that sentence:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

That sentence is not interfered with or changed or modified or amended in any way by my amendment. I do not want to change that sentence, because I believe, and firmly believe, that it does stop these "purges."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Colorado that the first sentence of section 9 which he has read is superfluous, because it is almost identical with the provisions of section 9, in which the action referred to is made a criminal offense, and section 2 will furnish all the strength needed on that particular subject. But the heart of section 9, so far as an effective part of legislation is concerned, is the second sentence, in which this language appears:

> No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

That is the effective part of section 9. That sentence would be completely destroyed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. Whether or not that is his intention or his wish or desire, that would be the effect. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I notice in the RECORD of yesterday that the Senator from New Mexico stated, in answer to an inquiry, that professors in universities and colleges receiving Federal funds for agricultural assistance would be denied the right to participate in politics under the act. Perhaps the question is far-fetched, but I should like to have the Senator's view as to whether it might affect the universities and colleges which indirectly receive some assistance through the national youth movement or the National Youth Administration. Does the Senator from New Mexico have an opinion on that?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there was so much confusion that I had difficulty in following the Senator. But the particular amendment now before us does not relate to that.

Mr. MALONEY. I understand that, but I have been waiting for some time to ask the Senator the question.

Mr. HATCH. As to the statement which I made yesterday about the professors, I have not attempted really to interpret the law from time to time because I think that is for another branch of the Government. But I desire to read to the Senator an interpretation by the Attorney General of the United States which I think affords ample protection in the case of every legitimate educational process, and I think that is what the Senator from Connecticut wants protected. It has been held already by the Attorney General, in interpreting this exact act——

Mr. BROWN. What Attorney General?

Mr. HATCH. Attorney General Frank Murphy. He said these activities are not prohibited:

> Participation in the activities of civic associations—

There has been some discussion of that, and some Senators have stated that there could not be such participation—> and educational groups.

> Provided the activities in question are divorced from the campaigns of particular candidates or parties.

I think that completely answers the question.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, my question is based upon a statement made by the Senator on March 5, when a Senator asked him whether a professor in a land-grant college would be affected, and the Senator from New Mexico replied and stated specifically:

> Yes; he would be. I think he should be.

That disturbs me somewhat, because in my State there is a land-grant college, and I presume the professors there are as well informed on matters of agriculture as anyone else in the State, and they might be anxious to participate in a campaign in which an agricultural matter was involved. The Senator makes it clear to me that he believes they would be denied the right to such participation. I am wondering whether on the same ground the National Youth Administration activities, or contributions indirectly to a college, would result in the denial to professors of the right to participate in politics, and I am wondering whether it might not finally interfere, in that instance, and in the instance of the land-grant college professors, with their teaching in the colleges.

Mr. HATCH. No; it would not interfere with their teaching in the colleges. There is no question about that. That argument was made on the floor of the Senate yesterday; but certainly no professor should be permitted to use his classroom to advance the cause of a particular candidate.

Mr. MALONEY. I agree with that, of course.

Mr. HATCH. That is all that is prohibited. But as to the National Youth movement, as I understand the National Youth movement, their contributions are made to individual students.

Mr. MALONEY. Through the universities, I think.

Mr. HATCH. They are not made to universities, and I really do not think that the activities in which they engage are within the prohibitions of the act; but I do not want to give that as an official interpretation, because I am not sufficiently familiar with the functioning of the National Youth Administration.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Austin	Barbour	Brown
Andrews	Bailey	Barkley	Bulow
Ashurst	Bankhead	Bilbo	Burke

Byrd	Green	McKellar	Sheppard
Byrnes	Guffey	McNary	Shipstead
Capper	Gurney	Maloney	Smathers
Caraway	Hale	Mead	Smith
Chandler	Harrison	Miller	Stewart
Chavez	Hatch	Minton	Taft
Clark, Idaho	Hayden	Murray	Thomas, Idaho
Clark, Mo.	Herring	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Connally	Hill	Norris	Thomas, Utah
Danaher	Holman	Nye	Townsend

Gerry	Lee	Reynolds	Walsh
Gibson	Lodge	Russell	Wheeler
Gillette	Lundeen	Schwartz	White
Glass	McCarran	Schwellenbach	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, yesterday I offered objection to a unanimous-consent agreement, the purpose of which was to end the discussion of the pending legislation, and in offering that objection I stated that this legislation was most objectionable to me, and in some aspects of it, vicious.

I rise now to address myself precisely to that proposition. I should like to say at the outset that it is very far from me to reflect upon any Senator in employing the word "vicious" to describe my conceptions of this legislation. We may say of a bill that its principle is vicious, its consequences are vicious, without the slightest reflection upon its author or upon its advocates. After all, that is a matter of opinion.

I have a very high regard for the author of this bill. I think the Senate will agree with me that he is a high-minded, capable, and distinguished Senator. And, of course, I have a proper respect for the supporters of the legislation. I do not intend to say anything to wound anyone's feelings, but I do intend to speak clearly and without any special disposition to qualify my abhorrence of this legislation.

Before I go into the argument I wish to say another word about the filibuster. I think the whole Senate agrees that the policy of filibuster is not one to be approved, but I believe the whole Senate will agree that the filibuster may be employed in proper cases to a very great and useful purpose. Where would our country be today—your country and mine—but for the filibuster against the infamous Force bill. History has justified that. Where would our Southern country be today but for the repeated filibusters against the invasion of our civilization and its processes in the repeated attempts which have been made under the title of anti-lynching bills?

So I say we can justify the filibuster. But no one can say that I am filibustering. This is the first time I have spoken on the pending bill. But I say that I do hope there will be sufficient delay here for mature consideration. I hope we can delay the passage of this legislation or the final vote on it until the American people can see what is involved in it; and if so, I have no question as to what that decision will be. Much has happened, but nothing has happened yet quite fully to extinguish my faith in the instincts of the American people.

What is the basis of my accusation that this is vicious legislation? Hear me, Senators. It is vicious in that it asserts a vicious principle, and that vicious principle is this: It deliberately proposes to employ the gifts and the grants of the Federal Government to control the democratic processes in the States of our American Union. That is vicious.

It may be said it is in a good cause. I might concede that, although I do not. But even if it is in a good cause, the consequence of the assertion of that principle in the Congress and the national life will be infinitely worse than any evils intended to be corrected by the legislation.

It is proposed to say to a city, it is proposed to say to a county, it is proposed to say to a sovereign Commonwealth, "We will give you a gift or we will make you a loan, but it is upon condition that the public officers and the public servants of your county, and your city, and your State, shall behave themselves in a certain way."

Now, I am going to ask Senators to think one moment on this subject of the Democratic process. It lies much deeper than this mere doctrine we have of State's rights, great as that is, but it becomes a mere doctrine when we compare State's rights with the deliberate attack upon the democratic process in this Republic which lives and moves and has its being in that process. Destroy the process and you destroy the Republic.

I regret to say—and I would not say it if it were not true—that much has been done, much more than ought ever to have been done, in these recent years to destroy that democratic process. The Republic lives in this process. The men who come to destroy the Republic are not going to marshal armies against it.

They would know better than that. That would be futile. They are not going to gather mobs against it. They would know that we could repress mobs. They have enough sense to know that the way to destroy this Republic is to destroy the process by means of which it lives—that is, the democratic process established by the Constitution. That democratic process is a process of democracy voluntarily and independently manifested through 48 States.

When the Federal Government reaches forth its hand by way of coercion—and that is what it is—to compel my State to a policy, even though it be a good policy, it lays its hand upon the holy of holies of our American life. It undertakes to break down the process by which the Republic lives.

Senators, I can speak for my State of North Carolina. It is not a possession of the United States. It is not a Territory of the United States. It is not a dominion of the United States. God helping me, as long as I stay in the Senate I will never give the Congress or the Federal Government a mandate to control it. She was here before the Government was; and out of her loins this Government sprang. It is her creature. She does not intend to bow before the Federal power.

There is no question about what the proposal is. The proposal plainly says, "We will lend you money; we will give you grants, but it is upon condition that the public servants of the State or of its subdivisions shall behave themselves in the democratic process in a particular way demanded by the Congress and the Federal Government as a condition of a money gift." I have not any doubt as to how that question will be resolved in North Carolina. I think I know those people. I am not afraid. I did not fear in the slightest degree yesterday to stand on the floor of the Senate and offer my objection to a cloture which would have brought a conclusion to so solemn a matter without the consideration which I thought the subject demanded.

That is not all of it. It is proposed to corrupt us with our own money. It is proposed to go down to North Carolina and take taxes from the people of North Carolina, and refuse to give back any of the money except on condition. North Carolina is paying more taxes to the Federal Government than all the gifts, grants, and benefit payments combined. In due course of time, when this debt is to be paid—if, in the goodness of God, we shall ever be able to pay it—North Carolina will pay $100 for every dollar she receives. And yet the money is taken from the people of North Carolina by the power of the Federal Government, and the people of North Carolina are told, "We will not give it back to you except upon the condition that you do as we say."

Hear me, Senators! North Carolina is not going to be governed by Senators from New Mexico, Montana, Virginia, or South Carolina. North Carolina does not intend to be governed by the Congress of the United States except in Federal matters. God stay the day whenever I shall consent that my State shall yield her election powers, her primary policies, and her internal policies to the control of any power under heaven except the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, elected by the people of North Carolina, and responsible to them every 2 years. With the utmost respect for Senators from other States, I deny their right to have a thing to do with the internal policies of the Commonwealth of North Carolina. I abhor the policy of using the Federal power of taxation to take money from my people and then say, "We will not give it back to you except upon the conditions stated by us." In plain language, that is negation of the American doctrine. That is repudiation of the democratic process.

So, Mr. President, this legislation strikes very deeply with me. How far would it go? We are now using this power to control the democratic process in elections and primaries. Tomorrow we shall be undertaking to use it in control of the public schools. Most people seem to forget that the Federal Government has not only been making gifts and grants for school buildings in North Carolina—from our own money—but it is also making annual appropriations to the public-school system for vocational education.

If the principle of this bill is sound, another bill may be drawn upon that principle telling us what shall be taught in our schools, and who shall be the teachers. In the interest of carrying some doubtful States, we may be told that we ought to have mixed schools in North Carolina. Congress may go that far. I am talking very frankly to Senators of the United States. There are some who would go that far. I do not know what the years may bring. I do not know what will happen next year, or the year after that, or the year after that. I am standing here today and resisting the beginnings.

I take it Senators understand now what I mean when I say that this is vicious legislation. It is vicious in that it strikes at the very roots of American life. It is vicious in that it asserts a principle which will not only sap the vitality of every commonwealth in America, but will strike it down as a commonwealth and give to it the status that Syria has with France, or Palestine has with Great Britain—the status of a mandated territory.

I hope I may say something more without offense. There has been some expression of wonder that so many Senators from the portion of our country which is called the South are lined up against this legislation. That is not difficult to explain. It is difficult, I agree, to explain to the younger generation, even in the South. It is extremely difficult to explain to our friends from the West and from the North. However, the South once had an experience with Federal control. I do not think that Dante, in his descent to the depths of hell and the bottomless level which he found reserved for the hypocrites of history, ever knew worse than our people knew.

Perhaps it may not be quite in order for me to refer to a motion picture or to a current novel, but I shall. I read the book called Gone With the Wind. I am not a novel reader. That was the first one I had read since Mr. Britling Sees It Through during the World War.

Let me be very personal. As I read that story, every word of it was confirmed in my memory by what my mother told me, and what my father feared day after day and night after night. The story is not overdrawn, Senators. That was Federal control. You say you would not do it again. There is no necessity to trust anybody in such a matter. Perhaps you think you would not, but there will be others. I am glad that book has been made into a motion-picture play. I have only one fear, and that is that the audiences who sit and see what happened after the fall of Atlanta and then see the dread aftermath of Federal control, which was worse than the war, will say, "Oh, well, that is just a romance. That is just fiction." Oh, we could stand the war, and we could stand defeat, but it took heroic men and heroic women to survive the aftermath; and I shall honor them as long as I live.

Oh, my friends, that is a true picture, and I know every word of it. I was born in reconstruction. I grew up in reconstruction. I know something of my own experience; and I know the whole story from lips as pure and true as ever uttered the Gospel of God. Yet here we are, Senators, I think rather lightly—I do not mean to complain—resolving this matter on one trivial circumstance or another, as I see it, as a Senator said yesterday—I would not say it—thinking about our own little orbits and our own little political lives, resolving this question in terms of a mere momentary self-interest. Some think the bill would control adverse politicians in their States, so I hear; some think it would even up matters; but, Senators, do not think in terms of the present or of the moment but of the life of the Republic.

There is a future; there will be a better day, I hope; and in that future I want a policy denying not only Federal control in the Commonwealths that constitute the Republic but a policy that will assert, with all the power of the centuries of English-speaking freedom, the indispensable importance of local self-government, the very foundation of the democratic process.

So, Mr. President, I hope no man will say that I am thinking in terms of politics. I am not thinking whether this bill will hurt the Democratic Party or help it; I am not thinking whether it will help the Republican Party or hurt it; I am not thinking whether the public servants in North Carolina, who may be affected, will approve or disapprove of me; I am thinking in terms of the life of the Republic and the right and meaning and power and usefulness of the Commonwealth whose people sent me here, the Commonwealth of North Carolina. I am speaking in terms of the preservation of the democratic process in America, and I am saying that every time you impinge upon that process, every time you do a thing that tends to impair that process, you are doing precisely what the termites do to a great structure—destroy its foundations, convert its columns and its pillars into dust, with perfect assurance that the day of its fall is inevitable. So much for that phase of the subject.

Mr. President, the theory of this legislation is that activity by officeholders is a bad or pernicious thing. I have been reading in the American press a description of this bill as "the clean politics bill." I am going to denounce that right here as manifest humbuggery, and that is the only name for it. We have had enough of that sort of humbuggery in this country. We seem to think, like children, that we can give a piece of legislation a good name and alter its consequences. We called the National Recovery Act a recovery act, and I believe there was a time when nine-tenths of the people of North Carolina thought all we had to do was to pass that act and recovery would be here the next day. We know what happened. We had recovery before that act went into effect; we were on the way out of the depression in June and July 1933; America was going forward with high hope; but that act went into effect on July 1 and began to operate by August, and we went down to the bottomless pit again. Then the people learned that it was not a recovery act. I think they will learn the same thing about this "clean politics" bill. There is nothing especially clean about this bill; there is nothing cleansing about it; but there is much to degrade.

Now let us look at it and see. This bill says it is all right for the mayor of a town that gets a grant to be as active as he pleases but his clerk is worthy of condemnation; it is unlawful for him to take part in any political activity. Am I to be told that is Americanism? All men are equal under the law here; at least, they used to be.

They turn loose my good friend, Jim Farley as chairman of the Democratic Party in New York State. I think much of him; I do not mean by mentioning his name to indicate otherwise; he is a straight-thinking, honest man, on whose word one can always count; but he is also chairman of the Democratic Party of the Nation; he is Postmaster General, and he handles, through the Post Office Department, about $780,000,000 a year. He can make a speech every day in the week; he can get delegates from Dan to Beersheba; but the sheriff of my county must run into his hole and hide and the deputy sheriff must find a cave. That is an absurdity on its face.

Here is Mr. Ickes, if that is how to pronounce his name [laughter]; I do not know how to pronounce it.

Mr. SMITH. That will do; go on; that is as good as any pronunciation.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not know how to pronounce his name; his name was not known when I was growing up; he is a newcomer to the national life. He can issue political statement after political statement; he can denounce Members of Congress, as he does; he can pull any amount of political wires; he can rebuke us when we do not behave as he thinks we should; and he distributes the public-works money when there is any. Do you appreciate that, Senators? The fountain head of the money can hand it out as he pleases, but if my State gets any or the University of North Carolina gets any or the public schools of my State get any or my county gets any, or my city gets any, every officer is silenced and every employee as well.

Now let us consider the road money. How do we get the road money? A tax is put on gasoline; that tax is taken from my people, and North Carolina does not get back any more than she pays in. It is obtained by the power of the Federal Government, placed in the Treasury, and then the proponents of this bill propose to say, "We will not send a dollar back to you until you do what we say about politics." Every man working on the roads down there, every engineer, every clerk, the highway commissioners, everybody except the Governor—and I do not know why the Governor is excepted—has got to behave himself at a primary or an election as the Federal Government says. That is the size of it; that is what you are doing, and I suppose you will keep on doing it, but I am telling you you are going to repent it. I am going to do what I can to stop it. If I had the physical capacity, I would speak day in and day out about it, until, in course of time, I was able to awaken the American people. What do Senators say about the perniciousness of that?

Mr. Harry Hopkins, who sometime ago distributed W. P. A. money, can—> Play such fantastic tricks before high heaven

> As make the angels weep.

But if any of that money is given to a courthouse, to clean it up or to build it, or to a jail, then I take it that the sheriff, his deputies, and the county commissioners are forever silenced. They must not be politically active, while the man who gives out the money is just as active as he pleases.

What do you think of that? How can men stand for that?

I am not inclined to discuss the politics of this matter, but I am going to say this solemn word: We are not going to have clean politics in America by tying the hands of all the little officeholders and leaving the big ones free. We are not going to have clean politics in America by allowing the men who distribute money to do as they please in politics, and then saying to the little fellows who are on salaries that they must go into their holes and disappear from the political field. That, again, is a monstrous interference with the democratic process. It gives an unlimited power to the men higher up.

I will make an assertion here on which I will stand: The humblest deputy sheriff in North Carolina has just as much right to engage in politics as has the President of the United States. Deny that statement if you wish.

Who ever before drew the line in America between a big officeholder and a little one? Who ever thought of drawing it on the basis of taking our money from us and then saying, "We will not give it back to you except as you do as we please"? That is the inwards of this bill. That is the meaning of this bill. I say to you younger Senators, "Vote for this legislation, and you will live to see the day when you will repent of your action in sackcloth and ashes." You will not be able to say that a just judgment was not visited upon you, either.

Another point: There are limits to the Federal Government. There are limits to its taxing power; and they were not fixed by the old Court, either. Read the A. A. A. decision. It was handed down by Mr. Justice Roberts. He is still on the Court. There was a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Stone, and he is there yet, and he is counted with the progressives on the Court. In this dissenting opinion he undertook to summarize the limitations upon the Federal power in the matter of taxation. Read that dissenting opinion, and you will find that he says that one of the limitations was that the Federal Government could not use its taxing power to coerce. Read it. You remember that that dissenting opinion was signed also by the late Mr. Justice Cardozo, who was a progressive.

I am not saying that this measure would be held unconstitutional. Heaven knows I do not intend as long as I live to say that anything will be held unconstitutional. I shall not live long enough to know just how the new Court is going to resolve questions. That is not a reflection upon the Court. It takes a long time for a court to establish its formulas. It took more than 120 years for a long series of courts to establish the meaning of the Constitution in the national life and in the light of the repeated acts of the Congress, and we thought that meaning was fixed for all time. Suddenly it is all gone. It will not be in 10 years or 20 years that the temper of the thinking of the method of the approach of the present Court, and such additions as may be made to it, will be determinable; but I can say that Mr. Justice Stone, writing that dissenting opinion and not controverted at all by the main opinion, did give an utterance there that supports the argument I am making; and that is, that there is a limitation upon the taxing power of Congress, and that limitation is that the Congress can never employ the taxing power to coerce a Commonwealth.

I would not offend my Republican friends. They have not won many victories during these 7 years, and it appears now that they are soon to win one. I have admired the fidelity with which they have rallied to the banners of our Democratic leader. I have exalted him for his capacity to lead us Democrats; but in his new capacity as leader of the Republican side of the Senate he has added titles of lasting honor to titles of distinction. When this thing is over, if we get it over, it will be a Republican victory. In every instance of votes here you will see that the Democratic majority was against the bill, and that the Republicans, in the most perfect unity in their whole history during the 10 years I have been in the Senate, rushed into the battle at the command of our great leader on the Democratic side and saved the day again and again.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Surely.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the Senator regard it as any element to affect his views this morning in the Commerce Committee when he happened to vote with the minority of the Democrats, with a majority of the Republicans—in fact, I think all the Republicans—against a majority of the Democrats on the committee?

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator thought he was right, and he voted his convictions.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; I think my good friend the Senator from Missouri misunderstood the force of my argument. I was not saying that our Republican friends had done anything wrong. I was complimenting them upon having found, under a Democratic leader, a unity which they could not achieve on their own motion. [Laughter.] I think the Senator missed my point. I would not criticize them. I am complimenting them; but I was making the point that they were supporting this legislation with very great enthusiasm, and I was approaching the point of defending them for it.

I am not surprised. I do not blame the Republicans for entertaining a hope that this legislation may tie the hands of a few Democratic officeholders here and there and give them a chance this fall. I suspect they will not get far unless they do get a good many hands tied. I would not blame a fellow in their fix for seeking that method of getting through; but most seriously, with all due respect, there is a historic difference in our land.

We Democrats affect to believe that we derive our philosophy of government from Thomas Jefferson. I said "affect," I will say to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Thomas Jefferson was the great apostle of local self-government. He was the great protagonist of the State as the essential unit in the life of the Republic. We affect to derive our philosophy from him, and we have claimed that that was the philosophy of the Democratic Party. I take pains to use my verbs in the past tense. I do not think I shall be challenged if I do.

The Republicans very frankly have always claimed, as I have understood, to derive their philosophy from Alexander Hamilton—their philosophy of government. I would not stop there. I would like to be fair. They derive their philosophy of life from Abraham Lincoln, as noble a figure as ever breathed the breath of life, as great an exponent of Americanism and probably the most useful of all the human beings who ever lived in the New World, except George Washington. He preserved the American Union.

Deriving their philosophy from Alexander Hamilton, they may justly assert Federal control and Federal centralization. But what can we Democrats do? We must repudiate Thomas Jefferson, and, while it appears here that the Republicans have been coming over to us in this discussion, the real fact is that our leader and his Democratic followers have been falling into the arms of the Republican opposition. I do not blame them for being so unified in welcoming so glorious a company, especially in an election year.

Now, Mr. President, I have made my argument, and I am content to leave this matter with the Senators. But I do hope that my colleagues will have some thought of the earnestness with which I have spoken, that they will weigh what I have said with some regard to my profound convictions as expressed—that this proposed legislation strikes at the vitals of our national life, strikes at the roots and the foundations of our great Republic; that if this door is opened, through that open door will come a train of evils unending, unending save in the end of all things which our fathers and ourselves have held dear.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], and I had hoped I might not feel called upon to discuss the bill.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is one of the ablest Members of this body and one of its most logical debaters. I have often in private paid him that compliment, if he so considers it, and I am glad to do it publicly. I would not now for a moment detract from his sincerity. I know that he believes every word he has uttered today, and that he always utters sentiments out of the conviction of his heart. I honor the State from which he comes because my grandfather was born and reared in that State, and there still stands in North Carolina the home in which he was born. Someone in that State a few days ago sent me a picture of a magnificent old southern home which has been in the family of my ancestors and my relatives in the State of North Carolina for over 200 years. There is a quality about the people of North Carolina which I have always admired and cherished, and I think the senior Senator from North Carolina, as much as anyone whom I know, exemplifies and typifies that superior quality of the people of his State.

We have listened with great interest to his philosophical and his practical discussions of the theories and processes of democracy. I take no umbrage at all, I will say to my friend, from the fact that he rather singles me out here—I hope not in criticism but in a coincidental circumstance——

Mr. BAILEY. There was no suggestion of criticism. I was complimenting the Senator upon his capacity to lead the Republicans, and then also undertaking to explain in defense of the Republicans that, after all, he was going over to them. Since the Senator has paid a tribute to my State, I wish to make a further contribution to the theory of the new unity. The ancestors of the Republican leader on the other side also came from North Carolina, and his grandfathers' memories are very highly cherished there, just as is the memory of the grandfather of the Democratic leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was not familiar with the fact to which the Senator refers, but I accept that as a further evidence of North Carolina's outstanding greatness.

I am not at all disturbed or embarrassed by the fact that the Republican minority happens to agree with my position on the pending bill. I am inclined to congratulate them, as the Senator from North Carolina has congratulated them, though probably with a slight difference in the angle of approach. It is so seldom that I can congratulate the Republicans on being right that I am delighted to be able to do it, and my enthusiasm and my support for the pending legislation are in no way dampened or lessened because they have seen the light and are supporting the legislation. I believe, as I have always believed, that so long as the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return, and I hope there are others in this Chamber who will hit the sawdust trail before the consideration of the pending legislation shall have been concluded. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator think they have seen things, or rather smelled things—perhaps the fleshpots? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether they have seen or smelled things depends on how close they have been to certain parts of the United States. [Laughter.] I do not know whether their eyesight is more acute than their sense of smell, and it makes very little difference to me.

I appreciate the theory of democracy which is entertained by the Senator from North Carolina, and I appreciate his reference to Thomas Jefferson. I still think I am a follower of Thomas Jefferson, though in the 150 years since Jefferson promulgated his theory of democracy there have been many changes in the approach to that subject and in its application. When Jefferson became President of the United States and was confronted with the conditions which he found as a responsible officer, he, himself, changed some of his theoretical views about the application of the processes of democracy.

Whatever we may say about those processes, whatever we may say about the change in the application of those processes, there is one thing which I do not believe we can successfully change: We cannot afford to pollute or corrupt or corrode the sources of the democracy to which we pay tribute.

We learn in physical geography that no stream can rise above its source, and if that theory is true in physical geography, as we all know it to be, it is likewise true in politics and in government. No stream can rise above its source. What is the source in politics? It is not the Presidency of the United States; it is not the governorship of a State; it is not a United States senatorship; it is not a seat in the House of Representatives; it is not the mayoralty of any city; it is not the office of sheriff in any county. The source of all power and of all authority, the source of the entire political stream of our democracy, lies in the people. They make and unmake men. They declare and nullify policies. My support of the pending bill is based upon the belief—and I think I could quote Thomas Jefferson for that theory and that belief—that, after all, the thing that is most apt to destroy the very foundation of our democracy and pollute the stream from which it flows is the unholy, unlawful, and corrupt use of money in the attempt to control and affect the source of our democracy.

The word "purify" in connection with elections has been bandied around as something theoretical and visionary and something to be laughed at. I do not think the American people feel that way about it. If we are in danger of that sort of pollution in the stream of our democratic thought, shall we attempt to eradicate the evil and its possibilities at the source, or shall we wait until it has gone some way down the stream and then try to alleviate the situation below the source?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was reading the report made by the Senate Committee on Expenditures of Political Parties in 1936. I think I am safe in quoting from memory. It appeared that in 1 year the Republicans collected a little more than $7,000,000. The Democrats collected five and a half million dollars. The Republicans got some money from people of means. The Democrats also got some money from people of means. They got $50,000 from one lady, whose husband is now an ambassador or minister. They got some money from Mr. Pabst, the brewer, and other money from the brewer, Mr. Busch, of Anheuser-Busch. Are we to judge the matter of money—I do not think that is in the bill, which deals with officeholders mainly—based on the sources, or the amounts, and shall we say that the collection of $5,000,000 is not corrupt, whereas the collection of $7,000,000 is corrupt, and that money received from the lady in question is good, while that received by the Republicans from someone else is bad? And shall we say that Mr. Pabst's money is good because he gave it to the Democrats, whereas the money given by someone else is bad because it was given to the Republicans?

Mr. President, I suggest to my dear friend, our leader, that people who live in glass houses should be careful how they throw stones. I have never at all liked Mr. John Lewis' rising in the midst of the sit-down strike and lecturing the President of the United States, saying, "I gave you $50,000 of my people's money, and then I loaned you $450,000, and now you are not doing what I say." Is that corrupt, or not? The same principle is in the bill. It is proposed to lend my State money on condition that the people of the State do something.

I should like to have the Senator elaborate on the subject of political contributions. I know that the Democratic Party goes all through my State seeking money. Why should I withhold that fact? We are going to be fair here with ourselves at any rate. We accept contributions. Are we going to say that that is corrupt? If so, let us find out about it. I would not say that money given to one party is good and money given to the other party is bad.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator has injected a legitimate question which I shall attempt to discuss. I do not condone in any degree, or to any extent to which it may be wrong or evil or improper, the use of money in elections, regardless of the source from which it comes. I do not know anything about it except as it is reported, and I have no doubt the report is accurate. The gentleman mentioned by the Senator, and the lady, who is nameless so far as this debate is concerned, made the contributions to which he has referred. Neither do I contend that money contributed to the Democratic Party is any more untainted, or that it is any more tainted, than money contributed to the Republican Party. But I do contend that of all the money that is taken for campaign purposes by either the Democratic or the Republican Party, the most indefensible action is the taking of money raised by the power of the Government under the guise of taxation and diverting it from the purposes for which it was collected and using it for political purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the Senator, if that is so, why not control Mr. Ickes, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Farley, and the big fellows who handle the money?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I do not regard interviews given out by members of the Cabinet, or Governors, or United States Senators, or others in defense of their policies, or even in criticism of those who oppose them, as a pernicious use of their influence and their power and their authority to control elections, and I do not know of any cases in which any of the gentlemen referred to have undertaken to use money or the power and influence of money to control elections.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is arguing on one aspect as to influence, with respect to them, and on the other with respect to the little officeholder. The little officeholder is not using money either. Certainly the Administrator of Public Works allots money; he handles money. Certainly Mr. Jesse Jones, of the R. F. C. makes allotments. Certainly Mr. Thomas Corcoran, the most active politician in America, is in the R. F. C. They are free. That is all right. A little town in North Carolina borrows some money, and its hands are tied. I should like that to be reconciled. If the Senator will reconcile that, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should be willing to go to almost any honorable or reasonable extent to have the Senator from North Carolina share my views, but I doubt very much if I could induce him to do so.

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to ask the Senator to reconcile that for other Senators. I will go out and smoke meanwhile.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have always contended, as the Senator from North Carolina has contended, that the power to tax is the power to destroy, and the Supreme Court has sustained that view.

Mr. BAILEY. No; the Supreme Court has denied that view.

Mr. BARKLEY. No, no. We know that the power to tax is the power to destroy.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; I am not going back on the Supreme Court.

Mr. GLASS. One of the recent appointees to the Supreme Court signalized his entrance on the bench by saying that John Marshall was a rhetorician rather than a lawyer when he said that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that; but, nevertheless, the power of the Federal Government to reach its arm out into any community or to any industry, whether it is rhetoric or whether it is logic, is the power to destroy the institutions upon which it levies the tax.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I aline myself with John Marshall and not with Mr. Justice Frankfurter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have found myself on occasions with John Marshall. I have no reason to regret that once in a while I can regard the great John Marshall as not only a jurist but a statesman. I think the State of Virginia regards him as such, and I do not say that in any way in derogation of the sincerity of my friend's views.

Mr. GLASS. I, too, so regard John Marshall; but the Senator from Kentucky seems to think that I do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not at all. I was not intimating that, not in the slightest degree. I regard John Marshall as one of the great jurists of all times, and one of the great statesmen of the United States. I think his decisions gave to our Federal Government a cohesion and a permanence and a power that was indispensable, if we were to have a republic capable of carrying out its authority and enforcing its power.

But, Mr. President, we know that the power to tax is the power to take money from people involuntarily so far as they are concerned. We go out with the strong arm of the Federal Government to raise money for a multitude of purposes, and the payment of money into the Federal Treasury frequently causes hardships. Within the next 3 days most of our people will be required to make their income-tax returns; hundreds of thousands of people will be required to go to their banks, if they have credit, and borrow the money with which to make their contribution to the Treasury of the United States. It matters not whether that money is to be allocated among the various States for the purpose of building highways, or for the purpose of paying old-age pensions or unemployment insurance, whether it is for the purpose of maintaining the civilian conservation camps, or for any other purpose. I maintain that neither the Federal Government, nor the State governments, nor any branch of the Federal or State Governments have a right to use that money directly or indirectly for the purpose of determining the course of action to be pursued by the source of power in the United States; that is, the people.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to inquire if the Senator knows of any States in the Union that have sufficient machinery to cope with the kind of evil to which he has referred.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not have a list of the States which have enacted legislation of that sort. My own State has passed a statute which makes it unlawful for anyone in the State government or anyone under the State government to wring campaign contributions by means of coercion, intimidation, or threats.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. Does the Senator believe there are any States which need the help of the Federal Government in setting up machinery to protect them against the kind of practice referred to?

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably not. I do not think the question revolves around that issue. However, I think the Federal Government, in the expenditure of the money, may need the help of States in order that all the atmosphere, all the ramifications, and all the approach to this sort of political expenditure may be prohibited. But if the States are not willing to protect the people against the use of their own tax money with respect to purely State activities, it is my contention that we have an obligation to protect the people of the States and the people of the United States from such use of money which the United States Government applies to the advancement of these projects and activities.

Mr. MALONEY. I think the charge of abuse of money which is so carelessly made throughout the debate is very much overdone. If there have been abuses in some few isolated cases in the Nation, it seems pretty harsh treatment of the other States, in attempting to correct one or two or three isolated cases, to punish all the States of the Union by this dictatorial procedure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should not say that the cases are isolated. Neither should I say that any State would be penalized or punished under the proposed legislation in order to relieve the conditions which are aimed at.

That leads me to discuss the question of States' rights, which has been injected into this debate. In the first place, I do not think any State has a right to demand that the Government of the United States, out of its Treasury, put up any money to carry on activities within the States. The money is not allocated to the States on the theory that originally they had any right to demand that Congress appropriate money in order to assist them in their activities.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator in that statement; but have they not also the right, if the Federal Government allocates money to other States, to demand their share?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course they have a right to be treated on a basis of equality with all other States; but they have no fundamental, original right to demand that the Federal Government, out of its Treasury, shall make any contribution to any county within the State. If they have no original or fundamental right, as a matter of States' rights, to demand that money shall be contributed to them out of the Treasury of the United States, they have no right to demand that they shall fix the terms upon which the expenditures shall be made when the money is allocated to them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CHANDLER. Have not the several States been accepting money from the Federal Government under restrictions and with the understanding that they had to pass compliance laws; and have they not, certainly during the past 7 years, been living under the direction of heads of bureaus of the Federal Government in Washington; and have they not been required to cooperate in order to get along?

The proposed law is no new invasion of States' rights. We now say to the States, "Quit listening to Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Ickes, and all the other heads of bureaus, boards, and commissions. If you have a complaint, make it to the Civil Service Commission. If you spend the money of the Federal Government, you must spend it for purposes of government, for public health, schools, charities, old-age pensions, and the like, and quit spending it for politics."

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct. Not only since the passage of the first good-roads law in 1916, but even before that—although that is the most recent outstanding example—we required the States to do certain things, to comply with certain requirements, in order to obtain money from the Federal Government. They were not required to do so unless they wanted the money.

Mr. CHANDLER. They were anxious enough to get the money, and they did not turn it down. Is not that true?

Mr. BARKLEY. They have all complied with the requirements and have received their share of the money. They have never complained that the Federal Government has exercised the right to fix the terms upon which the money should be expended.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I think it has been conceded during the course of the debate that the Federal Government does not have a right to do directly what we are seeking to do indirectly. In other words, the Federal Government may not penalize or punish a State employee for participating in politics.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, the Federal Government or Congress may not directly require that a State employee be discharged.

Mr. ADAMS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may not prescribe a criminal statute for the violation of which a State officer may be punished within his jurisdiction as a State officer. Because of that fact, the bill now before us has undertaken to provide a way in which the law may be enforced without attempting to invade the criminal field by undertaking to punish men through a criminal statute.

Mr. ADAMS. The plan is to say to the State, "Here is some money we do not have to give you. We will withhold it from you if you do not make certain exactions as to the conduct of your officials." Is not that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. We have the power to withhold it.

Mr. ADAMS. In other words, we are seeking to purchase from the States certain action which we have no right to require.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator explain how that action differs from bribery?

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I do not agree that we are trying to purchase from the States any authority or any right regarding the expenditure of the money. We are trying to say to the States, "This is the money of the Federal Government. It is the money of the American people. It has been taken from them without their consent, except insofar as they have been willing to pay taxes, which they were compelled to pay. We are now undertaking to fix the conditions under which the money shall be expended, just as we have done in connection with highways, old-age pensions, and all such activities. If the State is not willing to comply with the requirements made as a condition for the expenditure of the money, it need not use it."

Mr. ADAMS. If we could exact this condition, we could exact some other conditions. We could make an exaction as to the taxes the States should levy; we could make an exaction as to the salaries paid State employees; we could make an exaction as to State schools, if the States were willing to take the money rather than to insist on their rights.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Federal Government has the right to fix conditions under which money allocated by it shall be expended. However, since the Senator has used the word "bribery"——

Mr. ADAMS. That is a harsher term than I meant to use.

Mr. BARKLEY. Still, the Senator used it. He himself used the language.

Mr. ADAMS. Then let it stand.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said we are trying to bribe a whole State to do something it might not otherwise want to do. I do not think even that harsh term is any more disagreeable with respect to the use of this authority in regard to a State than the use by some State officer of money furnished by the Government of the United States to bribe a man who holds a position under him to vote in a certain way or be precluded from any longer participating in the benefits conferred by the expenditure of the money.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have been greatly interested in the debate during the past several days, and the sudden interest which has been manifested in the Senate in the granting of Federal funds on condition. I asked the Legislative Reference Bureau to prepare for me a list of laws in which such conditions have been attached. I hold in my hand 18 pages of closely typed references to laws passed by the Congress granting funds upon conditions of all kinds. For instance, one law made certain grants of hospitals to the State of Minnesota upon the condition that Indians should be granted citizenship by the State of Minnesota. Eighteen solid pages of such references lie before me on my desk.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it might be helpful and instructive if the Senator would have the tabulation inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator from New Mexico if any of the so-called conditions to which he refers prevents any citizen of any State which directly or indirectly received any of the funds from taking any part in any local political campaign in his or her State?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I may answer——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. I have not had time to read all the conditions, but I did pick out certain ones. I have just pointed out one instance in which the granting of full citizenship to certain residents of the State—a matter clearly only within the jurisdiction of the sovereign State—was made a condition precedent to the granting of the gift.

Mr. PEPPER. What was the subject of the appropriation?

Mr. HATCH. The granting of certain hospitals to the State of Minnesota.

Mr. PEPPER. Were they hospitals for Indians?

Mr. HATCH. I suppose they were hospitals for Indians. That makes no difference. The test was that the State of Minnesota changed its laws and granted citizenship to a class of persons who theretofore had not had citizenship.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know the conditions, of course; but I do not suppose the Senator would approve the appropriation of Federal money to the State of North Dakota, for example, upon condition that the State change its name, or that all the people cut their hair the way the roundheads in ancient England used to cut theirs, or any such condition. I assumed that there was some proper relationship between the condition and the grant. I was merely interested to know whether or not, in any of the cases cited by the Senator, any local citizens had been prevented from taking part in any local political campaigns in which the Federal Government had no interest.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; the Congress has enacted legislation of that type.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator refer to the Social Security Act?

Mr. HATCH. That is one example.

Mr. PEPPER. Are there others?

Mr. HATCH. I think there are others.

Mr. PEPPER. It is significant that that is the only example.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate longer except to make an observation particularly in connection with the jibe which has been constantly hurled in the debate that there is something unworthy about the whole proceeding because the Republican minority happens to be voting with those of us on the Democratic side who support this legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me finish my observation. I dare say that the Democratic Party would not be in power in the Nation today if it had not been for the fact that in 1932 it received the votes of millions of Republicans. Are they to be condemned because they voted with us? The same thing was true in 1936. It would have been impossible for the President of the United States to receive the overwhelming majority which he received, in both the popular vote and the electoral college, if he had not received hundreds of thousands and millions of votes which formerly had been cast for the Republican Party. I dare say that there are Members on the floor of the Senate now on the Democratic side—I hope they will remain here—who would not be here today if it had not been for the fact that in their States thousands of Republicans deserted their party and voted to send them here.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. I appreciate that feeling of independence, and I congratulate those Republicans in the States who made it possible for Democrats to be sent here. I have no doubt that when we again come up for reelection in all our States we will try to appeal to the independence of the Republican voters. I know I do it in my State. When I was first elected to this body against the Republican sitting Member I was elected, in part, by Republican voters in Kentucky, and there are others here in the same situation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Idaho in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. If it is right and proper and patriotic and to be commended in the States for Republicans to vote for Democratic candidates, I cannot have it in my heart to criticize the Republican Members of the Senate because they have in this particular contest voted with those of us who favor the pending legislation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield first to the Senator from North Carolina, who has been on his feet some time.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will allow me, I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I merely wish to ask the Senator if he would not think it extraordinary if all the Republicans in the United States voted the Democratic ticket in the election?

Mr. BARKLEY. It might be extraordinary, but I would welcome it.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I would not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, our distinguished leader is commending the Republicans for deserting their party and voting the Democratic ticket, I suppose on the ground that they exercised freedom in the performance of their duty. Now will he turn that around and commend the Democrats for going over and voting the Republican ticket this year?

Mr. BARKLEY. If any Democrat in the United States honestly and conscientiously believes it is his duty to vote for the Republican candidate for President or for a United States Senator, and does it in the exercise of his independent right because he believes it is his duty to do it, I will commend him. I may not agree with him, but I will commend him for his sincerity.

Mr. BAILEY. That makes it all right. Now I want to ask the Senator another question. This proposed legislation leaves mayors outside its terms. Frank Hague is a mayor and a great political boss; Kelly, of Chicago, is a mayor and a great political boss; LaGuardia is a mayor and quite an influential man. They come to Washington and get money from the Federal Treasury. New York City alone gets three times as much as the whole State of North Carolina. They are free to do what they please, those two bosses and the third man. But here is a humble fellow, occupying a minor place, whose hands are tied. Will the Senator explain to me how that can be reconciled with morality and common sense? Is he in favor of turning Frank Hague—"I am the law" Hague—and Boss Kelly loose with the money they come here and get, and then when my county of Wake, in North Carolina, gets a little appropriation having everybody's hands there tied? I merely wish to get that straight.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I do not wish to draw any invidious comparisons between Mayor Hague, Mayor Kelly, and Mayor LaGuardia.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not drawing any invidious comparisons. I am giving the facts under the operation of this bill. The Senator will agree that Mayor Hague is a great boss, will he not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am making no comments on whether he is a boss or not; he is alleged to be, but whether he is or not makes no difference so far as the pending legislation is concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. He is an advocate of a third term for the President, and so is Kelly.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is their privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. And under this bill it is their business to get all the money they can, and spend it in politics, too.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator knows this bill eliminates all officers, such as Governors and mayors, because they are responsible to the people; they are not appointed by anybody; nobody holds any strings or power over them, unless it may be the President of the United States. If we are willing to say that before Mayor Hague or Mayor Kelly or Mayor LaGuardia or any other mayor can obtain funds for public-works projects the President of the United States is demanding a quid pro quo or proposes to exercise any control over them, then, he is indicting the entire democratic theory. I do not think the Senator from North Carolina would do that, and I do not think he believes that to be so.

Mr. BAILEY. I was very much intrigued by the Senator's statement that Mayor Hague was responsible to the people. I thought the people were responsible to Mayor Hague.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator can put any interpretation on that situation which suits him.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the way it works.

Mr. BARKLEY. But we all agree, though sometimes in theory it may be inaccurate, depending upon local conditions, that all elective officers are responsible to the people; the people can attend to them whenever they want to; they have done it frequently, and will do it, no doubt, in the future.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is referring to elective officers. What does he say about Mr. Farley and Mr. Ickes? They are not elective officers. And Mr. Thomas Corcoran—I never heard of anybody electing him to anything.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Corcoran is not an elective officer.

Mr. BAILEY. But he is the most active politician in the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt that; I doubt it seriously, because I happen to know Mr. Corcoran. I have collaborated with him in the effort to frame legislation, as other Senators have, and his services have been many times very valuable because of the information which he was able to obtain and bring to the attention of committees. Mr. Corcoran, however, has been given credit, I will say to the Senator, for infinitely more political activity than I think he has ever been guilty of.

Mr. BAILEY. He could not possibly have been as great as some new dealers have made him out to be. I will agree to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not making him out to be great, but I do say he has performed valuable public service, and I think any member of any committee of the Senate or the House who has had any experience with him in the hearings or had any collaboration with him in committees in the framing of legislation will be willing to pay him the tribute at least that his services have been valuable and helpful.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator that I heard someone say of a certain lady that she would say nothing but good about anyone. Another man said, "Well, I will try her out." So he went to see her, and he said, "What do you think of the devil?" He thought he would get the better of her in that way. She said, "I will have to say that the devil is very industrious." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, good and bad are relative terms, and we frequently differ about them in politics.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator's friend Corcoran has been very industrious. However, I should like to have the Senator come down to this point: Frank Hague being a great boss, and Mr. Kelly being a great boss, both being mayors, they could come down here and stick their hands in the Treasury just as deep as the bottom, and this bill would not affect them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would say, if it affords the Senator any satisfaction to get a definition from me, that if Mr. Hague is a boss, he is a great boss; if Mr. Kelly is a boss, he is a great boss.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; and great Democrats; but if they were Republicans, they would be monstrous.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all; not in the slightest; but I am not passing on the question whether they are or are not. I am commenting on the point raised by the Senator that, under this proposed legislation, they would be freer than the sheriff of his county. They would be no freer than the Governor of his State; they would be no freer than any other elective officer who has power by the expenditure of money or by the withholding of appointments or by the termination of appointments to control activities of citizens who may happen to hold subordinate offices under them.

Now, just a word as to the pending amendment. I have spoken longer than I intended, due very largely to the valuable interruptions I have had.

The amendment of the Senator from Colorado provides that not only the Hatch bill, if it shall be enacted, but the Hatch law as it now exists, shall not apply in any State unless the State legislature of that State meets and passes a law applying the same principle, the same standard, to all State employees. I do not believe, as a matter of principle and as a matter of policy, it is wise for the Congress to pass a law applicable to its own employees and applicable to its own activities and then provide that, while this is a national law controlling our employees, controlling our Federal activities, it shall not apply to any State unless the State applies the same standard to its own employees and its own activities. I do not believe that on principle or on policy that sort of spotty application of a Federal statute can be justified in the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Does not the Social Security Act have the same provision? Does it not require that certain requirements be met by the States?

Mr. BARKLEY. The social-security law requires, of course, that in order for a State to obtain any of the funds for old-age pensions, for instance, it must put up dollar for dollar. That is entirely different from a proposal to enact a penal statute punishing Federal employees for doing what Congress may think is an unjustified activity in the propagation of political candidacies.

Mr. STEWART. Does not the Social Security Act have penal provisions in it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Surely.

Mr. STEWART. Do they apply in the States?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, they do not apply in a State in which the law itself is not applicable and which is unwilling to put up any money in order to pay old-age pensions. Of course, it would be stupid for Congress to pass a law and prescribe penalties for the violation of that law unless the State complies with the law and raises an equal amount of money for the purpose of carrying it into effect.

Mr. STEWART. The point I made simply was that if the conformity statutes do not pass, then the penal provisions would not be in effect in the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it would be just as logical for Congress now to pass a law repealing the statute against pernicious activity on the part of the rural mail carriers unless the State legislature should pass a law fixing the same standard for all State employees. We never have done that, and certainly the Senate ought not now to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment, and send to the desk another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment of the Senator from Colorado is withdrawn. The amendment now offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 4, commencing with line 21, it is proposed to strike out the sentence ending in line 22 on the same page and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

No officer or employee described in the preceding sentence shall take any active part in political management or in any political campaign: Provided, That this sentence and the second sentence of section 9 of Public, No. 252, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, approved August 2, 1939, shall not apply to any such officer or employee as defined in said act or in this sentence in any State, the laws of which do not forbid the officers and employees of such State or agency of the general class above described from taking any active part in political management or political campaigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Russell
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Schwartz
Bailey	Frazier	Lodge	Sheppard
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Shipstead
Barbour	Gerry	McCarran	Smathers
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Smith
Bilbo	Gillette	McNary	Stewart
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Taft
Bulow	Green	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Burke	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Gurney	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Townsend
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Truman
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Tydings
Chandler	Hayden	Nye	Vandenberg
Chavez	Herring	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holman	Pepper	Walsh
Connally	Holt	Pittman	White
Danaher	Hughes	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BYRD. On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. Were he here, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]; the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]; and the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from Florida would vote "yea", and that the Senator from California and the Senators from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am advised that my general pair [Mr. BRIDGES] is otherwise specially paired on this vote, and I am, therefore, free to vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "nay," and the Senator from Utah would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are unavoidably absent.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—34

Adams	Clark, Idaho	Herring	Minton
Bailey	Connally	Hill	Pepper
Bankhead	Donahey	Hughes	Pittman
Bilbo	Ellender	Johnson, Colo.	Smathers
Brown	Gillette	Lee	Smith
Bulow	Glass	Lundeen	Stewart
Byrnes	Guffey	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Caraway	Harrison	Maloney
Chavez	Hayden	Miller

NAYS—47

Ashurst	Gerry	Murray	Taft
Austin	Gibson	Neely	Thomas, Idaho
Barbour	Green	Norris	Thomas, Utah
Barkley	Gurney	Nye	Townsend
Burke	Hale	O'Mahoney	Truman

NOT VOTING—15

Andrews	Downey	McNary	Tobey
Bone	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Bridges	King	Schwellenbach	Wiley
Byrd	Lucas	Slattery

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I feel again that we might very well enter into an agreement about a final vote on the pending bill, and inasmuch as there has just been a roll call, I could ask unanimous consent that the calling of the roll for the purpose of developing a quorum be waived in that connection.

I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate shall proceed to vote without further debate on the bill and all amendments thereto, and on any motion relating thereto.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I made a suggestion yesterday to the Senator from Kentucky that I would be unwilling to have a definite agreement unless there were some very small time, as short a time as 10 minutes, for the explanation of amendments which might be submitted within 10 minutes or 5 minutes of the time for a vote, that there might be a period within which the amendment could be explained.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty about that, though it may not be insurmountable, is that no one can tell how many amendments might be offered at the last minute which would require 10 minutes' discussion.

Mr. ADAMS. The difficulty will be that there will be no unanimous-consent agreement unless some such arrangement can be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I cannot control that.

Mr. ADAMS. All I am asking is a reasonable time. An amendment might be submitted, and a Senator could not even ask to have it explained.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest that a limitation of debate, perhaps at 3 o'clock, be entered into.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to ask whether the Senator from Colorado would be willing to agree that beginning tomorrow at 2 o'clock, or 3 o'clock—I will say 3 o'clock—no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill or any amendment, and that at not later than 6 o'clock a final vote be taken on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not desire to be obstructive; all I want to have is an opportunity, if an amendment is offered, to know at least what the amendment means. An amendment might be offered 1 minute before 5 or 10 minutes before 5. I would just as soon have a vote taken this afternoon, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator understands that the request I have submitted does not preclude the offering of amendments after the time for debate shall be concluded, which is frequently the case. Senators offer amendments and they are voted on without discussion. I have no desire at all to prevent any Senator from discussing any amendment which may be offered, but if we are ever to come to a vote, we will have to fix some time. If we fix 5 o'clock or any other hour as the hour for voting, and then provide that if after that time any amendment which may be offered may be discussed, it would be of no avail. If the Senator has a practical suggestion as to how to work out what is in his mind, and will submit it, I will attempt to go along with him.

Mr. ADAMS. My suggestion is that if amendments are offered within 10 minutes of the time fixed for a vote, we should extend the time 5 minutes, or 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to try that out.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I do not propose to do anything to prevent an early disposition of the pending bill; but before agreeing to a limitation of debate on amendments, there are some of us, in view of some rumors and reports which have been floating about, who would like to know the nature of some of the amendments. If certain bills are to be proposed as amendments to the pending bill of which I have heard rumors, and of which other Senators have heard rumors, there will be a long debate on the bill and amendments.

I do not desire to be captious with the Senator, because I want to expedite the disposition of the bill. I have already said all I care to say about the bill, but the Senator can understand, in view of certain reports which have been prevalent, that some of us could not agree unless we had a gentleman's agreement, which would be entirely satisfactory to me, that certain bills, which some Senators would feel disposed to oppose as vigorously as they might and as long as they might, are not to be offered as amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator knows I cannot guarantee that any amendment or any bill will not be offered. I think I understand what the Senator has in his mind as to the rumors.

Mr. MILLER. I am sure the Senator does.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am hoping, and I think the hope is justified, that the particular matter which the Senator has in mind will not be injected into the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, I suggest that in the unanimous-consent agreement he include a provision that no amendment shall be considered which is not submitted or filed at least 10 minutes before the final vote is to be taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt whether that would be agreed to. I will modify my request in this way: I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote at 5 o'clock, as I have already requested, with a proviso that if within 10 minutes prior to 5 o'clock, I will say 4:50 o'clock p. m. tomorrow afternoon, other amendments are offered which are not offered prior to that time, the time shall be extended to an hour not later than 6 o'clock p. m. tomorrow, at which time we shall vote on the bill.

Mr. MILLER. That would not be satisfactory. Let me offer a suggestion. I have no objection to a limitation of debate, and have no objection to the hour of voting being fixed, provided no amendments are offered which are not germane to the bill. If our leader will incorporate in the agreement a provision which will exclude amendments which are not germane to the bill, I will have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to come to that very proposal—to see if we could reach an agreement by unanimous consent that nothing but germane amendments should be offered to the pending bill.

Mr. MILLER. With that included, I have no objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The question of germaneness rests wholly with the Members of the Senate. I have no objection, but, as a practical proposition, I think the Senator can understand that if the bill about which he speaks should be offered, the question whether it was germane or not would rest with the Members of the Senate, and if it is a popular bill they might decide it was germane.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I realize that decision of the question of germaneness rests with the Senate, but I think every Member of the Senate knows what the Senator from Arkansas has in mind, and I am one of those Members of this body who believe that if the Senate enters into such an agreement, the word "germaneness" will be given the construction ordinarily given that word, and no amendment will be proposed which is not germane to the issue before us. I have no fear about the good faith of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it has often been stated that the Senate can do anything by unanimous consent. I think that if unanimous consent were given that none but germane amendments should be offered to the bill, it would be interpreted as the equivalent of a suspension of all other rules in contravention of that, including the rule referred to by the Senator from Oregon; and in that case, of course, the Chair would pass upon the question of germaneness. All I am seeking to do is to accommodate Senators who are willing to bring this matter to a termination.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. I am afraid the Senator is a little bit premature in trying to reach an agreement to fix an hour to vote on the bill and all amendments thereto. For one, I shall be forced to make objection until I know more about the amendments. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has offered an amendment which will require considerable discussion. I think it has at least as much merit as any other amendment that has been offered, if not more. I think it will bring about an extended discussion.

Mr. President, I am not trying to be an obstructionist, but I shall be compelled to object to any agreement limiting the time of debate on the bill or any of its amendments.

As to the amendment referred to by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], we all know what he was talking about. He was talking about the antilynching bill. I think that is germane to the pending bill [laughter], because the bill is an attempt to lynch the rights of the citizens of the States by the Federal Government. It is an invasion of States' rights. So is the antilynching bill, and the antilynching bill is germane to this bill. Therefore I shall object to any agreement at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I modify my request to this extent: That beginning tomorrow at 3 p. m. no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 30 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. BILBO. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The question is upon the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Evidently there is a sufficient number.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barbour	Burke	Chandler
Ashurst	Barkley	Byrd	Chavez
Austin	Bilbo	Byrnes	Clark, Idaho
Bailey	Brown	Capper	Clark, Mo.
Bankhead	Bulow	Caraway	Connally

Danaher	Herring	Murray	Stewart
Davis	Hill	Neely	Taft
Donahey	Holman	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Ellender	Holt	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Frazier	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Utah
George	Johnson, Colo.	Overton	Townsend
Gerry	La Follette	Pepper	Truman
Gibson	Lee	Pittman	Tydings
Gillette	Lodge	Reed	Vandenberg
Glass	Lundeen	Reynolds	Van Nuys
Green	McCarran	Russell	Wagner
Guffey	McKellar	Schwartz	Walsh
Gurney	McNary	Sheppard	Wheeler
Hale	Maloney	Shipstead	White
Harrison	Mead	Slattery	Wiley
Hatch	Miller	Smathers
Hayden	Minton	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the statement of the Chair to be that the question is on the committee amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the amendment at the end of the bill, dealing with the Civil Service Commission, been acted on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Several amendments were made to the committee amendment. The Senator from Wyoming offered an amendment to the committee amendment and other Senators offered amendments which have been adopted. The Chair does not know the specific amendment to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am trying to find out whether or not the amendment which I offered yesterday and which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, is in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama refer to the amendment which he offered yesterday?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. The parliamentary inquiry I make is whether or not my amendment may now be offered as an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it could be added at the end of the committee amendment on page 7, after line 18.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is so tendered. I call up that amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate or expenditures by any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal. The President of the United States for the purpose of this act is declared to be an elective officer.

(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(c) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person or corporation directly or indirectly in excess of $1,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

(d) Any person or the officers of any corporation who directly or indirectly contributes more than $1,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election in violation of the provisions of this section is guilty of pernicious political activity and on conviction shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than 5 years. It shall be the duty of the court to increase the fine in accordance with the amount contributed and with defendant's ability to pay.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to modify my amendment on page 2, line 5, after the word "person" to strike out "or corporation", and on page 2, line 8, after the word "person" to strike out "or the officers of any corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The purpose of the change is to eliminate corporations from the amendment, and leave it directed to individuals. The purpose is to leave no doubt with respect to the construction of the present Corrupt Practices Act prohibiting corporations from making political contributions.

Mr. President, at the beginning I wish to say that my remarks are not intended to be time consuming. This amendment is offered in entire good faith, and in large measure for the purpose of testing the good faith of a number of Members of the Senate who claim that they are supporting the bill as a matter of clean politics and for the elimination of unclean, unfair, and corrupt methods of conducting elections in this country. I want to see if the Members on the other side of the aisle who are unanimously supporting a clean-election and clean-politics program will go one step further. I want to see if they will take a step which would really tend to purify elections in America.

We all know that money is the chief source of corruption. We all know that large contributions to political campaigns not only put the political party under obligation to the large contributors, who demand pay in the way of legislation, but we also know that large sums of money are used for the purpose of conducting expensive campaigns through the newspapers and over the radio; in the publication of all sorts of literature, true and untrue; and for the purpose of paying the expenses of campaigners sent out into the country to spread propaganda, both true and untrue. It is, of course, true that regardless of which party engages in such activity the result is the same. The amendment is not addressed to the Republican Party, though I maintain that it brings about a test of their sincerity in the claim that they are now standing as a unit helping to bring about clean politics and clean elections. As I see it, it brings about a similar test with other Members of the Senate.

The bill has been differently construed by different Members of the Senate—in my judgment, in large measure, in good faith. There has been a difference of opinion about the construction of the bill. There has also been a wide difference of opinion about the objective of the bill. Some Senators sincerely think it would tend to elevate and purify politics in elections. From the standpoint of the corrupt-practice provision in it, that is undoubtedly true.

So far as the first eight sections of the original Hatch Act are concerned, to my mind there is no objection to those provisions, except that in some cases they do not go far enough. According to the language used, the first eight sections are intended to control the activity of certain Government officials who are entrusted with the administration of the law and who have policy-forming powers under the law.

If, in bringing about a degree of additional purity in elections by curbing the activities of the higher-up officials, we at the same time place shackles upon those lower down the line, in large measure we deprive them of their full citizenship. We say to a W. P. A. worker that he may not participate in any active way in the elections in the town in which he is engaged in work. Just what limitations the bill provides against taking any part in politics is a matter of difference of opinion, as I have indicated; but whenever a suggestion is made that the thing to be condemned and prohibited should be pernicious political activity, according to the title of the bill and in line with its declared purpose to prevent pernicious political activity, we find at once a protest from the sponsors of the bill. Why? If the object is in line with the title of the bill, if the title is a sincere, open, frank declaration of the purpose of the bill, then why should not the bill follow the title? What is the objection to letting the provisions of the bill correspond with the declaration contained in the title of the bill, "To prevent pernicious political activities"? Why put a cloud over the rights of every humble citizen in America who is engaged in some activity, national, State, municipal, or district, with respect to which some part of the compensation comes from the Federal Treasury, without permitting him to know what the restrictions are?

It is said, "the Civil Service Commission will tell him what they are." Mr. President, is that fair to a worker? Is it fair to an honest man who wants to be a full-fledged citizen, and who, on the other hand, does not want to violate the law of the country, to say to him, "Go to Washington and consult the Civil Service Commission before you can find out what rights you are entitled to exercise under this law"?

What is the result? What is the common-sense application of such a rule? It simply means that all doubt about the construction of the act, all doubt about what activities the common, unlearned laborer may participate in, must of necessity be resolved by the worker against his own political and personal independence and right to participate with his neighbors in all elections and campaigns of every character.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Alabama construe section 15, which authorizes the Civil Service Commission to issue regulations, to mean that this year the Commission may issue one set of regulations denouncing certain offenses, and next year may change its mind and issue a new set for some other election or some other situation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, it could change the regulations overnight. There is no limitation of time on the issuance of regulations.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that be true—and I do not know whether or not it is true—does not that mean setting up a little legislative body in the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. And allowing it to regulate politics?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is a migratory, roving power. We do not know what it is. It is not stable. It is not fixed. It is fixed by three Commissioners in Washington, and may be changed from time to time without notice and without publication.

Mr. HATCH. The law now covers more than half a million individuals.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator says the law now covers more than half a million individuals. It is now proposed to put another half million under it. I have not heard of any especially good results obtained by controlling the half million now subject to the law. I have not heard of any enforcement of the law since it was passed. I have not heard of any prosecution or discharge.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the power we give the Civil Service Commission to make regulations also contains the power to do away with regulations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would it not be possible in some instances for the Civil Service Commission to relax its restrictions by issuing new regulations?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it may issue them, it may repeal them.

Mr. CONNALLY. And practically destroy the effect of the act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is absolutely true. That is one reason why I am reluctant to vote for the bill. I do not believe it is right or just, I do not believe it is democratic, to tell a worker on the public road that he may not take part in the election of a member of the legislature from his county.

Mr. CONNALLY. Or a school trustee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Or a school trustee; but particularly a member of the legislature, under circumstances in which an issue may exist with respect to the appropriation of State funds to match Federal funds.

The worker upon the road, a humble citizen in overalls, is precluded from engaging in any sort of controversy about the election of a member of the legislature of his State. The controversy may involve the issue of continuance of the road work. Can there be any impurity in allowing the worker the same freedom of action which we allow to the man who is working alongside the road on a job which does not involve the payment of any Government money?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is it the able Senator's opinion that under such a law millions of working people would be gagged?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are already gagged under section 9 of the Hatch Act.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The proposed law would increase the number.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The proposed law would increase the number by a very large, indefinite, and indeterminate amount.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I stated the other day that the legislation now affects possibly 1,200,000 Federal employees, and it had a possibility of affecting 2,600,000 State and local employees.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will permit me, is that in addition to the first number?

Mr. BROWN. That is in addition to the 1,200,000 Federal employees who are now affected. This legislation may affect 2,600,000 State and local employees. Let me tell the Senator that I obtained those figures from the statistics we received from the Treasury Department as to State employees who would be subject to the Federal income-tax law.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The total would be some four or five million persons, then; would it not?

Mr. BROWN. Approximately 4,000,000 persons are subject to the provisions of the bill.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit, I should like to make one other observation. Not only does the bill prevent political activity in elections such as the Senator has referred to, but it would prevent political activity in an election, we will say, in which the question of whether or not moving-picture shows were to be open on Sunday was the issue, or whether the curfew should be at 9 o'clock or 10 o'clock at night. The bill definitely applies to that kind of an election.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It applies, as I understand, to any election of any sort—National, Federal, State, county, municipal, or district.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. In the gubernatorial elections in my State of New Jersey in past years, Mr. Pew, of Pennsylvania, has come into the State and, through different members of his family, has contributed amounts of $5,000 and $10,000, so that the total amount contributed by him through different members of his family would run as high as $70,000. Would the Senator's amendment prohibit that outrage from taking place again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, it certainly would; but I am afraid we cannot get sufficient votes to adopt it. It might swamp the Hatch purity bill. We shall find out when we get through.

I desire to alter one statement I made to the Senator from Minnesota when I said that the bill would apply to all elections. It would apply to participation in election activities by employees who get any part of their compensation from the Federal Treasury, however much, whatever question may be involved. The bill is limited in that respect, of course. That is where we get the total of four or five million workers who get some part of their pay from Federal loans or grants. The application of the bill is not confined to grants. It applies also to reimbursable secured loans, as I understand, made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and all other reimbursable loans made by the Government; so it applies to such persons as workers upon irrigation projects if they are employed by an agency of the Government of any kind.

I submit to the Senator that the trend back toward limiting the number of persons who have freedom of citizenship, freedom of activity in public affairs, is clearly a drive toward dictatorial government. That is exactly what Hitler and Mussolini have done in bringing about their domination and autocratic control of the dictatorial nations. They have destroyed political parties, not only those who got benefits from the Government but all other parties. They have reduced, step by step, the number of persons who could participate in elections, and finally have eliminated all citizens from free participation in governmental affairs in their respective countries.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator's attention been called to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture has ruled that local committees for the administration of the Farm Act—prominent citizens who are selected simply to give their time to helping administer the law, who are not salaried men at all, but are paid, I think, only their expenses and perhaps some nominal sum by way of per diem—are amenable to the existing Hatch Act? If I am not correct in that statement, I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the statement is not correct. The ruling was that they were not under the Hatch Act.

Mr. CONNALLY. I read that statement in the newspapers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but the newspapers got it wrong.

Mr. HATCH. That statement was in the newspapers, but it was wrong.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very glad to be corrected. I read in the press a statement that the Secretary of Agriculture had so ruled. If it was corrected later, I am glad.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me state to the Senator, in line with the trend here toward limiting the right of citizenship in this country, that notice has already been given that an amendment will be offered by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to include elective county committeemen and community committeemen, elected by the people. I do not know whether or not the Senator is going to follow up his amendment. I saw it mentioned in the newspapers more than once. That shows the trend of a drive of this sort, when there is an inclination and a notice of intention to go down to the grass roots and take out of public participation committeemen who work by the day at a meager wage, largely rendering a community service. Simply because some part of their compensation comes from the Government they will thereafter be prohibited from taking any part in an agricultural-program controversy.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. LUNDEEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to straighten out the Senator a little on some of his statements in connection with his desire to protect the committeemen.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. HATCH. It is true that the Solicitor of the Agricultural Department ruled that local committeemen do not come under the provisions of the act we passed last summer and are not within its ban; but it is also true that under authority granted by the Congress of the United States to a department official, under legislation voted for and worked for by the Senator from Alabama, the Secretary of Agriculture has announced his own ruling forbidding committeemen in the various counties to participate actively in politics. I ask the Senator whether Congress should pass the laws, whether those men should be forbidden by congressional act, or by decree from a Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The answer is as simple and plain as the English language. They should not be so forbidden by Congress nor by a dictatorial order of the head of a department.

Mr. HATCH. The order has been entered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right. I did not participate in it, and I will vote to repeal it.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Alabama sponsored legislation giving power to make those regulations and he has sponsored far stronger legislation giving power than this legislation. I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I sponsored no legislation with knowledge or notice or information that it would be so construed as to set up regulations to limit and reduce the right of citizenship in this country. If I did, I did not know it, and I regret it.

Mr. HATCH. That has been done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know it has been done by regulation of some sort. I found that out.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LUNDEEN. When the Senator referred to "the Senator from Minnesota," he was not referring to the junior Senator?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I said I was referring to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. President, that is one of the features of the pending legislation which is disturbing to me. I have frequently stated on and off the floor of the Senate that I have no sort of objection to any possible limitation that is intended to and will preserve and prevent and punish coercion, intimidation, and suppression of the rights of employees and subordinates of the Government. Wherever such a thing raises its head anywhere, I want to see it knocked down, and the Senator from New Mexico is entitled to very great credit for covering that phase of the unfortunate things which have happened in a number of States with reference to Federal employment. But when he concluded his splendid effort to abolish and prevent coercion and intimidation, he took a step further, to bring under the law the activities of those who had been coerced and intimidated, so that while not yet coerced and intimidated, still they could not engage in that degree and quality of citizenship in which workers for other employers in this country have the right to engage. That is where I stop, because I fear the trend of that sort of legislation.

There is no situation in my home State which brings me to the acceptance of these views. We have no machine there; we have no personal machine, no party machine. Our controversies are settled in the open. So, in effect, so far as personal and political helpfulness or injury in concerned, this plan to intimidate and put a limitation upon the rank and file of Federal workers raises no question of personal, political, or selfish interests, but merely raises the great, dominant question of whether or not we should with liberality, without definitions and restrictions, prevent workers everywhere, not as applied to those under the civil service only, and not confined to those who have a life tenure to office, not confined to Federal career workers, not confined to workers who have the benefit of security in their old age under retirement funds. In addition to those under the civil service, we are asked to bring under the law employees who may be under it this month, because they are working on a road project in which the Government has participated, getting off W. P. A. the next month and working on another project. One month they may be under the law, the next month they may not be under the law, and so it goes; they are in and out.

When we say a man must not engage in any political activity, what do we mean? I have asked the Senator from New Mexico, the author of the bill. He says the Civil Service Commission has ruled on that, and that the courts have ruled on it. I submit this suggestion now in no captious way, if it has been made clear by the courts and is already fixed in the law, why is it not written into the proposed law?

We all know civil-service rules and decisions are not available to the public in general. We know that the decisions of the courts upon these questions are not available to the public. I think there are very few decisions as to what constitutes engaging in a political activity, but whatever few there may be are not known to the public at large.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I call the Senator's attention to a publication issued by the Civil Service Commission entitled "Political Activities and Political Assessments of Federal Officeholders and Employees." On page 2, paragraph 2 starts out with this sentence:

It is impossible to give a complete list of the particular activities in which an employee may not engage.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. MINTON. The Civil Service Commission itself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not know they had said that, but I knew there was some good reason why the sponsors of this bill would not undertake to put such a provision in the bill.

Mr. MINTON. The Civil Service Commission admits that it is an impossible task for them; yet we are asked to give them the authority to do it piecemeal in such a manner as they may see fit to adopt from time to time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I submit to the deliberate judgment of the Members of the Senate that they waive their partisanship in this matter. It is a subject of serious concern. There is a declaration that the workers cannot engage in any political activity, and we are unable to get a definition to put into the law, or rules as to what specific things are prohibited. No one knows. The Senator from New Mexico may know. He knows more about it than anyone else, because he has studied it more diligently than anyone else and has studied it honestly and sincerely. I would not impugn his motives. I would walk out of the door of the Senate before I would do that. But here is a positive statement from the Civil Service Commission itself, the very body which is picked by the sponsors of the proposed legislation, which has ruled, which has made it a matter of common knowledge which ought to be known to every street worker in this country. We are presumed to know the law. It is the conclusive presumption that every man and woman knows the law.

What constitutes political activity? Who can tell me? Who can cover the field? Some activities in connection with politics, it may be said, do not constitute political activities. If they are flagrantly offensive, it may be said that they are pernicious political activities. But there is a great border line between the two which would, in fact, doubtless cover the great masses of plain, honest working people of this country who draw some compensation from the Government.

Suppose a man makes a mistake about it. Suppose a road worker getting some pay from the Government meets on the roadside a neighbor who is interested in a campaign for the election of a member of the legislature, or a member of the school board. Suppose they have a heated argument about the election. Perhaps community meetings are held for discussion of the issues, and this poor truth-seeking worker drifts into the meeting, or slips up sufficiently close to listen at the window or the door to the argument, and someone reports him to a political boss who is on the other side of the party fence, and he is convicted under section 9. What happens to him?

I call attention now to a matter which I have not heard discussed on the floor of the Senate, although it may have been referred to. Whenever a man is dismissed by a boss, what is the extent of his punishment under section 9? It is a life sentence, so far as his thereafter ever working in the same type of position, where Government money is involved, is concerned. It is as bad as kidnaping.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. This afternoon I discovered the same thing that the Senator is now talking about. It is the last provision in section 9 of the act. If a man is ever discharged from a Federal position under section 9 of the Hatch Act, he is forever barred from being employed in any Government job where he is paid from a Government appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is, as I said, a total life sentence.

Mr. MINTON. A life sentence.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is really a death sentence, so to speak. No pardoning board exists.

Mr. MINTON. And that provision is contained in the act which is now in effect.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I am aware of that fact. No provision is made for suspension of any sort in the rules. No appeal of any kind is provided for. Yet some persons think that because some Senators voted to repeal that section we advocate impure elections.

Mr. President, there are two kinds of punishment contained in the act and also in the bill. There is the punishment for life. No one will argue differently.

Mr. HATCH. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator disputes that?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am astonished. I will read the provision and let others decide for themselves.

Section 9, subdivision (b):

Any person violating the provisions of this section—

That is section 9—

shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him.

By whom? It does not say, but I presume by the boss.

And thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator that some of the departments have construed that in exactly the opposite manner from the way the Senator has construed it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the Senator, What departments?

Mr. HATCH. They have pointed it out as being one of the weaknesses of the measure; that if the person is merely removed the law is complied with, and he can be rehired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What department has so construed the language?

Mr. HATCH. I shall discuss that tomorrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It needs discussion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator desire to continue his discussion now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should prefer to wait until tomorrow. I have not come to the chief part of my argument concerning "boodle and money bags."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of sundry persons for appointment and several officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minminutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 12, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we praise Thee that in the upper spiritual world the billowing tides of love and mercy are ever flowing from the infinite breast of the Almighty One. We earnestly pray Thee that they may enrich every faculty, unify all worthy purposes, harmonize all true and sincere workers, sweeten the speech of all tongues, and transfigure all hopes. Thy masterpiece, O God, is a human creature of thought, of vision, and of character all compact. We thank Thee for Thy holy word, which embodies the true ideal for all: "Thus saith the Lord, let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, for I am the Lord which exerciseth loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth, for in these things I delight, saith the Lord." In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8319) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION—HON. ROBERT K. GOODWIN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN) laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

MARCH 12, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. ROBERT K. GOODWIN as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress from the Sixth Congressional District of Iowa, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Cassius C. Dowell, is on file in this office.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair will administer the oath of office to the Member-elect if there is no objection.

There being no objection, Hon. ROBERT K. GOODWIN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

THE LATE HONORABLE ARTHUR W. ALESHIRE

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce the death of my predecessor, Hon. Arthur W. Aleshire, of Springfield, Ohio, who served the Seventh Ohio District in the Seventy-fifth Congress ably and well.

Many of you who are here knew him and appreciated his fine character and the gentleman he was. He has been ill during the past few months, but it was thought he would recover from that illness. He was seemingly on the way back to health when death came yesterday evening, March 11, at 8 o'clock.

It has been my pleasure and my privilege to know Mr. Aleshire well. While we were opponents in a political campaign, we were good friends. He was a gentleman and a patriotic American in every sense of the word, and I know this House joins with me in mourning his passing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD the Washington's Birthday exercises of the Rainbow Division of veterans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD an address made by me on preserving American neutrality.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RULES AND MANUAL OF THE HOUSE, SEVENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably (Rept. No. 1749) the resolution, House Resolution 379, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 379

Resolved, That a revised edition of the Rules and Manual of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-seventh Congress be printed as a House document, and that 1,600 additional copies shall be printed and bound for the use of the House of Representatives, of which 700 copies shall be bound in leather with thumb index and delivered as may be directed by the Parliamentarian of the House for distribution to officers and Members of Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

NATIONAL ELECTRIC RATE BOOK

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably (Rept. No. 1750) the resolution, House Resolution 414, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 414

Resolved, That the National Electric Rate Book as of January 1, 1940, published by the Federal Power Commission, be printed as a House document; and that 350 additional copies thereof be printed for the use of the House document room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. Gladly.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the Members that this request comes from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who is so diligent in trying to see that the electric rates of the country be published.

After consideration by the members of the committee and taking the matter up with the Federal Power Commission, we decided that if the people of this country wanted the publication of these rates, it might be well to let them have them, to see whether the gentleman from Mississippi can do what he says he is going to do. Nobody wants to prohibit him from doing that, but the fact that these rates in 3 months will all be superseded by new rates, which they are issuing from time to time because of the fact that all utilities are decreasing their power rates because they are able to generate power cheaper, are able to manufacture power at a lesser rate, makes this publication seem unnecessary. These companies are producing cheaper, and therefore they will do like the Potomac Electric Power Co., they will pass those savings on to the public.

Now, what this rate book will do I do not know, but we are willing to take a chance on it. It is going to cost $3,500. I think it is worth while spending the money to see whether it will do any good.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield just for a minute.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that I agree with him thoroughly that when we publish this book some of these rates as published are going to soon be out of date because they will be reduced at once. We are going to put these books in your hands and in the hands of interested people over the country. Then every power company in the United States that is charging exorbitant rates will reduce rates just as soon as this light is turned on. That is what will make these tables obsolete. This will cost very little, but it will probably mean hundreds of millions of dollars in savings to the power consumers of this Nation before the end of the year and every other year from now on. It gives the rates charged in every community in every State. We are publishing these books so that rates can be compared with rates as published by the companies in every community in America. It is a deadly parallel, and will be worth its weight in gold—yes; in diamonds—to the electric consumers of this country.

It will be the first publication of its kind ever issued, showing the rates charged for electricity in every locality throughout the whole country.

As I said, it will be worth its weight in diamonds to the overburdened electric light and power consumers of this Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Kentucky, then I cannot yield further.

Mr. MAY. At regular intervals I receive copies of documents printed by the Federal Power Commission setting out every one of these rates by States in groups. I am just wondering why it is necessary to have that information printed again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF SENATE REPORT 1182

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report favorably a privileged resolution (Report No. 1751) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 38

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of each part and subsequent parts of Senate Report No. 1182, submitted pursuant to Senate Resolution 71 (74th Cong.), entitled "Investigation of Railroads, Holding Companies, and Affiliated Companies," of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, 500 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and 500 copies for the use of the House document room.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN, Mr. BENDER, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. SUTPHIN, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein an excellent editorial from the Tuscaloosa News pertinent to the question of votes for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein a short telegram.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks on the floor February 20, 1940, when the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was under discussion, I stated that—

The rate of duty on imports of manganese, except from Cuba, which enter free by previous arrangement, is still over 50 percent ad valorem.

This figure was obtained by me from the State Department. I have since learned upon investigation that this figure is incorrect and my conclusions predicated upon this statement are therefore also incorrect. Manganese does not now enjoy a 50-percent ad valorem duty or even near a 50-percent duty. Therefore, I desire to correct my former statement.

It appears that the State Department was not fully informed regarding the domestic manganese situation; the rate of duty now enjoyed and the injury which domestic manganese producers have suffered under the trade-agreements program.

It is to be conceded that mistakes will be made in the administration of the trade-agreements program. It is also to be understood that the State Department will correct any mistakes which may appear in evidence or iron out any injustices which may develop in the negotiation or operation of the agreements.

Manganese is the No. 1 strategic mineral essential to our national defense. In view of the troubled conditions of the world and our dependency, in a large measure, upon Russia for the major portion of our supply of manganese, it seems essential that we do whatever may be necessary to stimulate further development of our own domestic manganese resources.

On account of national defense and employment, I am firmly convinced that the duty on manganese should be restored as early as possible.

I am therefore asking the State Department to reconsider the facts in the manganese situation.

In order that information regarding manganese in Arkansas may be made available, I submit for the RECORD statements from manganese producers of my State.

BATESVILLE, ARK., February 23, 1940.

Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS, M. C.:

Your speech February 20 regarding 50 percent ad valorem duty on manganese a mistake according to bids received by United States Government this week, present duty less than 20 percent ad valorem. We fear that trade agreements will block the erection of beneficent plant and other investments of approximately $2,000,000 in Independence County.

BATESVILLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
ROBT. ELLA CASE, Secretary.

CUSHMAN, ARK., February 26, 1940.

Mr. WILBUR D. MILLS,
Congressman from Arkansas,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: * * * According to bids received by the Government for stock pile of manganese ore as a strategic mineral, the cheapest price from any point within the United States of America was 60 cents per unit, which would be $30 per dry ton of 50-percent ore. Fifty percent ad valorem would have to be over $15 duty.

The present duty amounts to only $5.60 per dry ton on 50-percent manganese ore. This $5.60 was arrived at in this way. The duty on manganese ore which was one-half cent per pound on 50-percent ore which equaled $11.20 per ton and which under the trade agreement with Brazil was reduced one-half, leaving the duty on manganese $5.60 per ton on 50-percent ore.

As ever your friend,

WALTER H. DENISON MANG.
& CONT. CO., INC.
By J. REED DENISON.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the St. Louis Star-Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the question of the St. Lawrence seaway project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table from the Department of Agriculture and an article from the Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Star-Courier of Kewanee, Ill., of March 6 entitled "Crop Control Beneficiaries."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOMESTEAD LIENS TO BE PROHIBITED

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of the bill H. R. 8857 and a letter from N. W. Sawyer, of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced H. R. 8857, which reads as follows:

A bill to amend the Social Security Act wherein repayment may be required for recipients of old-age assistance and to prevent requiring the same or so-called homestead liens

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (7) of section 2 (a) of title I of the Social Security Act (Public, No. 271, 74th Cong.) is amended to read as follows: "(7) that, if the State or any of its political subdivisions accepts or receives any amount with respect to old-age assistance under this plan, it shall not require repayment thereof from any recipient of old-age assistance nor from the estate of any recipient nor shall it place any homestead lien against the same. The contribution from the Treasury under this plan with respect to old-age assistance is to be accepted by the State or any of its political subdivisions in lieu of requiring any repayment by the recipient thereof. Should any recipient voluntarily reimburse a State or any of its political subdivisions for old-age assistance extended under this plan, a proportionate share of the net amount so received shall be promptly paid to the United States."

If this bill becomes law it will prevent the various States now having so-called homestead lien laws from collecting Federal pension funds paid to aged people by taking over their homesteads.

Recently, in order to ascertain the sentiment in Minnesota, I sent out several thousand questionnaires on this subject. These pamphlets read as follows:

QUESTIONNAIRE

I am sending you this questionnaire to get the opinion of those people that are most concerned with a national pension act. Most Congressmen are opposed to a pension plan of $200 a month. I have been informed that 200 Congressmen are opposed to the $200 per month plan. The late Senator Borah once stated that a $50 to $60 national pension law, with no State connections would go through easily. As there are a number of plans that are being advanced I would appreciate getting the opinion of the voters on the following questions:

1. Do you favor a national pension law with no State connections?
2. Do you receive a smaller amount than the relief client?
3. Have you been threatened with removal from the eligible list if you protested about the way your case has been handled?
4. Do you have children that are able to support you and refuse to do so?
5. At what age do you think that pension benefits should begin?
6. What amount of money do you think would be an adequate pension?
7. Are you asked to pay the taxes on the homestead out of your pension?
8. Will your children be able to pay off the lien on your homestead?
9. How do you think a pension law should be financed, by a sales tax, a transaction tax, or an income tax?

Large numbers of these questionnaires have been filled out and returned, and the tabulations indicate the following:

1. In answering, nearly all expressed themselves in favor of a national law with no State connections.

2. All stated that they received a smaller amount than the relief clients.

3. All of those that answered No. 3 stated that they were threatened with removal if they protested about the way their case was handled. Some had been reduced twice for this reason.

4. Only one stated that they had children that could support them and refused to do so.

5. All stated that $60 a month was an adequate pension.

6. All stated that pensions should begin at 60 years.

7. All stated that they were asked to pay their taxes out of their allowance.

8. All but one stated that their children would not be able to pay off the lien on the homestead.

9. All stated that a national pension law should be financed by an income or sales tax.

Several hundred personal notes and letters have accompanied these replies. A good representative letter from among these is the following from N. W. Sawyer, a member of the State legislature, who writes:

I, N. W. Sawyer, representative from the fifty-second district of Minnesota, feel that it is only sensible to pay the aged an amount that will allow them to retire from competitive labor. The system that we have is a disgrace to any civilization. They are not paid half as much as young people on relief, and then compelled to give a lien on anything they may own, and swear that they, and all their people are paupers. The farmers receive their A. A. A. checks and all other reliefers without any liens. Why discriminate against the aged who have borne the burdens for the past 50 years? Under our present system the very States and counties where aid is most needed, local communities are unable to pay. Social security does not affect 1 percent of the people in Cass County hence it is out of the picture, and besides it takes good care of the men and women who have good jobs, meager care of those in the low salary brackets and gives nothing to the ones worst off who have no jobs. It disregards all the housewives of America as well as the widows of the ones who work.

I like the gross income phase of the present Townsend bill much better than the tax plan of the bill presented at the last Congress and for which five of our nine Minnesota Congressmen voted. I like the exemption clause but feel that it might have been reduced considerably. Not that a $3,000 standard per family income should be considered exorbitant but it is far above the present average family income. I consider that the words of Lincoln—"this Nation cannot long exist half slave and half free"—have more meaning and concern today than they did when he first spoke them.

Pleased to learn that you are interested in taking care of the aged of our land and trust that you may find enough other Congressmen that feel the same way. If you ask me, the treatment that our elders have received during the present depression is the worst stigma of disgrace that one can find on the pages of American history.

Of all the thirty million on relief, from the farmers with their A. A. A. checks, which in many cases amount to thousands of dollars that are not needed by the ones that receive them, to the W. P. A. checks, which are a disgrace to our civilization, to the direct relief which compels the recipients to live in hovels that are not fit for the dens of wild beasts, to say nothing of their scanty bill of fare that can be obtained on $10 to $20 per month and in many cases lesser amounts, not one individual except our elders are asked to give a lien and they receive the least amount of all our dependent citizens. I know of one man that receives $18,000, that owns 4,000 acres of Iowa land free from incumbrance, also owns 90 percent of all the stock in the bank of his local city and is its president as well, has only himself and wife to care for, yet he does not have to take a pauper's oath nor give a lien. Neither do the judges nor the thousands of retired State and Government employees who are quite amply cared for.

At this point I would like to insert some additional figures about the A. A. A.

It is not alone the little fellow who has benefited from soil-conservation payments, as is shown by a report made to Congress by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for 1937. Over 20,000 farmers and corporations received soil-conservation payments of a thousand dollars or more. Most of these big payments went to insurance companies and banks, which in recent years have acquired large land holdings under foreclosure proceedings. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. leads off with checks totaling $257,095; the Prudential Insurance Co. of America, $231,158; the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, $206,962; Travelers Insurance Co. of Connecticut, $211,521; Union Central Life Insurance Co. of Ohio, $166,280; Mutual Benefit Insurance Co. of New Jersey, $161,100; Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Wisconsin, $156,444; John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Massachusetts, $147,647; Federal Land Bank of Omaha, Nebr., $134,139; the King Ranch of Texas, $122,140; and the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, Minn., $103,925.

The letter continues:

I am for a decent pension, say from $60 to $100, with a compulsory spending clause. The Townsend bill that has been introduced will not provide any more than $50 or $60, nor would the bill that was in the last Congress. There would be no reason for more than this amount, providing that it would put into circulation enough money to give jobs to our youth, who are the saddest pressed group of our society at the present time. Three things are needed to produce wealth—land, labor, and capital. We have them all in abundance. Let's put them together.

J. Edgar Hoover's crime report for last year shows that we paid $15,000,000,000 to prosecute criminals, an increase of 300 percent in 10 years, to say nothing of our un-American activities that are springing up on every hand and that will, if not checked, soon destroy our cherished civilization.

Yours truly,

N. W. SAWYER.

It is very evident, from the facts related above and from the replies to my questionnaire, that the homestead lien law is not only unpopular but that it has no justification in law or in practice, and I hope the Members of the Congress will cooperate in passing the bill I have introduced, H. R. 8857.

AMENDMENT OF THE WAGE-HOUR LAW

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, during the past few weeks I have received many letters from the State of Illinois regarding amendments to the wage and hour law. Recently I received a letter from the Whiteside Sentinel, a triweekly newspaper of Morrison, Ill., urging me to use every effort to include in exemptions semiweeklies and triweeklies, which have a circulation of less than 3,000 copies, the major portion of which is distributed within the county of publication. In my opinion this is a fair request, and it is my hope that the House of Representatives will see fit to so exempt semiweeklies and triweeklies along with weekly publications. In support I wish to include an opinion of the counsel of the American Newspaper Association on the subject, which was sent to me by Mr. Charles Bent, Jr., editor of the Whiteside Sentinel:

WAGE-HOUR OPINION

Counsel of the American Newspaper Publishers Association has issued the following opinion on the application of the Wage and Hour Act (Bulletin No. 4411, A. N. P. A., special standing committee):

"It is the opinion of counsel that a newspaper which does not send any of its copies out of the State for sale is wholly exempt insofar as the application of any of the provisions of the act to any of its employees is concerned.

"It is the further opinion of counsel that the action of Congress in exempting weeklies and semiweeklies which have a circulation of less than 3,000 copies, the major portion of which is distributed within the county of publication, was discriminatory in effect as between various members of the press, all of which, under the provisions of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, must be treated upon identically equal terms.

"Congress has no power to classify the press for purposes of regulation."

WAGE AND HOUR AMENDMENT INTRODUCED

An amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act which affects the publishers of Illinois newspapers has been introduced at the present session of Congress.

This amendment repeals the present exemption in the act in favor of weekly newspapers of 3,000 circulation or less, and substitutes the following:

" * * * or (8) any employee employed in connection with the publication of any newspaper with a circulation of less than 5,000."

The proposed amendment would exempt the small dailies from the application of the Federal Wage and Hour Act. No action has as yet been taken by Congress on the proposed amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks an article with regard to the wage-hour law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by the president of the Farmers Union of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads may have permission to sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 390, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 390

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 8026, a bill to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "six" and insert the word "three."

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, of the hour's time at my disposal, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes to make in order the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8026) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs with certain recommendations, and the purposes of the bill, Mr. Speaker, are to revise the defense requirements of the Nation made necessary by the international situation that developed in 1939 and as now exists.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] use some of his time?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, my only hope is that the House will consider this huge Navy appropriation bill very carefully and ascertain whether it is necessary to spend $650,000,000 as provided in this bill when we are cutting down on farm relief and other forms of relief throughout the country. We are in the midst of war hysteria, and fear, and dread of war. Propaganda covers the country. The other day a British ship, the Southgate, was reported as having been torpedoed off Puerto Rico, and it was finally discovered by our airplanes that it had not even been attacked by a submarine; that no American submarines were within 200 miles of it, and no German submarines probably within a thousand miles. The day before the repeal of the arms embargo the papers announced the sinking of the British steamer Coolmore, and it was later ascertained that that ship arrived safely at a British port. If this hysteria and war propaganda continues we shall soon be hearing reports of submarines flying over our coastal cities.

If you were to believe one-half of the propaganda that is being spread throughout America you would come to the conclusion that the United States is defenseless; that we are in the same category as Poland, Czechoslovakia, Abyssinia, or China, subject to being attacked and destroyed by some foreign foe. At the very outset of my remarks I challenge any Member of the House to state what nation or nations has the faintest thought of attacking the United States of America. I challenge any Member of the House to state what nation or nations could attack the United States of America even if they wanted to. The fact is that we have the greatest Navy today in the history of America, a navy second to none; yet we are appropriating $650,000,000 more to build up an even greater navy. We are adding three airplane carriers at a cost of $141,000,000.

Now, generally speaking, I have always favored adequate national defense—and I still do—the protection of our own shores, upholding the Monroe Doctrine, and the protection of our commerce on the high seas, and I think the American people want this policy continued.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman recognize the necessity for the strengthening of our national defense, and is he not, as a matter of fact, in favor of the adoption of the pending bill?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has asked me a very fair question. There is no minority report filed with this bill and, there being no minority report, evidently this bill is reported unanimously by the committee. However, I want the committee to prove the necessity for certain items. All of us are in favor of what we call adequate national defense.

Mr. COX. The gentleman knows as much about this whole problem as any other man in the House. He has been a student of this subject. Does he not feel the question already propounded recognizes the existence of the necessity for the strengthening of our national defense?

Mr. FISH. I may say to the gentleman that I am not convinced that we need three additional airplane carriers. I do not say I am opposed to the bill. I want to hear it debated. I am opposed to the particular item in the bill having to do with three additional airplane carriers at the present time.

Mr. COX. Just one further question. The gentleman is not opposing the adoption of this rule?

Mr. FISH. No; not at all.

Mr. COX. He is speaking on the merits of the bill?

Mr. FISH. I would like to hear from the proponents of the bill with reference to the necessity for these three airplane carriers. However, I have to give my views in the beginning when there is no minority report and say that from what I can learn there is no necessity whatever for any of these three additional airplane carriers, involving an expense of $47,000,000 apiece. We have five airplane carriers and we have authorized the building of two more. One is about to be launched.

I propose to place the facts before you so you can determine for yourselves whether those of you representing the farm States want to cut out parity payments to the extent of $200,000,000 and vote for three airplane carriers that I do not believe we need.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is there any real demand or emergency or danger to this country of which the gentleman knows by reason of which we should increase the Navy to the extent we have authorized last year and this year?

Mr. FISH. I would say absolutely and emphatically "No," but I am in the minority. The committee thinks otherwise. I say absolutely "No," and I am going to speak on that point.

Mr. RICH. Is our Nation made secure by our building a great Navy and a large Army if our financial structure becomes weak?

Mr. FISH. I believe our Navy today makes this country completely secure from attack by any one nation or combination of nations, and I am willing to go ahead and prove it.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. I want to keep the record straight. I believe the gentleman unintentionally referred to this bill as an appropriation bill. This is an authorization.

Mr. FISH. It is an authorization bill; yes.

No one can deny these simple facts: Already we have the greatest Navy in the history of America—a Navy equal for the first time to the British Navy, a Navy three and one-half times larger than the German Navy, twice as large as the Italian Navy, and 50 percent larger than the Japanese Navy. Every American admiral who has testified says that if a foreign navy—the Japanese Navy, for instance—wants to attack the United States, it must be three times as large as ours. This applies to the German Navy or any other navy. They have also said that a modern fleet loses 20 percent of its efficiency every thousand miles it gets away from its coast.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I believe the gentleman unintentionally has misquoted the admiral. The admiral did not say that if we wanted to attack Japan we would have to have a navy three times as large as Japan, or that if Japan wanted to attack us it would have to have a navy three times as large as ours. What he said was that if we undertook to attack Japan our Navy would have to be three times as large as it is at present.

Mr. FISH. Our Navy now is 50 percent larger than Japan's Navy. The gentleman says our Navy would have to be three times larger than it is now to attack Japan. Of course, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Therefore Japan, to attack us, would have to have a navy three times as large as ours.

Now let me proceed to the question of airplane carriers. We have 2,200 airplanes already built by the Navy. We have authorized 3,000. This bill increases the authorization to 4,500. In the Army we already have 2,600 airplanes built and have authorized and are building up 5,500, out of a maximum authorization of 6,000. If we sank our Navy, the whole Navy, the greatest navy in the world, and all the totalitarian states combined and we had no Navy to protect our shores and they brought all their airplane carriers over here with them, I figure the maximum number of airplanes they could bring over would be 500 to attack America. Between the Army and the Navy we already have 5,000 airplanes. If our 5,000 American airplanes cannot defeat 500 foreign airplanes based on ships, we had better give up, anyhow. But that is not half the story. When we have built what have already been authorized and appropriated for we will have 8,500 airplanes, and even if we had no Navy the totalitarian nations could not bring over more than 500 airplanes against us.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. I simply wish to inquire to what nations the gentleman refers when he speaks of the totalitarian nations.

Mr. FISH. I have included all of them this time. I have included Japan, Italy, Germany, and Russia. Assuming they have 10 or 11 airplane carriers, and estimating 50 airplanes apiece as the capacity of the carriers, that makes 500 planes. For the sake of information I would point out that Italy has no airplane carriers and is not building any airplane carriers. We already have five built and are building two more. One was launched just the other day. Italy has none; Germany has none, and is building two; Russia has one very small one of no consequence, of 9,000 tons, and is building two; and Japan has six and is building two. The total tonnage of Japan, built and building, is far less than ours.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Is there not a very obvious reason for the failure of Germany and Italy and nations of that kind to build airplane carriers? Their field of operation is very limited, in the North Sea and the Mediterranean Sea; but the navies which operate, like ours, all over the globe, are building airplane carriers at least as fast as we are.

Mr. FISH. I believe Great Britain is building airplane carriers, but I imagine that is for the present war and for present war purposes.

Mr. MOTT. And so is Japan.

By the way, if the gentleman will yield further, I wish to correct the statement I made a moment ago. I see that I misquoted the admiral. He did not say we would have to have a Navy three times as large as our present Navy in order to attack Japan successfully; he said that to attack Japan successfully he would have to ask for three times the increase he was then asking for when he appeared before the committee. I want to get that straight in the RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 more minutes.

There are two proposals in this bill about which I am concerned, first, the item of building 3 more airplane carriers, which I do not think we need; and, second, increasing the number of airplanes from 3,000 to 4,500. If we increase the number of Navy airplanes we will have, with the Army airplanes, 10,000, if we carry out the present program, without this increase of another 1,500. Just how we can use more than 2,000 airplanes in America I do not understand. Major Eliot, who is supposed to be a great expert, has said that all we need is 1,000 combat airplanes. We have already provided for 8,500 and now we are asking for about 1,500 more. If we are to be attacked, certainly, they have got to bring these airplanes over with them and they can only bring 500, while we will soon have 8,500 ourselves, and I do not know whom they are going to be used against. First, I do not know who is going to attack us, and, second, I know they cannot bring over more than 500 airplanes, and I have not the faintest idea whom our numerous airplanes are going to be used against, unless they are to be used against the Republican Party. [Laughter.] They have got to find somebody to use them against.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. What are you going to do with these 10 big battleships they are building that will cost anywhere from $90,000,000 to $116,000,000 apiece?

Mr. FISH. I do not want to go into that as it is not in the bill, because it is hard enough to stand before the House and oppose a full committee report. Not a single member of the minority, so far as I know, has questioned this item. I am alone in saying that I am absolutely convinced they do not need one additional airplane carrier and have not the slightest need for it. We will have seven and I do not even know whether we need seven to protect our shores. If we are going over to other nations then we will need, not 7 or 3 more, but we will probably need 30 more. If the idea is not national defense but aggression and offense to carry a war to foreign lands—to Japan or Germany or Russia or Italy—we will probably need 30 airplane carriers, but for defensive purposes I think we have sufficient airplane carriers, and if the gentlemen of this House want to economize without interfering with national defense here is one way to do it—not to appropriate this $47,000,000 apiece for 3 more airplane carriers, which you do not need, but strike the item out of the bill.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. IZAC. I wonder if the gentleman is taking into consideration the fact that when other nations are at war, those nations build up a tremendous national defense of their own and in self-defense we have to do the same thing. In other words, if we take, for instance, the condition of the American Army at the end of the Civil War, it was a threat to other nations. Therefore, in self-defense we have to continue to build when these other nations which are at war, we know are going ahead of us in their national-defense set-up. Does not the gentleman realize that if we are going to keep faith with our people we do have to also build up our national defense?

Mr. FISH. I cannot subscribe to any such argument that we have to have a Navy practically equal to all the navies of the world or that we have to have as many airplane carriers as all the other nations combined or even of all the totalitarian nations. Our own admirals tell us that if we are to be attacked by a foreign navy, it must be three times as large as ours and yet we seem to have the idea that we must build up a Navy that equals all other navies and that we must have as many airplane carriers as all the dictator nations combined.

The President stated today in the press that we will have to have increased taxes if we do not stop appropriating more money from the Treasury.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. How does the airplane equipment of this country compare with other countries?

Mr. FISH. Our airplanes are probably the best in the world. That is why they come over here and buy them.

Mr. DONDERO. I mean in number.

Mr. FISH. Oh, we will have under present authorizations 8,500 airplanes.

Mr. DONDERO. How does that compare with Great Britain or any of the other powers of the world?

Mr. FISH. We have not as many as England, France, or Germany, but they cannot bring them over here, and I challenge anybody to deny that statement. No airplane has ever been invented that can come over and bomb New York and go back to its base in Germany or in Italy. They have more airplanes than we have, but we have a great output now and they are still buying our airplanes and increasing our production. We can produce them within 6 months, and the best type of airplanes. We do not have to worry about that at all. What we are worrying about now is how many airplanes they can bring over to use against us. I submit that they cannot bring over more than 500 to fight against us, even if we did not have a Navy, and we will have under construction, authorized, and built 8,500. The Navy now wants 1,500 more, and 3 more airplane carriers. I suppose they want the airplane carriers to put the airplanes on and take them around the world, because they have nothing to do with them.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. COLE of New York. I am simply interested in learning the name of any admiral who said that an opposing force would have to be three times as large as ours.

Mr. FISH. I understand that is what was testified to before your committee.

Mr. COLE of New York. I do not think he did.

Mr. FISH. It has just been admitted, as I understand it.

Mr. COLE of New York. May I clear that up?

Mr. FISH. Certainly; go ahead.

Mr. COLE of New York. I want to state just what the admiral did say. At the time the admiral made the statement the committee had before it a proposal to increase the size of our then Navy by 20 percent. The admiral said that for him to have a force large enough to successfully carry on a campaign against Japan he would have to have an increase three times the size of the increase he was then asking for.

Mr. FISH. And at that time, let me say, that he was asking for the greatest navy in the history of the world. That is what he was asking for, and that is exactly what we have today—a navy, for the first time, equal to if not greater than the navy of Great Britain. That is what he was asking for, and that is what he got; and now he wants a three times greater Navy than the Navy we have.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is it a fact, as the papers state, that we have now turned over our fastest ships to England and France?

Mr. FISH. Our best airplanes, certainly.

Mr. THORKELSON. That can go 400 miles an hour?

Mr. FISH. Certainly; the best that we produce.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What is the use of spending so many millions of dollars from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury to provide airplanes for our own national defense, when we have an administration which gives secret information about them to a potential foreign enemy? The American people might awaken from indifference and demand that action be taken with reference to the hijacking of cargoes on our United States flagships, the robbing of our mails, and hauling down the Stars and Stripes before the Union Jack of Great Britain and the Tricolor of France. Why should we continue to talk about being in favor of national defense, when we furnish potential enemy foreign countries with information with reference to our latest implements of defense?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is correct and has answered his own question. There are reasons why we should have airplane carriers and why we should have more than these three and even a greater navy than we have, which excels any navy in the world today, and that is, if you follow the advice of Admiral Yarnell. He is the head of some kind of an anti-Japanese organization that seems determined on getting us into war with Japan. He wants economic embargoes and economic sanctions, and the stopping of trade with Japan. What does that mean? It means just one thing. It means war. In the first place, if we slap on an embargo and economic sanctions against Japan, it means that we drive Japan right into the arms of Soviet Russia, right into the arms of Nazi Germany and of Fascist Italy.

The very minute that we place sanctions on Japan and economic embargoes and refuse to trade with Japan, Japan will declare war on China and she will blockade every port in China, and she will blockade the Burmese port of entry, and not one ounce of war material that we are sending to China can get there. In addition, we would force Japan into a military and naval alliance with Soviet Russia and with Nazi Germany. If you want to follow Admiral Yarnell, 3 airplane carriers are not enough. We ought to have 30 airplane carriers if we are going out looking for war. My only interest in national defense is for preparedness that will defend our own shores against any attack. I am not looking for war in foreign lands either in Europe or Asia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FISH. How much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 25 minutes, and has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. FISH. Very well; I shall take the balance. Mr. Speaker, I am just submitting these facts to the House. I do not like to stand alone and lead this fight, and I do not claim that I know more than the whole committee. I may be out of step, but I want the Members of the Congress to listen to this debate and determine for themselves. I do not think these airplane carriers are necessary for adequate defense, but they may be for offense and aggression.

In conclusion, I want to bring up another matter which affects our trade. American merchants, particularly in New York, bought goods in Germany before November 27, 1939, before the British issued their order-in-council of November 27, which said that anyone buying goods or making a contract for goods in Germany before that date can get those goods out, provided they paid for them. Many of our American merchants have paid for those goods—some $15,000,000 worth of those goods, and the British refuse to let them out. Those goods were bought from Germany. They are in Italy; yet the British will not give our merchants permission to bring those goods here, in spite of their own order-in-council of November 27, that permitted German goods that had been paid for in advance to be transported to America.

Our merchants, small merchants in New York, who bought twenty or thirty or forty thousand dollars worth of these goods, cannot get them. They are being bankrupted. This situation has been continuing for the last 3 or 4 months and is getting worse all the time.

In addition to that, I am told—and it may interest some of you cotton people from the South—this complaint does not apply to New York alone; we sell some of the cotton from New York. An exporter sells a bale of American cotton to Finland. He gets permission from the British to send it over there. He sends it for 1 or 2 months, and the third month the British intervene, and they do not give our exporter any permission to sell that cotton. Then they send one of their own salesmen to Finland, and they say, "You cannot get any more cotton from the United States. We will sell you practically the same kind of cotton, or just as good Egyptian cotton, at the same price."

That is what has been going on. They have control of the seas. Not satisfied with using it for war purposes in defense of their own trade, they are monopolizing the trade of the world and they are destroying the cotton markets of the South and replacing them with Egyptian cotton.

I am introducing this resolution, which is too long to read, a resolution of inquiry to the State Department—to ascertain the facts. But I have been getting letters from merchants in New York, protesting that they have complied with the orders-in-council and cannot get the goods that they have already bought and paid for and that they are losing this legitimate trade because the English have all the memoranda and all the data, and they go and sell some other kind of cotton to those foreign nations in place of our southern cotton. We are entitled to have those facts. I do not know to what committee this resolution will be referred, but I hope it will be reported out and that we can get the facts and determine what action to take.

In conclusion, I would like to know why we should increase our air force to 4,500 naval airplanes. How can we use them when dictatorial nations cannot bring more than 500 against us? Furthermore, I would like to know why we must have three additional airplane carriers at $47,000,000 each, and what we are going to do with them when we have more now than Germany, Italy, and Russia combined; yet we ask for three more.

So in the name of economy, let us consider this question carefully and in view of the needs of adequate national defense. If the able chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, one of the ablest Members of this House, can prove to me the need of these three airplane carriers, I will gladly vote for them, because I want national defense, but if he cannot, I hope the House will vote otherwise. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have faith that after the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has heard the debate on this bill he will support it.

I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8026) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8026, with Mr. LEAVY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes a 2-year naval building program of 167,000 tons of combatant ships, or approximately a 11-percent increase in the combatant strength of the Navy.

No battleships are involved in this bill.

It authorizes an increase of 79,500 tons of aircraft carriers, 66,500 tons of cruisers, 21,000 tons of submarines, and 75,000 tons of auxiliary vessels.

It is estimated that this increased tonnage of 167,000 combatant tons will provide for 21 additional ships, at an estimated cost of $372,750,000, to be laid down within 2 years and finished by 1945.

The 75,000 tons of auxiliaries provided for in the bill will be approximately 22 ships at an estimated cost of $183,000,000. The 1,011 airplanes and 4 blimps, at an estimated cost of $99,152,270, making a total cost for the 21 combatant ships, the 22 auxiliaries, and the 1,011 airplanes approximately $654,902,270.

The Navy Department, in presenting the bill to the Naval Affairs Committee, recommended an increase of 25 percent, or an addition of approximately 400,000 tons of combatant ships, which would have cost approximately $1,596,000,000, and which was to be a 5-year building program. This is a reduction of $941,097,730.

The committee, after a month's hearing, reduced the same to an 11-percent increase and a 2-year building program, and unanimously reports the bill to the House.

Under the act of 1934 to bring the Navy up to treaty strength by the replacement of over-age ships, there remains the following tonnages:

	Tons
Cruisers	66,245
Destroyers	50,470
Submarines	12,856

Under the act of 1938, we have used up all the tonnage provided for aircraft carriers and submarines, and there remains the following tonnages:

	Tons
Cruisers	16,754
Destroyers	11,360

This therefore makes a total tonnage that is available under the act of 1934 and the act of 1938 of 157,685 tons in the categories of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines.

It is the program of the Navy Department to lay down that tonnage plus the 167,000 tons provided for in this bill within 2 years, which will make a total building program of 324,685 tons of combatant ships to be laid down within the next 2 years.

The navy yards and industrial yards are in position to handle the program.

An examination of the report on page 5 shows a complete break-down and the requests that will be made on the Budget to carry out this building program as provided for in this bill.

I deem it important at this point to give to you a complete break-down picture of the Navy as it is authorized to be constituted today.

By the act of 1938, the Navy is authorized to have under-age tonnage in the combatant categories as follows:

In battleships, 660,000 tons, which will provide for 18 battleships; in aircraft carriers, 175,000 tons, which will provide for 8 carriers; in cruisers, 412,524 tons, which will provide for about 44 cruisers; in destroyers, 228,000 tons, which will provide for about 139 destroyers; and in submarines, 81,956 tons, which will provide for about 59 submarines.

This makes a total tonnage of 1,557,480 tons, with a grand total of 268 under-age ships. However, the increase of 167,000 tons authorized by this bill would raise the authorized under-age tonnage for the Navy to 1,724,480 tons, making a total of 289 ships.

So the Congress and the country can understand that with this bill enacted into law and with the Navy built up to the authorized strength in under-age tonnage, the Navy will have in combatant types 18 battleships of 660,000 tons; 11 aircraft carriers of 254,500 tons; 48 cruisers of 479,024 tons; 139 destroyers of 228,000 tons; and 73 submarines of 102,956 tons.

On the 1st of this year the Navy had in commission and in service 14 under-age battleships with a total tonnage of 438,200 tons, 5 aircraft carriers with a total tonnage of 120,300 tons, 35 cruisers with a total tonnage of 317,600 tons, 67 destroyers of 104,470 tons, and 32 submarines of 48,500 tons—making a total in commission of under-age ships on January 1, 1940, of 153 ships of 1,029,070 tons.

As I have stated previously, there is no provision for battleships in this bill.

However, including 2 battleships carried in the naval appropriation bill recently passed by this House, the Navy now has 10 battleships building or appropriated for, and with the replacements authorized by the act of 1934, the Navy will continue to have a healthy battleship-building program until about 1949.

As I have stated previously, the over-all increase in combatant tonnage provided by this bill will be approximately 11 percent.

However, let me impress this one fact upon you that this limited expansion will not maintain parity with Great Britain. It is estimated it will fall short of the 5–3 ratio with Japan. It cannot be said, therefore, that this expansion, when built, will be adequate to meet all possible needs, in the Atlantic and the Pacific, should they arise simultaneously in both oceans.

This proposed increase is in fact the minimum that should be considered.

As stated before, the proposed expansion provides for increased authorization for only three of the combatant types, and they are aircraft carriers, cruisers, and submarines.

In the matter of carriers, the 1941 naval appropriation bill provides for the construction of one more carrier. This one carrier will utilize all of the carrier tonnage now authorized by the 1938 act.

It will bring our number of carriers to a total of eight with a tonnage of 175,000. No more carriers can be built without additional authorization, such as contemplated in this bill.

Great Britain has built and is actually building a total of 13 carriers with a tonnage of 258,000. Japan has built and is building a total of 8 carriers, that we know about, and there are probably others that we do not know about.

With a large expanse of ocean to cover in the Pacific and in the Atlantic, additional carriers are urgently needed now. The number contemplated by the bill—three—is to be regarded as a minimum.

The bill provides for an increased authorization of cruiser tonnage of 66,500. The present war has demonstrated—in fact, emphasized—the need for numbers of cruisers, particularly on the part of nations who have to protect large expanses of ocean.

Further, the required expansion in the number of carriers necessitates in itself an increased number of cruisers, as each carrier requires cruiser escort.

The number of cruisers that can and will be built as a result of this increased authorization has not been specifically indicated by the Navy Department.

Shortly after the commencement of the present war all existing naval limitation treaties were abrogated by all of the powers concerned. Until this was done cruiser size was limited for Great Britain and the United States but not for Japan, which was not a party to the treaty.

The committee feels that the proposed increase in authorized cruiser tonnage is highly essential to the Navy Department's plans for future cruiser construction.

Under the tonnage authorized by the act of 1938, there remains 61,830 tons of destroyers that can be laid down now. Because of this unexpended authorization in destroyer tonnage which is all that the Navy can conveniently construct within the next 3 years, and because of the continued availability for some years of the old destroyers which have been maintained in serviceable condition, this bill does not provide for any additional destroyer tonnage.

In the matter of submarines, the United States dropped behind the navies of the world in the construction of new submarines during the early life of the naval limitation treaties. Recently we have been catching up.

The replacement tonnage available under the 1934 act will soon be used up, and the committee feels it necessary that the tonnage for this type of craft should be increased by the 21,000 tons specified in the bill in order to increase the strength of our submarine force by an additional 14 submarines.

The important part to be played by an adequate submarine navy as a deterrent to hostile action against us on the part of other naval powers is obvious.

The proposed increase of 14 submarines is, of course, a very modest number. It is restricted, however, to the number that can be laid down during the next 2 years.

The increased number of aircraft, 1,011, is to provide for the increased number of ships, particularly carriers, and to provide training planes and to provide sufficient seagoing patrol planes to meet needs simultaneously in both oceans. The compelling necessity to continue our present policy of readiness to handle sea jobs with naval aircraft has been demonstrated by the sea operations of European powers during the last 6 months.

For many years the construction of auxiliaries for the Navy was largely neglected. Such funds as could be made available were mostly devoted to the construction of combatant ships and aircraft. Finally the Navy reached a point where the combatant ships in commission were so distinctly handicapped by lack of specially fitted, continuously available auxiliaries that a substantial auxiliary construction program became necessary. Such a program to meet a great many of the more pressing needs was included in the 1938 act.

The auxiliary ship program in this bill is to provide necessary support for the combatant ships and aircraft of the expanded program.

Mr. Chairman, mark my words, had the world conditions remained as they were when the 1938 Expansion Act was passed, it would have been unnecessary for us to come before the Congress with this building program. The existing authorization would have been sufficient.

The international situation has altered substantially. World conditions today forecast a greater menace to our peace than was the case a year ago. The events which have taken place since then are so fresh in the minds of everyone that it is unnecessary to restate them. The situation is rife with possibilities of a general European war and, in conjunction with far eastern conditions, presents a threat of world conflagration.

We must evaluate conditions as they exist in the world today. International alinements are lightning swift. Nations are searching for allies. The exercise of power politics is the rule rather than the exception. The best way to ascertain national policies is to observe national acts. Our first duty is to protect the United States. Our objective is a navy adequate for this purpose. We cannot afford to take chances with a world in arms. Our only course is to depend on no one but ourselves. Our voice in world affairs will be heeded in almost direct proportion to our relative strength on the sea.

In the world of today it seems only a fair and moderate statement to say that the best interests of our Nation will be best served by keeping our own forces sufficiently strong to be an effective deterrent against foreign aggression.

The United States of America is the only major power in the world which has not been at war with some other nation since 1918, and, except for Italy, is the only major power not so engaged today. Since 1932, as everyone knows, the world has become increasingly unstable; Japan has invaded China and possessed herself of a good portion of that country; Italy has taken Ethiopia and Albania; Germany has now the territory formerly occupied by Austria, Czechoslovakia, and part of Poland; Russia has seized the rest of Poland, has to all intents and purposes taken over Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, and is now busily engaged in attacking Finland. Spain is entering a period of reconstruction after being reduced to ruins and drenched with blood by a war promoted by outside interests. The map of Europe changes with lightning rapidity.

Whether we like it or not we are living in an age of conquest. The weaker nation has something desired by the stronger, thus constituting a natural set-up for invasion and today the clouds are beginning to gather over Rumania with her rich oil deposits and soon that little nation may become a prey of stronger nations if she fails to meet their demands.

Unfortunately today the language of Europe is force. Therefore, it is the duty of the United States to be ready to speak the same kind of language if we are ever so unfortunate as to be called upon to do so. In other words we must be ready to meet force with force.

The first question to be decided is to what extent the recent changes in world condition constitute a menace to the safety of this country; the second question is what changes in the Navy are necessary to meet it. The answer to the first question is of necessity indefinite, except that we must take into consideration the worst possible turn of events from our viewpoint, analyze as well as we can the chances of its actually happening, and decide upon the degree of preparedness we need.

The second question is answered by the bill now before the House unanimously reported by the committee.

No doubt the question will be asked during this debate, "Whom are we going to fight?" I answer it by saying that we are not increasing the Navy against any particular nation or group of nations, but we are increasing the Navy to afford this country better protection against aggressive action by any other power.

We are endeavoring to defend the United States against an attack from any direction.

This program is an additional insurance policy for peace for the American people. While it will ultimately cost $654,000,000, what is that sum to insure peace to the men, women, and children of this Nation?

Even with this expenditure, it is cheap insurance, for surely the peace and security of this country is worth more than $654,000,000, and nothing will contribute more to guarantee to the people security and peace than a more adequate defense, as provided for in this bill.

This country must be made impregnable against attack from any direction.

While we are today in a world of war; while there is war in the Atlantic and war in the Pacific, yet, nevertheless, the Naval Affairs Committee has not been stampeded. We have sought to view the needs of the Navy soberly, conscientiously, sanely, and in a common-sense manner.

In conclusion, let me say that while we do not covet one foot of soil of any nation nor do we intend to get entangled in any alien quarrels, yet, nevertheless, it is the duty of Congress to see that our defenses are adequate to meet any aggression. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; and, Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to yield at any time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I notice that the bill in section 7 provides that after the specified age limit has been reached the vessel shall be deemed over age. My question is, Does not this leave almost no limitation on the building of these various categories? In other words, how far are we from reaching the age limit as to battleships, as to aircraft carriers, and cruisers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Some of them are becoming over age all the time, and vessels are being laid down to replace them.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The point I am making is this: The bill in various sections provides for a certain number of battleships and auxiliary vessels.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I read section 7, that limitation will be done away with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As fast as these vessels reach the age limit they are replaced.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The tonnage provision in each category is the maximum permitted in under-age ships, and section 7 merely gives the age limits of ships. On a battleship the age limit is fixed at 26 years from the date it goes into commission; and the total under-age tonnage of battleships or any other category cannot exceed the amount that is stated in another paragraph of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Suppose a 45,000-ton battleship became over age next year, could they not build another one then?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That would be a replacement and could be built, provided Congress authorized it and made the appropriation for it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is not provision for it contained in section 7 of this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all. There is no replacement whatever in this bill. When the ships provided for in this bill become overage they go out of the picture unless Congress authorizes replacements built.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. How many more airplanes are provided in this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This bill provides for adding 1,011 planes to what we have today.

Mr. BENDER. Am I correct in my understanding that 5,800 additional planes were authorized last year?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is clearly in error if he has reference to the total number of planes in the Navy. The Navy today has only 2,050 airplanes. We are permitted at least 3,000. In 1941 we will have 3,200.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that we authorized the construction of 5,800 additional planes over a period of years?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman means for the Army also?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not know about that. All I can keep up with is the Navy. The gentleman is probably correct, but in the Navy today we have only 2,050 planes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. DITTER. It occurred to me that the gentleman might like to know, as he makes his very learned presentation of this Navy program this afternoon, that he is privileged to have present in the gallery a fine group of Republican women interested in national defense. I know they will challenge the gentleman to present this program in an even stronger way than he otherwise might. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the minority will follow the results of the Gallup poll, not even the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will be found in opposition to this bill, and I am satisfied that the rank and file of the Members of the minority, as well as the rank and file of Republicans throughout the country, are behind adequate national defense as set forth in this bill.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. I know the gentleman feels that I have at all times supported his Navy program.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Absolutely; and I trust that the gentleman will be here today to help convince the gentleman from New York of the error of his ways.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. It is very difficult for me at times to follow through. The gentleman on one occasion will tell us that we must depend entirely on the recommendation of the Navy as to what their needs are; he presents legislation and the Congress adopts it because the experts tell us that for our national defense it is necessary. Now, the gentleman takes pride in the fact that he cuts the heart out of the recommendation of these same experts. Can the gentleman justify these divergent views?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Easily. The Navy recommended a 5-year program of some 400,000 tons of ships.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reached the conclusion that it did not want a long-term program, because world conditions may change and we did not feel justified, in view of the fact that Congress is in session every year, in providing for more than a 2-year building program. That is the sane, common-sense viewpoint to take. Bear in mind the first 2-year program covers the identical ships that would be laid down if there was a 5-year program of 400,000 tons.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to thank the gentleman for his explanation, because it sensibly explains the situation.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will be found that this committee has done a sensible thing in presenting this bill. It is presented with a unanimous report. Every member of the minority was present there to vote for it and every member of the majority who was present voted for it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It seems to me the gentleman's figures are hardly truly comparable. He says that the Navy recommended a 5-year program involving something over a billion dollars.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. One billion five hundred and ninety-six million dollars.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman says he fits that into a 2-year program involving five or six hundred million dollars only.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It would not be fair to say that we have saved the difference, because in the next 3 years we may be called upon to spend more money and perhaps those 3 years will equal the 5 years that the Navy authorities set forth in the beginning.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman may be correct. We will have to cross the bridge when we come to it. We are up to the bridge today and we can see 2 years in advance, but we cannot see 5 years in advance. If world conditions do not continue to grow worse it may not be necessary to ask for a building program beyond the 2 years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I agree with the gentleman, and I think I agree with the 2-year program. Many of the Members are like I am. They come here, listen to the gentleman's figures, and accept them. But it would not be safe for a person to go out and say that he voted for a bill to save $900,000,000, because we do not actually save $900,000,000. We do not appropriate that much, but when the 5 years have elapsed maybe we will have a program involving more than that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is not voting for an appropriation at all when he votes for this bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is an authorization.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This is purely an authorization, which later will come up for an appropriation. I want to impress upon the Members that this is not a paper proposition. This is not merely an authorization written down on paper, because we propose to do everything possible to lay down these ships. The security and the defense of our country requires it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. One other question. What are the facts in reference to this matter? Suppose we had entered on the 5-year program that the Navy recommended, and the gentleman does not agree to that. Now, in the 2 years we are going to operate under this authorization, will we not lay down the ships on a basis that the expenditure is about the same as it would have been had we entered upon a 5-year program?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I stated this is 2 years of the 5-year building program. We are laying down the 21 ships that would have been laid down if we had adopted a 5-year program, but we are not committing the Congress to a 5-year program. Next year world conditions may change so that we will have to come back here with a different program, which may be larger or smaller. We cannot tell what the future holds forth. We can only proceed year by year.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman stated we are, by this bill, authorizing the first 2 years of the Navy's 5-year program.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. I stated we would, by passing this bill, authorize exactly the same thing that would have been in a 5-year building program.

Mr. TERRY. Then if the gentleman's committee felt justified in authorizing as a full program all of the ships and tonnage that the Navy Department is asking, we might in a 2-year program have a different number of ships and different types in the smaller program than in the first 2 years of a larger program.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all. We are laying down the same ships that we would lay down in 2 years if we had authorized a 5-year building program. We took the common-sense viewpoint of it. There is no need of committing the country and Congress to a 5-year building program when no one can tell what 5 years from now will present.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. If peace should unexpectedly come over the world, would it be necessary, in the gentleman's judgment, to carry out the full authorization as provided in this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That, of course, would depend on what the conditions of peace may be. I am just as anxious as any Member of Congress to reduce this great naval-armament budget as early as possible and when world conditions and affairs justify. This committee has not been stampeded into this recommendation. The committee has considered the matter carefully, in a sober and conscientious manner and from the common-sense viewpoint. If world conditions should justify our changing the program, we will be back here with recommendations as world conditions may present themselves from time to time.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. We have heard about a one-ocean Navy and a two-ocean Navy. Does the gentleman feel that what we are authorizing in this bill will be a two-ocean Navy or a one-ocean Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This program is not large enough to adequately defend this country if an emergency arose simultaneously in the Atlantic and in the Pacific.

We are not seeking here to come in with a proposition to build a two-ocean Navy, which is beyond the cost we can afford at this time, but with these 21 ships it will contribute to the defense of the country more than the ships in the Navy today.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The bill under consideration provides, as I understand, for an authorization of $654,902,270 for the 2-year period dating from July 1, 1940.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right. If the gentleman will look on page 5, he will see the break-down.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Are there authorizations for construction for these same 2 years other than this?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What do they amount to?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In addition to the building program authorized here, under the act of 1934, there remains in cruiser tonnage, 66,254 tons; in destroyer tonnage, 50,470 tons; and in submarine tonnage, 12,850 tons. This is left under what is known as the treaty Navy of 1934. It is the total that is remaining that has not yet been appropriated for by the Committee on Appropriations.

Under the act of 1938, there remains 16,754 tons of cruisers and 11,336 tons of destroyers. This is the very reason we left out destroyers. We have some 60,000 tons of destroyers that can be laid down now, so there was no need of authorizing any more destroyers. The total tonnage referred to is 157,000 tons. This 157,000 tons, plus the 167,000 tons, is the Navy's program to lay down within 2 years, and the navy yards and the industrial yards are adequate to take care of them.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What will that cost?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The 157,000 tons?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The additional tonnage other than provided in this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will cost about $523,200,000.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If this bill is passed, all the authorizations will then represent a construction outlay of around a billion dollars for the 2 years?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all. The 157,680 tons which I have just mentioned has already been authorized under the act of 1934 and the act of 1938. In addition, we are asking for 167,000 tons, making a total tonnage the Navy will have of 324,680 tons to build in the next 2 years.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What will be the cost of the authorized construction, under the act of 1934, the act of 1938, and this bill, for the 2 years beginning July 1, 1940?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I just stated it will be about $523,200,000, if it is built, but it may not be built, for the reason that to build the 61,000 tons of destroyers will probably give the Navy more destroyers than it needs. This is the very reason we have left that item out of the bill, because we do not know whether we want to continue to build destroyers. Therefore we do not deal with that subject in this bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I wish to commend the gentleman and his committee for limiting this program to 2 years, because if the nations abroad keep on bombing and sinking and destroying ships by torpedoes and mines they may not have as large navies in a year or two as they have now.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That may be true; but on the other hand, if certain conditions happen in this world it may be necessary that our Navy be built far larger than proposed here today. We all hope such conditions will not occur, and for that reason we have limited this bill to a 2-year building program.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman understands my interest in lighter-than-air craft. I have discussed the question of making some provision for lighter-than-air craft. I notice in section 3 of the bill a very brief reference to lighter-than-air craft. It appears that the question of lighter-than-air craft is open at both ends. Am I to understand that this provision permits the construction of a metal-clad ship or ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If it is classified as lighter-than-air it applies to metal-clad or fabric-clad ships, either one.

Mr. DINGELL. Can the chairman give me any assurance as to what the Navy might do with a provision of this kind?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am sorry; I cannot do so. That is a technical matter for the naval experts.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman tell us just what he means by under-age ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In section 7 we fix the age of ships in the different categories. For battleships the age is 26 years from date of commission. Ships 28 years of age are over age and under the law we have the right to replace those ships when Congress appropriates the money.

Mr. TERRY. You still have, in addition to these 18 battleships under age, how many older battleships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have 14 battleships that are under age and we have 1 battleship over age, making a total of 15 battleships.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. What is the date of the launching of the last ship of the battleship class that our Navy has turned out?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not remember about the launching of it, but we are building today 10 battleships.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I am talking about those in the service now.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have the age limit of each battleship, but, unfortunately, I do not have that before me right now.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I understand it has been 12 or 15 years since we have launched a real capital fighting ship.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SUTPHIN. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit, it has been 17 years or in 1923, the West Virginia.

Mr. MASSINGALE. As I understand the gentleman from Georgia, this program, when completed, will give the Government of the United States a navy probably second to no other navy in the world, unless the others take a building spurt and go ahead of us.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is mistaken. This building program authorized now will not provide the ratio of 5–5 with Great Britain, neither does it provide the ratio of 5–3 with Japan.

Mr. MASSINGALE. In answer to that, I want to say to the gentleman that I am, perhaps, a greater enthusiast for a navy than is he, and it is my idea we ought to have a navy that is equal to or better than any other navy in the world.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But what is the use of authorizing it when we cannot build it? We are authorizing everything that we can build and that is the common-sense way to look at it. What is the use of having a paper navy and getting up here and saying that we have a navy better than that of England or of Japan, when, as a matter of fact, we will only have it on paper? What I am doing here is to lay down the keels of these ships and build them within 2 years if the Congress endorses this program.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think that is admirable and I want to see if the gentleman agrees with me in this thought. I do not have any technical knowledge about ships or ship building or really about the requirements of the Navy of the United States, but I have the idea in my mind that one of the best assurances that the Government of the United States could have against the probability of having to send an expeditionary force of men to some foreign country to fight is to have a navy that the balance of the world dreads and would not dare push us to the point where we would have to become involved on foreign battlefields.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Oklahoma is absolutely correct, and this is the greatest insurance for peace that the American people can have. It may not keep us out of war, it may not keep us from being attacked, but nevertheless it will be always a deterrent to aggressive nations, because they will know that this Nation is well prepared, and no man makes an attack upon an individual who is well prepared, and no nation makes an attack upon a nation that is well prepared.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has the gentleman given any thought to the proposition that the great forces of the world at war now will be so exhausted at the conclusion of hostilities that they will be in no position to attack us after this war is settled and that the warships we are building now will be obsolete in 20 years and therefore the great expenditures we are making now are useless expenditures in adding to the Navy to any great degree. Has the gentleman given any thought to that proposition?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; because that is so farfetched I never let my mind run along those lines. [Laughter.] I only try to give my thought to something that is founded upon facts that history teaches, and history shows that nearly every nation that emerges from war oftentimes is stronger after the war is over than when the war commences. Take our own Government. The United States Government was comparatively stronger, from a military standpoint, at the surrender at Appomattox than it has been at any time in the history of the world. The British Government was stronger from a military standpoint at the end of the World War than when it started, and the French Government also was stronger from a military standpoint. There is nothing to the argument that nations will impoverish themselves because they are engaged in war over a period of years if they emerge victorious. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman not know that a battleship is obsolete in 22 years, according to the rules of the Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, no; it is not obsolete. It still has fighting ability, but it has not as much fighting ability as the more modern up-to-date ship. It is not obsolete any more than a Ford automobile of 1935 is obsolete and antiquated because you happen to have a 1940 model.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the bill pending before the committee. I have a somewhat different function to perform upon this occasion. Yesterday afternoon the Republican Members of the House of Representatives met in conference and united in a declaration or statement having to do with the problem of our national defense. I am instructed by the members of the Republican conference to present that statement to the House.

The statement is as follows:

In the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress the Republican minority united in adopting and putting forward a statement defining and clarifying the policy of national defense which they believed should appeal to the Congress and to the people. That statement of policy was presented to the House of Representatives. Subsequent action of the Congress was such as to justify the belief that this statement of policy and of the mission of our military forces in defense of it, met with general approval. Nothing has occurred since then to alter this belief. Further study prompts the minority to submit to the House some considerations which it deems to be of the utmost importance at this time.

Our concern is heightened and intensified by what we see going on all over the world today. Recent events strengthen our determination that we shall remain at peace, and secure in that peace. As we plan for security we mean security not only in the physical or material sense, but, taking the long view, the security of our free institutions.

Our thoughts now turn to the present condition of our military services. In order that they shall be able to perform the mission assigned to them, it is obvious that we need them in adequate strength. It is when we come to give consideration to the strength of the services—not only strength in numbers but especially strength in material and equipment of all kinds—that we find ourselves confronting a difficult and complicated circumstance. It is conceded, we believe, that both the Army and the Navy should be stronger if our military defense is to be adequate. We believe, further, that there would be little hesitation on the part of the Congress in adding very substantially to the present-day strength, especially in equipment, were it not for that circumstance which confronts us and which we must not ignore.

To reach a better understanding of it we must reexamine the broad outline of our participation in the World War. Upon doing so we are reminded that when we entered that war, in April of 1917, the national debt stood at $1,100,000,000. In the 18 months of our participation we spent something in excess of $35,000,000,000. To meet that expenditure we raised about ten billions through taxes. We borrowed the remainder, and came out of the World War with a national debt of twenty-six billions. That wartime financing was accomplished with comparative ease, for when we began it the Government owed very little.

Compare that to our present situation. For 8 or 9 years the Federal Treasury has been running in the red. Through all of these years we have been spending much more than we have collected from taxes. The more we have spent the more we have borrowed. As a result, we have piled up a huge national debt. Present law provides that the national debt shall not exceed $45,000,000,000. It is now conceded that by the end of this fiscal year, June 30, 1940, the direct bonded debt will have approached $44,000,000,000. If our spending in the near future goes on at anything like the recent rate the $45,000,000,000 limit will be reached, the Congress will have to raise the limit, and we shall continue plunging along the reckless road.

Let us remember, therefore, that should we be drawn into a war of first magnitude we should have to start with a debt of at least $44,000,000,000, probably more, and then finance the effort on top of that debt. It is a prospect which must concern every thoughtful person in the land.

The President himself gave evidence of his concern when in his message to the Congress, he suggested the imposition of a special tax calculated to produce revenue sufficient to meet the additional burden of the national defense, and at the same time avoid the necessity of increasing the debt limit. While we share the President's apparent concern, we are convinced that the imposition of an additional special national-defense tax would be inadequate as a remedy and essentially unsound. It would not reach the heart of the problem.

No one at this time can foresee accurately the measures we might have to employ were we drawn into war, but all of us can visualize the danger to our institutions were we forced to resort to inflation, to confiscation, and ultimate repudiation. Could our free institutions survive such a strain? Similar institutions have perished in other lands within our time. Driven to such expedients it might well be that we shall have failed actually in our defense.

Such a possibility should convince us that the most serious weakness in the armor of our national defense today is the existence of a national debt of $44,000,000,000. There it stands, towering, ominous. Much as we should like to, we cannot consider our problem solely in terms of soldiers and sailors, of divisions and battleships.

To deny that a healthy economic condition is vital to our national defense would be absurd. Our ability to mobilize and maintain the resources of the country in a major effort depends fundamentally upon the strength of our national economy. True, we need soldiers and sailors, divisions and battleships, with adequate modern equipment, but to secure their effectiveness in a long, gruelling struggle, and at the same time to preserve our institutions, we must mend our ways.

It will not be an easy task. We have acquired a habit difficult to cast off. Many of our people, thoughtless of the consequences, laugh at debt and demand that spending shall go on. But it must be curbed, for we cannot go on this way and be secure in this troubled world.

The maintenance of our defense is linked with the maintenance of all other necessary activities of our Government. At the present juncture we cannot separate one from the other. The cost of the whole of them combined must be our concern as we strive to put our house in order.

To put it simply, our plea is that the Congress, and others in high authority, reestablish thrift as a virtue in the conduct of government, as it is a virtue in the conduct of the individual.

[Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I know that every Member here must have been impressed with the words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in pointing out the seriousness of the situation as it exists relative to that vital part of our national defense, the financial structure of the Nation. As a matter of fact, it is this very thing that has made it more important than ever that our Navy and our naval air force be ready in its maximum degree of preparedness at all times, and brought to that state just as quickly as possible. To start with a national debt of approximately $44,000,000,000, and then to finance a long, drawn-out war on top of that would completely collapse our industrial, our social, and our political structure. Certainly we must be so prepared now that we shall not be forced into any war which is not for an actual defense against invasion of this Nation or its essentially vital rights. To do so means national suicide. To be drawn into a war, improperly prepared for that war, inadequately prepared to bring it to as quick a conclusion, successfully, as possible, means the same thing—national suicide. This Nation cannot stand the strain of a long, drawn-out war, and by that I mean a war of anything over the duration of a year. It would mean that to add $50,000,000,000—the probable cost of such a war—to the $44,000,000,000 public debt of today would require a fundamental change in the whole structure of this Government. It would require a totalitarian form of government to be able to finance such a war on top of the public debt, because it would require confiscation and nationalization of everything in the United States. The private resources are just not available to finance a major war on top of our present bonded public debt. The money is not there to be borrowed. It is not a question of the people's willingness to finance such an effort. There just are not private finances enough to do it, whether the people are willing or not.

So if we are to avoid that black picture of the complete loss of our democracy, our free institutions, our liberty, and our way of life, we must have a Navy which is capable, at all times, of fending off any possible enemy. Far more important than that, we must realize that it is not mere defense that avoids aggression. This country could be rimmed with high-powered coast-defense guns—one every 10 feet—and we would not defend this country at all without an adequate Navy, because we must realize fundamentally that the enemy must be kept far off of our shores; that the enemy must realize that if he attempts aggression against us, not only can we defend ourselves against invasion, but such potential aggressor must realize—and mark this—this is the only thing that keeps an aggressor away from your shores, if he is bound to try to take what you have—the only thing that will keep him away is the certain knowledge that you can inflict more damage on his homeland in retaliation than he can inflict upon you.

That is not aggression on our part, but if we are to avoid aggression the world must know that we can retaliate in a greater measure of damage to any nation on earth than that nation can inflict upon us. Then, and then only, will they stay home and let us alone. No nation on earth need fear aggression on the part of the United States, or invasion by us until we build a huge expeditionary army of millions of men with an enormous transport service. We have no such thing. We could not invade any nation with out them, but we could inflict terrific damage if an invasion were attempted against us, if we have a proper navy.

To depend merely on so-called defensive weapons is futile. It is not necessary for an enemy to immediately invade our shores to conquer us. Powerful coast defenses will not alone save us. Without a navy to keep hostile forces far from our coasts, our ports can be blockaded, our absolutely essential imports of strategic raw materials can be blocked, and we can be beseiged into surrender, without a shot ever being fired.

An aggressor has nothing to lose by besieging us, unless we can retaliate and besiege him in his own homeland. Bigness is no protection. It is strength that counts. No fighter ever won his fight by merely warding off blows. No; he must be able to do that, and in addition be able to return more powerful blows than he receives.

The question of the necessity of these airplane carriers has been raised. Since we are a two-ocean Nation with only one fleet we must compensate for that in some other way. We cannot divide our fleet, because if we did there would be too great a danger of both halves being destroyed willy-nilly. The safety of the Nation depends upon keeping the fleet inviolate, keeping it as a maximum striking force. So we have to have a makeshift, and the best makeshift we can have is a superior air force. We might not be able to transfer the fleet readily back and forth from one ocean to the other because of the distance and possibility of obstructions in the Panama Canal. We must, however, maintain an adequate naval air force in both oceans, and there is no duplication of the mission of naval aviation as represented by these carriers and the Army airplanes which we are providing, for one is dependent upon the other, but cannot supplant each other. The airplane carriers for which we are asking in this bill are a military necessity as a proper complement to the fleet we are building. To refuse to authorize these three airplane carriers would be exactly the same as authorizing the building of a battleship but not letting them put any guns on it. Airplanes and airplane carriers are as essential a part of the fleet as any other parts, whether they be guns, or men to operate them, or fuel to run the ships.

But in addition to the exact number that we need in the fleet this Nation has to have airplane carriers in the Atlantic. Even though we cannot have a full fleet in the Atlantic we must be able to scout way out to sea 1,000 miles or more so that we shall know in advance of the possible movements of a hostile force. Remember, nations do not declare war nowadays, they simply start to make it. The first you may know of a war is when the bombs start landing on your cities. So we must be prepared to have a scouting force that can find ships far out in the Atlantic to warn us in advance. The job of the Army Air Corps is to defend the actual coast itself against possible invasion. The planes aboard a carrier are essentially scouts. They are not a combat force in the sense that they could carry on independent military operations against Japan or any other country. They are our sea scouts. Many of you in this House were in the World War. You know how important the lookout posts were in no man's land. So that you would not be surprised, you had to have them. These airplanes and these carriers are our advance lookout posts so that we may know of the possible movement of any hostile force in our direction before that force reaches our shores and wrecks its terrific damage upon our industrial plants and upon our civilian population. It is the cheapest possible kind of defense, for if we know that the enemy is coming, especially if we know long enough in advance that he is coming, we can be properly prepared. This goes far beyond that, however. I am convinced, and I know many Members of this House who have studied this problem are convinced, that if the world knows that this Nation is adequately prepared to defend itself and to retaliate against any possible aggression against this country if necessary, nobody will attempt it. If hostile forces know that we have the aircraft carriers to warn us in advance before they can get well started across the ocean toward us, they will never start, in my opinion, because one of the greatest elements in war is surprise, and if we take that element away from any hostile force so that we can have time to be prepared before they get here, they will probably never come.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Would the gentleman care to comment on the need for lighter-than-air craft?

Mr. MAAS. Yes. I know that lighter-than-air craft can be a most valuable element in our national defense. The blimp, a small nonrigid ship, is quite different from a dirigible. During this neutrality patrol the blimp demonstrated that it could perform a most valuable service that no other type of weapon can perform—and when I use the term "weapon" I mean in the military sense, although it is not essentially a combat unit. Lighter-than-air craft can go out in all kinds of weather. They can come down very close to the surface of the water. They can engage in shore patrol or offshore patrol where the airplane would not dare come down through a fog, for instance, for fear that before they saw the water through the fog they would hit the water. The dirigible can be let down very easily, and even come to rest on the water if it has to. That type of aircraft can perform in any kind of weather. It can hover motionless in the air, it can follow at the speed of a surface ship, which an airplane cannot do. It can perform a tremendous service in antisubmarine patrol duty. As many of you know, I served in aviation during the World War in an antisubmarine patrol. We were flying planes then, but we could see submarines submerged under water from our planes. In those days we flew at about 80 miles an hour, but today we are flying at from 300 to 400 miles an hour. That is too fast for effective submarine scouting. You can slow a blimp down to any speed you want. You can even stand still, and on a clear day you can see a submerged submarine to a very considerable depth. The blimp can also carry bombs enough to put whatever submarines it may find out of commission.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. A moment ago the gentleman mentioned the transfer of the fleet from the Pacific to the Atlantic or from the Atlantic to the Pacific. With the gentleman's knowledge of military affairs, what is his position on the extra set of locks at the Panama Canal? Are they absolutely necessary for military defense purposes?

Mr. MAAS. In my opinion, they are. I think we ought to have the extra set of locks. It seems to me foolhardy to permit the life line of this Nation to be dependent on the single set of locks which we have today. The only alternative is two fleets, and we simply cannot afford two fleets at this time. We ought to have them, but we cannot afford it.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman, I take it, would, then, prefer the extra set of locks to a two-ocean Navy?

Mr. MAAS. No. I would rather have the two-ocean Navy. That would make us absolutely invulnerable, but the national economy of the country at the present time cannot support a two-ocean Navy.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Then the gentleman would prefer the locks?

Mr. MAAS. It would not do us any good to have the finest Army in the world and the greatest Navy in the world if we could not feed and pay them.

I want to call attention to the policy which the Committee on Naval Affairs has initiated in this bill. We are headed toward a definite policy of legislating only 2 years ahead for authorizations so far as the Navy is concerned, which I think is a splendid program. We do not want to find ourselves in a position again of having authorized a big navy and then some peace treaty comes along and we have to sink half of it. We are going to keep close check on the Navy. In my opinion and in the opinion of the committee, this bill represents the bare minimum, the absolute necessity, in the way of authorizations for our Navy, below which it is actually dangerous for this Nation to go. This permits the Navy to increase step by step as the rest of the world increases their armament, and we will thereby keep this country out of war. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. As I understand, it is proposed to build three aircraft carriers in this additional tonnage?

Mr. MAAS. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. They will run something like 26,000 or 27,000 tons apiece, is that about right?

Mr. MAAS. That is approximately correct. Twenty-six thousand five hundred tons.

Mr. TABER. About what are each of them expected to cost?

Mr. MAAS. About $47,000,000.

Mr. TABER. How does that compare with the tonnage we have been building in the last few years?

Mr. MAAS. Does the gentleman mean in aircraft carriers?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. We had not arrived at a definite answer until the present time in regard to that. The first one was a small converted ship, the Langley, which was a trial. Then we took two of the huge battle cruisers we were building during the war, which we were not allowed to complete, as such, and made them into aircraft carriers, the Saratoga and Lexington. They were found to be not entirely satisfactory, excessively costly in operation, and not of the desired type. Then we got into a wave of economy and we started building small ones. We found those were too small; they did not have the speed; they could not carry any protection at all. We think we have now hit upon the right plan.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. The present set-up consists of such as the Wasp?

Mr. MAAS. The Wasp and the Hornet.

Mr. TABER. They are about 19,000 tons?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. They cost somewhere around $25,000,000?

Mr. MAAS. Somewhere in that neighborhood; yes.

Mr. TABER. They will carry approximately 150 planes?

Mr. MAAS. No; not that many.

Mr. TABER. One hundred and thirty?

Mr. MAAS. About 100 planes.

Mr. TABER. About 100. Similar to the Lexington and Saratoga?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. How much speed do they make?

Mr. MAAS. Which ones does the gentleman mean?

Mr. TABER. The ones that are being built.

Mr. MAAS. Does the gentleman mean the Hornet and the Wasp?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. They are about 32 knots.

Mr. TABER. What speed does the gentleman expect the proposed 26,500-ton ships will have?

Mr. MAAS. That is a military secret. There will be an increase in speed, but that is properly a matter that ought to be confidential.

Mr. TABER. What does the gentleman expect in the way of the number of planes that may be carried, or is that a military secret?

Mr. MAAS. It is not entirely a military secret although they have asked us not to disclose it because there is no reason to give that information to possible enemies in advance. Also, it will depend somewhat on the development of the types of planes that are found most successful. These ships carry everything from single-seated scouting planes up to twin-engine bombers. It depends a great deal upon the proportion that is finally agreed upon as to the total number of planes that may be carried.

Mr. TABER. It depends on the type of planes the ships carry as to how many they may carry?

Mr. MAAS. Yes. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN].

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe anything can be added to what the chairman has said in his explanation of this bill. The committee worked on it for over a month. If there is anything that can be taken out of it with safety to the country, if there is any economy that we can make that we did not make, I should like to have it pointed out, because I, for one, would be willing to agree to any reduction possible in this bill that did not jeopardize what I believe are the vital interests of the country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. How many battleships and cruisers have been authorized and are now under construction?

Mr. DARDEN. The battleships authorized and now under construction number eight. There are two carried in the appropriation bill for this year, but there are no battleships authorized in the bill now under consideration. Sixty-six thousand five hundred tons are here authorized for cruisers.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I understood it was proposed to construct two new battleships.

Mr. DARDEN. Provision for two battleships is made in the naval appropriation bill for this year, two 45,000-ton battleships, raising the number of battleships under construction or appropriated for to ten. However, the bill under consideration does not carry provision for a battleship.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. How much money is being authorized to be appropriated by this bill?

Mr. DARDEN. In its entirety, the bill authorizes $654,902,270.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is in excess of half a billion dollars, and no battleship is included in the authorization.

Mr. DARDEN. By battleship the gentleman means a heavy capital ship of 35,000 tons or more?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I mean a capital ship.

Mr. DARDEN. Under the terms of the Washington Treaty, a capital ship is any ship above 10,000 tons. Some of the ships authorized herein are above 10,000 tons so that technically they would be capital ships, but there are no battleships authorized in this bill; that is, the heavy 35,000- or 45,000-ton ships.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is the authorization in this bill limited to cruisers and destroyers, and vessels of that kind?

Mr. DARDEN. There are no destroyers authorized in this bill. When the bill was first introduced, a number of destroyers were included, but we found on consideration that there was unused tonnage of some 61,000 tons, which would give us, if we continue the construction of the ordinary type, the 1,500-ton destroyer, 40 destroyers, and if we use the tonnage in the construction of leaders, the 1,850-ton ships, it would give us 33 new destroyers. For this reason we cut from this bill all destroyer tonnage, so that it does not include any authorization for the construction of destroyers.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. With the $650,000,000 authorized in this bill, how many ships will be constructed?

Mr. DARDEN. Twenty-one combatant ships, 22 auxiliary vessels, and 1,011 airplanes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. With these 21 ships and the ships that are now under construction, will we not have a very large navy?

Mr. DARDEN. We will have a very powerful navy. We will have a navy that will be almost as powerful as the British Navy, and it will be by all odds the most powerful Navy we have ever had, not only in number of ships but more particularly in fire power or striking power, the capacity of the individual ships.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The British Empire is engaged in a great war. Does the gentleman take into consideration the use the British Government is making of its Navy at present?

Mr. DARDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The British Navy has had to abandon Scapa Flow and practically put its ships in seclusion for safety purposes.

Mr. DARDEN. The gentleman makes a great error if he assumes the British Fleet is in seclusion. It is true the British Navy has probably abandoned Scapa Flow for the time being, but it is also true that it abandoned Scapa Flow in the early part of the last war. However, it returned to it to complete the blockade that broke the power of Germany. The operations of the British Fleet in this war have almost destroyed German shipping on every sea of the world. It has not done it entirely, but it has imposed upon Germany a strangling blockade. Therefore, far from being hidden or unused, the British Navy is playing the most vital part in the war today.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman has not heard of any operations against any German forts or the taking of any German land fortifications?

Mr. DARDEN. Naval forces are not constructed to operate against land fortifications except under very peculiar conditions. There has been no occasion in this war, as far as I know, to attempt to use the British Navy against the land fortifications of Germany.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. In the last war they attempted to take Zeebrugge and failed.

Mr. DARDEN. No; they never attempted to take Zeebrugge and failed. What the British did there was to send an expedition to block the channel of Zeebrugge and make it inaccessible as a submarine base. In that operation they were partially successful and they materially damaged the base. They did not use against it any capital ships of a size sufficient to destroy the land batteries guarding it. It was a difficult operation carried out with old ships, and part of the old ships were left there to block the entry to the canal.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman knows the record of failure at Gallipoli in Turkey, does he not?

Mr. DARDEN. No; I am not acquainted with that failure. The attack at Gallipoli was an attack that, had it been backed with sufficient naval force, augmented by land forces, might have brought the war to an end some 18 months prior to its conclusion. It was a brilliant attempt, but it was not implemented with enough armed forces to make it successful.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. You know they lost several of their biggest ships in that venture?

Mr. DARDEN. No; I do not know it. What ships did they lose at Gallipoli?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I cannot recall them, but was not the Triumphant one?

Mr. DARDEN. They used the Queen Elizabeth there, and it is true that several of the English ships were lost, but they were not the biggest English ships. The French and English submarines did great damage in the Sea of Marmora.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And does not the gentleman recall that when they attempted to impose sanctions on Italy and massed their fleet in the Mediterranean, for some reason, when they found out the Italians had a superior air force and had these mosquito fleets, they simply withdrew and abandoned their enterprise?

Mr. DARDEN. No; they never abandoned the enterprise at all. They shifted a major part of the British Fleet from Malta and concentrated it in Egypt, where it was more valuable as a weapon. The fleet did not abandon the operations in the Mediterranean. England withdrew before she went as far as she might have gone in reference to sanctions.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. But she did not carry out her plan to keep Italy from attacking Ethiopia and imposing sanctions at the same time.

Mr. DARDEN. I cannot go into that matter now, as I have not the time.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. We are talking about the use of a navy, and I think we are on a very important subject.

Mr. DARDEN. I have not much time, or I would be pleased to go into it further.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTPHIN. In this program it is contemplated, is it not, that additional shipbuilding facilities will be authorized?

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Where are they to be located?

Mr. DARDEN. Ship facilities can be located wherever they are needed under the authority of the act of 1938, which authorized not only an increase in naval construction but also an increase in naval facilities. There was added to this bill, in section 5, I believe it is, an authorization for docks and yards at Portsmouth, N. H., at Philadelphia, Pa., and at Norfolk, Va. These additions are very much needed; and if the building docks are constructed at the three yards, they will not only be available for building but they will be available for repair and maintenance of the fleet after the construction program is completed. Naturally, I am particularly happy to see included this project for Norfolk. It will contribute much to a yard which I believe to be one of the finest in the world.

Mr. SUTPHIN. And if these building docks are completed, it will be possible to construct capital ships in those docks?

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; with the exception of Portsmouth, N. H., where submarine building is concentrated.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman probably would not recall my remarks last year that a $45,000,000,000 debt is not a good rampart for national defense.

Mr. DARDEN. I have no quarrel with the gentleman on that.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I want to suggest this to the gentleman from Idaho: There might be a way of paying for this that would not interfere with his objection to the bill, and I am not for the bill. I would suggest to him that somebody might offer an amendment that we take the silver bullion we have in the Treasury and coin it at 1.29.

Mr. DARDEN. I did not yield for any interchange of comment on silver.

Mr. GIFFORD. I simply want to compliment the gentleman——

Mr. DARDEN. I am not going to yield any further on silver or anything else that is not relevant to the pending measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Virginia 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DARDEN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] earlier today touched on a matter that I think is very important, and I think, frankly, we ought to discuss it here. The limiting of this program does not represent actually a saving of money. We have materially cut the authorization; but, as the gentleman points out, we have also cut the time limitation, so that while the bill started out with an authorization of $1,596,000,000, and while it ends up with $654,000,000, we have cut from it 3 years for the period of construction and limited the spending of that money to 2 years. Now, all of the money will not be spent, even if appropriated, within the 2 years, but we propose here that the ships be laid down in 2 years and the Government will be obligated for them and must, of course, pay for them. The actual expenditure of the money will probably go over a period of 3½ to 4 years.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. In connection with the gentleman's statement, is it not a fact that this program spends more in the 2-year period than would have been spent under the 5-year period?

Mr. DARDEN. No.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but is not the difference $16,337,660?

Mr. DARDEN. It is, apparently; but here is the explanation of that situation:

If we should authorize all of these ships in a 5-year program, and they should be appropriated for, they would be laid down, and the Nation would be obligated. The gentleman is right, if he apportions the time as between 5 years and 2 years, and then reapportions the money; but that is not a fair test, because if they are authorized and appropriated for, they would be laid down. They would probably all be laid down in 3 or 3½ years, and the Nation would be obligated.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I wish to bring out the fact that there is no real saving. On the contrary, the average annual expenditure proposed under the 2-year program is about $8,000,000 more than under the 5-year program recommended by the Navy Department.

Mr. DARDEN. Oh, yes; I think there is a great saving, and I shall take a moment to answer that. Here is what we hope, those of us of the committee who have studied the matter. Our problem is now complicated by a war in the east and a war in Europe, but we hope that at the end of 2 years the picture will be much better; and, frankly, if things in the world are much better, we propose to materially scale down naval spending, but if we go forward now on a 5-year program we will be obligated to it, and we will not have that opportunity. I say to the gentleman, every single thing that could possibly be done was done by our committee in our attempt to reduce the costs involved in this authorization.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Is it not an accurate statement that this bill as recommended by the committee represents a reduction in the original request of the total cost of approximately $900,000,000, as of today, if the bill is passed?

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; that is accurate. That is what it represents in potential savings, and that is what we hope we will be able to save actually if world conditions improve as we hope they will. At the same time we do not sacrifice any of our vital needs of today.

One minute more and I am through. I realize there is some question in the minds of Members here, with reference to the advisability of authorizing three additional carriers at a cost of $140,000,000. It is always difficult to know in military matters just what the value of a weapon is, and if we have erred, we have erred on the underside in this provision. The carrier tonnage is the only tonnage that we did not cut in this bill. After listening to the naval experts, we felt that it would be unsafe to attempt to cut the carrier tonnage. Our position is roughly this: We have today five carriers that are in service. They are the Yorktown and the Enterprise, two of the new ones, that have just joined the fleet. There is the Ranger, of fourteen-thousand-and-odd tons, and the old Saratoga and the Lexington. They are converted battle cruisers, battle cruisers that had been laid down when we entered the naval-limitation agreement of 1921. We took two of them and made carriers of them. We are building the Wasp. She will be delivered to the Navy within 2 or 3 months, as she is almost completed. And we laid down about 3 months ago the Hornet. These represent all we have in carriers. The British have eight carriers with their fleet now, and seven under construction. The Japanese fleet has six carriers, and so far as we can learn two more under construction. The other navies of the world have comparatively a small number of carriers. Our air problem is difficult in this. It is vital that we keep open the Panama Canal. Nothing would so damage us as the closing of the Canal, because it would leave us vulnerable on either one coast or the other.

We have a great naval force now that is undivided, and its strength and its value to the Nation lies largely in the fact that it can be transferred from one ocean to the other very rapidly and can be effective in either. A great part of the effectiveness and protection of the fleet lies in its carriers. The carriers that we have are capable of handling between 75 and 100 planes each. When we get through with these 3 carriers, for which we are asking, our carrier-plane strength will be about 500 planes, which is not a very large air force accompanying the fleet at sea. The carriers can be used in connection with our fleet, or they can render very fine service detached and made a part of a fast mobile wing operating in either one ocean or the other. We feel we need the 3 extra carriers. We felt it so strongly that the third carrier which was to be laid down 3 years from now we moved up in the program and made it a part of the 2-year program and decided to ask that all the carriers be laid down at once. They will be of material assistance to us not only in fleet operations but in guaranteeing the integrity of the Panama Canal. They will pay for themselves many times over if we are so unfortunate as to become involved in war by the service that they can render in scouting and in actual combat with the enemy. We carry scouting planes on many of our fighting ships, but the carriers are the only ships on which we can rely for fighting planes when the critical time comes at sea.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Department recommended two carriers now and another one later, and the committee felt so strongly that they were needed at present that they recommended three at once?

Mr. DARDEN. The Department recommended three carriers as part of the 5-year program. When we started cutting the 5-year program we moved up one of the carriers to be certain that it was included in the 2-year program, because we thought, in comparison with the other ships contemplated, that that one carrier was most important. I believe the plans of the Navy contemplated the laying down of the third carrier at 2½ or 3 years. One of the things that troubled us was the dock capacities of the Nation. We have had to lay down a program with that in mind, because we have only so many facilities that are available for heavy ship construction.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARDEN. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. And we found that that third carrier would be needed whether we went on with the program beyond the 2½-year program or not. All three carriers are needed for the present Navy?

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; we felt that very strongly. I believe that if the House had told us, "You can select one class of ship only," I believe the committee would have decided to abandon everything save these three carriers. I think the committee feels that this is a vital provision. Certainly I feel so. I think that these ships, the carriers, are vital to the success of our naval operations in either ocean. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, while I do not infer from the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

VINSON], chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, that he intended to give the impression that any money saving had been made because his committee authorized $645,902,270 for a 2-year Navy building program instead of the $1,596,411,277 for a 5-year program, as recommended by the Navy Department, yet, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] pointed out, this might be interpreted as indicating a saving.

It should be clearly understood that not only is there no saving, but the average annual amount to be spent under this 2-year program is more than the average annual amount would have been under the 5-year program.

Under the 5-year program the average annual amount spent would have been $319,282,255. Under the 2-year program the average annual expenditure would be $327,451,135.

Thus, under the 2-year program proposed now, the average annual expenditure exceeds that of the 5-year plan by $8,168,880.

Considering the serious state of our national finances and our very sick economy, the question of appropriating this money for added naval expenditures cannot be categorically answered by merely referring to what this country might need. No one questions the desirability—yes; the absolute necessity—of a thoroughly adequate navy; but under the deplorable circumstances which presently attend our Nation this point may easily be overemphasized.

I am convinced in my own mind that unless something materially can be done to restore our Nation to a normal and healthy economy we shall have difficulty maintaining even the naval power we already have.

Every penny for this appropriation must be obtained by borrowing against the future, against the toil of our children. What a sad commentary it will be upon our generation for our children to learn that they will not have only their own peacetime defense to pay for but that of their parents and grandparents as well.

It would not be quite so bad if only the matter of national defense were involved, but to think that our generation cannot even earn its own livelihood but must ask its children and grandchildren to bear a large share of this burden is anything but pleasant to think of.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 8026, authorizing an increase in the naval strength of the United States, should receive the unanimous support of this House. It is presented to you by our Committee on Naval Affairs after extensive hearings and a very careful examination of the Navy Department's expansion recommendation in the light of world conditions.

When we began our hearings on January 8, the committee had H. R. 7665 before it. That bill embodied the Department's recommendation. Without hysteria and without any partisan considerations, we proceeded to examine it. Every member had only one thought in mind: to determine the essentials for an adequate national defense for our people so that this country may continue to enjoy safety and security at a minimum of expense. This bill now before the House embodies those essentials and no more.

As the hearings on H. R. 7665 progressed, it became apparent that the naval-expansion program recommended by the Department for authorization at this time would not be warranted. It would commit the people to a 6-year long-range program costing $1,596,411,277. Such a commitment would be unwise. No one can foresee what the future world developments will be, and no one can predict what technical naval developments may make certain types of vessels more effective than other types. Considering the present condition of our National Budget, with a public debt of almost $45,000,000,000, it certainly would be unwise to authorize a program involving an expenditure of over $1,596,000,000.

If we had accepted the Department's recommendation, the Committee on Naval Affairs would have divested itself of any necessity of examining the requirements of the Navy for many years to come. We would simply be turning over to the President and the Navy Department virtually blanket authority to run the Navy as they saw fit. In my judgment, it was a most extraordinary recommendation; and, I am frank to say, I am somewhat at a loss to understand exactly why it was made.

By the act of 1934 an increase in the Navy to the treaty limits was authorized. Superimposed on that was a still further increase of 20 percent authorized by the act of 1938. This year the President and the Navy Department asked for another increase of 25 percent. But the important part of the recommendation was not simply the extensive increase, but the fact that under the terms of the bill the President would be given full discretion in determining what types of vessels may be constructed out of the total tonnage authorized. Instead of the Congress deciding how many destroyers or how many submarines we should have, leaving it to the naval experts to show the need, for some unknown reason it was proposed that we give the President the power to decide that without the necessity of consulting Congress.

Not only that. It was also proposed under the terms of the original bill that a blanket authorization be made for the expenditure of whatever sums the President and the Department saw fit for "equipment and facilities at navy yards for building any ship or ships" that have already been authorized or may at some future date be authorized. It had no limit. It amounted to saying, "You go ahead and place equipment you deem essential at whatever navy yard you please." At no time would the Department be obliged to explain to the Naval Affairs Committee why it needed certain facilities or equipment at certain yards. At no time would the Navy be obliged to ask Congress for authorization of the proposed facilities.

As I have previously indicated, what the President and the Navy Department recommended under the terms of H. R. 7665 was, in effect, the abolishment of the Committee on Naval Affairs and permission to run the Navy exactly as they saw fit. That is an unwise policy. It is not only unwise—it is extremely dangerous. It is inimical to democracy, and I will never be able to understand why the recommendation was made.

I do not question the patriotism and the loyalty of our naval officers. Nowhere will be found a finer, more intelligent, and more patriotic group of men. But the time has long since arrived when those who serve in the executive branch of the Government, whether in old-established departments or in these new agencies, must be made to realize this Government belongs to the people. For the people, who elect us to office, Congress must retain its control and make the decisions on policies. It is for the Executive to recommend and for Congress to decide. If we delegate away our power of decision, we will have betrayed the people's trust, and in due course representative government in the United States will cease to exist, as it has in other countries of the world.

I certainly could never have approved the President's and the Department's recommendation as embodied in H. R. 7665, and I made my position very clear in that respect at the outset of the hearings. Our Committee on Naval Affairs could not see the wisdom nor the necessity of vesting blanket discretion in the President in a long-range expansion program. And on January 18 our able chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], introduced H. R. 8026, which is the bill before the House today in an amended form.

This bill has eliminated the broad grants of discretion requested by the President and the Department. It has narrowed the 6-year expansion program to a 2-year program. The cost has been reduced from $1,596,411,277 to $654,902,270. In reporting this bill in this amended form our committee is recommending authorization of only that which the Navy Department has shown to be essential for our defense and that which the Department can construct in 2 years. We could not see the wisdom nor the necessity of authorizing construction which could not possibly be undertaken and completed in less than 6 years, particularly when the Congress is in session every year and the committee can again consider any further authorizations that may, in the light of events, prove necessary.

I am really proud of my Committee on Naval Affairs for the work it has done on this legislation. And I think you may be reasonably sure our committee will not report out the other unusual recommendation made by the Secretary of the Navy to give the President during a so-called national emergency the same powers as he would have in time of war. The recommended bill, as you know, would have enabled the President by proclamation to commandeer all our factories and materials. Under the terms of that proposal, the President would control our entire industrial machinery in peacetime in the same manner as he serves as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The proposal had possibilities of completely destroying democracy. When questioned before our committee concerning this recommendation, the Secretary said:

I just made a mistake in making it. It is as simple as that.

I do not know from what source that recommendation originated. Nor do I understand how anyone could fail to see its implications. Had not our people been vigilant and had not their representatives in Congress expressed their opposition to the recommendation, the Secretary's mistake may have proved costly to this democracy. But let our experience with this matter be evidence abundant of the need for constant vigilance that our liberties may be secure.

During these last 7 years it has become a common practice to recommend legislation delegating broad powers to the President and the departments of the Government. It has become a routine matter, so routine, in fact, that a Cabinet officer proceeds to suggest giving the President wartime powers over industry in peacetime without even so much as noting its implications.

Our Committee on Naval Affairs has set an example. I am proud of it. It completely ignored the Secretary of the Navy's "national emergency Presidential power" recommendation and has completely revised the naval-expansion program so as to eliminate the broad grants of discretion. We are authorizing only that which is essential.

It is my conviction our people desire to keep out of foreign wars and at the same time establish a strong national defense. This bill is essential for our defense, and I hope it will receive unanimous approval.

This bill follows the principle I have and will always advocate: "Millions for defense but not one cent for foreign aggression."

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to note in section 3 of this bill for national defense a provision with reference to lighter-than-air craft, and I wish to address my brief remarks to that subject.

There is some conflict of opinion with reference to the function of an airship, yet I think there are certain purposes to which it is adapted and for which it is designed which can lead to no difference of opinion.

We have a very extensive coast line in our country, a coast line that in time of war needs practical and profitable defense. It is generally recognized that as a reconnaissance or scouting vessel the dirigible has certain advantages over all other craft of the air. It alone can hover and keep a definite place in the sky. It can attain heights which will enable it to spot submarines under the water. By such armament as dirigibles themselves may carry, or by such information as they can communicate to the vessels of attack, they can be instrumental in the destruction of submarines that may invest our shores.

The present bill calls for the addition of only four of these small implements of defense to our present facilities in that regard.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield briefly.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The current newspaper account is that we are sending airplanes that will make 400 miles an hour to the Allies. What defense would one of these airships have against an airplane of that type?

Mr. LANHAM. For the present I am speaking simply with reference to our coastal defense, if there should be an invasion by submarines, and not with reference to sending airships out to sea. We certainly would have plenty of airplanes on our shores to give them the necessary protection while they carried on their work of scouting for submarines.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. SUTPHIN. I want to say to my friend that at the present time the eight lighter-than-air craft that we have are in use on the neutrality patrol flying over the sea every day.

Mr. LANHAM. I thank the gentleman for this contribution. I am sure that for many years we have all observed this commercial Goodyear blimp in the sky over Washington. The Goodyear Co., with six of these blimps, has flown millions of miles, with perhaps half a million passengers, and they have not injured one so much as by the scratch of a finger. We have a very great opportunity in this country of which we have not taken due advantage. This opportunity is afforded us by reason of the fact that we have relatively a world monopoly of the supply of helium, which is the one element that makes practical and feasible the operation of these lighter-than-air ships. Unfortunately, we have wasted enough helium in this country to have lasted us for a century in the maximum operation of dirigibles. We have become more interested in recent years in its conservation. Providence has blessed us in giving us a bountiful store of this invaluable asset.

There are many other functions of the helium-filled dirigible needless to discuss at this time. It is true we have had some accidents with the dirigibles we have had heretofore, but those accidents are easily accounted for and have been explained by that outstanding airman of our country in the lighter-than-air field, Commander C. E. Rosendahl.

In view of the fact that this bill comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs, I think it well at this time to repeat a suggestion I have made heretofore, that the personnel assigned to the operation of these dirigibles should be kept in this field of endeavor. [Applause.] They should not be shifted about from one post to another. Their technical training should not be interrupted.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. I think the gentleman is making a most valuable contribution to this subject; and I will say that during the hearings the committee itself took this matter up and asked the Secretary of the Navy if he would not look into it. He is now directing that a study be made of that particular subject. I am glad the gentleman has contributed that thought.

Mr. LANHAM. I am very glad, indeed, to have that information. Such a course is necessary for efficient operation.

Now, let me call attention to another thing. We have been stressing recently the importance of the solidarity of the countries of the Western Hemisphere for the peace of the world. This is most essential. It behooves us in carrying out the good-neighbor policy to do all we can to strengthen and promote the harmonious relationship between the United States and the countries of Central and South America, as well as our neighbor to the south. For a great many years the German nation sent its dirigibles across the Atlantic to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. It is surprising in view of the fact that they did not have this noninflammable element, helium, that they could carry on so long and so successfully with dirigibles filled with an explosive gas. The people of Brazil were so fascinated by and infatuated with the daring and the novelty of this lighter-than-air transportation in its transoceanic route that they constructed in the city of Rio de Janeiro an enormous hangar to house the dirigibles coming from over the sea.

What an opportunity we have as the sole possessors of helium in sufficient volume to carry on successfully to promote this friendly spirit and to send these dirigibles down to Central and South America on missions of neighborly good will. And I am hoping and believing that the day will come when commercially we shall be able to have larger vessels of the air that will supersede the traffic that was formerly carried by Germany. Let us use lighter-than-air aviation for promoting our commerce as we promote the good-neighbor policy. We have not been alive to our opportunities with reference to this wonderful God-given element that we possess and control so exclusively. The other nations of the earth have been seeking for it, but seeking in vain. Let us conserve it; let us use it as occasion may require for purposes to which it is adapted; let us devote it to the causes of peace and of friendly commercial enterprise and to the defense of this Nation of ours if any abroad should ever be so bold as to dare to interpose to force their will upon the intrepid souls who inhabit this land of ours, which has been, is now, and we hope will always be the land of the free and the home of the brave. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, as I have listened to this debate I have been impressed, as I am sure all Members must have been, with the absence of any substantial opposition to this bill. I regard this as no inconsiderable compliment to the Naval Affairs Committee, of which it is my privilege to be a member, and particularly I regard it as a compliment to the distinguished chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. VINSON. [Applause.]

This bill (H. R. 8026) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, has been so thoroughly and so well discussed, and from almost every angle, that I have no desire here to go into a detailed argument on it. I think the debate thus far has shown that to be unncessary. It seems to me the House is to be congratulated on the very thorough, sensible, and entirely nonpartisan manner in which the Members have approached the problem involved in this bill. A number of things have been brought out in the debate today which I believe will prove to be of benefit not only to the Congress but to the whole country. For example, the figures and facts which have been given as to the present size of the Navy and as to what kind of a Navy we shall have when the full strength authorized by this bill is attained, I think will clear up a number of questions that have been bothering many of the people of this country for a long while.

Mr. Chairman, because there has been so much misunderstanding on this point in some quarters, I am going to take the time here to repeat the facts relative to the strength of the Navy in ships and in tonnage—I mean the strength that our Navy will have when the building program authorized by the pending bill is completed. We shall have in our Navy when all ships authorized under this bill and under previous law have been built, 18 battleships, 11 aircraft carriers, 48 cruisers, 139 destroyers, and 73 submarines, making a total of 289 under-age naval vessels. The actual increase over our present strength provided for in this bill is 3 carriers, 5 cruisers, and 6 submarines. This bill provides for no increase in the number of battleships or destroyers. It provides also for an increase in the naval air force of 1,011 planes—an increase of about 25 percent.

This, of course, will be a large navy, but even when it is entirely completed it will still not be as large, compared with those of other countries, as the Navy which was contemplated by the 1922 arms limitation treaty. I think that is an important fact which should not be lost sight of. At that time, with the view of achieving ultimate disarmament, and insofar as the other powers of the world would agree to any disarmament program, it was agreed upon by all the naval powers that for the purpose of adequate defense—a ratio in naval strength of 5–5–3 between Great Britain, the United States, and Japan was a proper ratio, and that if this ratio were maintained each of these nations would have a navy adequate for defense, but at the same time inadequate for carrying on an aggressive war against the other.

All of the naval powers of the world agreed to that. Japan agreed, England agreed, and all the other countries, including France and Italy. Each agreed to accept the ratio voluntarily agreed to and to maintain that ratio and not to exceed it. In order to bring ourselves down to that ratio, for we were then above it, we actually destroyed a great many of our valuable warships. We allowed other nations which were not then up to that treaty ratio to build more ships in order to come up to it. The other nations destroyed nothing but blueprints, while we actually destroyed battleships and cruisers. We were at that time, as I say, up to the 5–5–3 ratio, and we should have remained there. But we did not. Instead of remaining at the ratio by replacing our ships as they became obsolete we ceased almost entirely to build any naval craft whatever, and it was only a very few years ago that we resumed our naval-building program. We were literally forced in self-defense to resume it, because when the treaty expired Japan refused to renew it, and every nation except the United States had entered upon an unlimited building program.

When this bill is passed and when the strength of the Navy is brought up to the authorized strength contemplated in this bill, we will have, as I say, a large Navy, but even then the Navy will be smaller in relative strength than that called for under the 5–5–3 treaty.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. May I point out to the members of the committee that part of this bill calls for the construction of auxiliary ships?

Mr. MOTT. That is true. The auxiliary ship construction must necessarily keep pace with the fleet, but I have confined my remarks thus far to combatant ships.

Mr. MAGNUSON. To the extent of about 183,000 tons. We are sadly lacking in those ships. We have built up fighting ships but have failed to build auxiliary ships.

Mr. MOTT. That in brief is the status of the Navy as contemplated in this bill. Now, when this program is completed, I want to emphasize the fact that we will still have a Navy that is entirely defensive. We will not have a Navy that is to be used for offensive purposes or which, according to the testimony of the naval experts who appeared before the committee, that can be used for offensive purposes. We will have a Navy which should enable us successfuly to defend our own country if we should ever be called upon to defend it, but we will not have a Navy large enough or strong enough to enable us to carry on an offensive war against any major naval power.

Now, there have been two or three questions asked here, and in good faith. They have not been asked so much on the floor of the House, but I have heard them asked elsewhere repeatedly. I know those questions are being asked by the sincere and well-meaning people all over the country. One of the questions is, What is the Navy for? What do we intend to use it for? Do we intend to use this Navy to carry out a policy of power politics? Do we intend to use it as an instrument of aggression? My correspondence from my own State is replete with questions of that kind, and they ought to be frankly answered.

Let me say that it has never been the intention of the Naval Affairs Committee, nor of the Congress, nor, as far as I know, of anyone in the Navy Department to create or maintain a Navy for the purpose of enabling the United States to carry out a policy of aggression. I do not think a proposal has ever been made to the Congress in our whole history which, if enacted into law, would have given us an aggressive Navy, or one with which we could have gone out and carried on a conquest against another power or a combination of powers. That has never been the policy of the people of the United States nor of their Representatives in Congress.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that in the last war we did use aggressive tactics? Did we not send Dewey down into Manila to conquer that ccuntry?

Mr. MOTT. We did take the Philippine Islands. Their acquisition by the United States was a part of the treaty with Spain. I have always thought it was a mistake. I have always thought that mistake should be corrected. I advocated giving back the Philippine Islands long before that proposal was ever made in Congress. I am glad our people have at last seen their mistake and that the Congress has now taken the necessary steps to correct it. The Philippine incident, of course, happened in another generation. I am speaking now of the present.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. That was the last war we were in?

Mr. MOTT. No; we were in the World War since then. But, as I say, that happened a long time ago. If we had any aggressive or imperialistic ideas at that time, I think everyone will agree that we have long since abandoned them and that we have no aggressive policies now. We do not want to take the territory of any other country in the world. But we do want to be sure that no other power shall take any of our own territory or threaten in any way our own territorial integrity. And the main function of our Navy is to see to it that no other power or combination of powers shall ever do that.

Another question which has been asked in all seriousness is, Who are we going to fight and who is likely to attack the United States? Well, of course, if we were able to give a direct, categorical answer to that question, then the problem of national defense would be very easy to solve. Then we would know exactly how to protect ourselves. We would know precisely what size of Navy we needed. We would know exactly what kind of an Army was required. But, unfortunately, we cannot tell that. No other nation can tell it at the present time. No country has ever been able to predict in the whole history of the world just who was going to attack it, nor when.

Who could have foretold a few years ago that Italy was going to invade Ethiopia and, later, Albania? Who could have prophesied that Japan intended to overrun China or that Russia would invade little Finland? Those are things which cannot be foretold. We only know that the experience of history teaches us that about once in every other generation the United States has become involved in a war, not because we wanted war but because we could not help ourselves. That has been the case also with every other nation in the world. History has also proven to us that the only real guaranty against invasion that any nation has ever had has been an adequate defense, and by that I mean an adequate naval and military establishment.

Everyone knows why Germany attacked France in 1914. It was because France was not properly prepared at that time to defend herself. If Germany had thought that France was properly prepared, and if France had been properly prepared, Germany would not have attacked France at that time. Every student of history and of military affairs knows that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. France learned her lesson since the World War and she has managed to get herself in proper shape for defense. Her defense consists of the building of the Maginot line and the creation of probably the finest army in the world. And what was the result, so far as the invasion of France was concerned? With that defense Germany never in the world would have attacked France in this war. France and England, it is true, conceived it to be their duty last fall to declare war against Germany, but Germany of her own volition would not have attacked France because she knew she could not successfully invade France in the year 1940 as she did in 1914. No country properly defended can be the victim of aggression. Any country undefended may be such a victim.

There are two principal reasons for having a navy. The first and the most essential one is to preserve the peace. It is just common sense to realize that no power or combination of powers will incur the sacrifice and the expense of attempting to invade the United States if that power or combination of powers knows that the United States has a navy strong enough to keep an invading force away from the shores of the United States or away from the shores of the western continent. As long as we have such a navy, I believe we will be reasonably safe from invasion. Without such a navy we are incurring a risk which we have no right to incur.

But suppose, after all, and with all of our preparation, another nation or a combination of nations should be so unwise as to decide to attack this country for any one of the purposes for which aggressor nations do attack. One of such purposes would be, of course, to obtain additional territory on the western continent, territory which they could exploit and which would furnish them with markets. That has always been one of the purposes of conquest, and recent history shows that it is becoming increasingly so. If they should be so unwise as to attack the United States, even though we are prepared, then the second reason for having a navy becomes obvious. Our Navy then becomes an instrument which will destroy the enemy navy and keep the attempted invasion of the United States or of the Western Hemisphere from becoming a success. I include the Western Hemisphere, because the safety of that hemisphere is an essential part of the security of the United States itself.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. As a member of the committee, and after listening to the chairman of the committee, the question arises in my mind as to the numerical strength of the Navy at the completion of this program. Does the gentleman know what that will be?

Mr. MOTT. It will be a little less than 5–5–3.

Mr. HAWKS. No; I mean the personnel of our own Navy, the number of men, the number of sailors.

Mr. MOTT. I could not tell the gentleman offhand without consulting the figures, the exact number of additional sailors or the total personnel which will be required for the increase provided in this bill, but it will have to be sufficient to man the increased number of naval vessels. The exact figures on this point are in the testimony and are included as a part of the printed hearings.

Mr. HAWKS. Would the manning of the vessels be up to wartime strength?

Mr. MOTT. The manning of vessels in peacetime is not with a wartime complement. It is considerably under that. The suggestion has been made that, for the purpose of training, a personnel approximating wartime strength should be used on the ships, but that has never been done to date. In an emergency the personnel would be brought up to wartime strength through employment of the Naval Reserve and through enlistments.

Mr. HAWKS. Does the committee have the figures on the personnel?

Mr. MOTT. The committee does have the figures and the gentleman will find them in the printed hearings.

These are the sole purposes of the Navy. Everyone should be able to agree that it is desirable to have a Naval Establishment strong enough to prevent war insofar as it is possible to prevent war at all, and strong enough, in event war should come, to bring the war to a successful and a speedy conclusion. That is all the Naval Affairs Committee has tried to do in presenting this bill and in asking for its favorable consideration. I believe it will pass with practically no opposition. all that the people of the United States want.

I repeat that it is a compliment to everyone concerned that this bill, as it is now presented, comes in with so little opposition. I believe it will pass with practically no opposition. Its enactment will give the United States at least an adequate defensive Navy; and that, in my opinion, is the best, the cheapest, and the surest guaranty against war. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in common with other members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I believe it might be well for me to say a word, as it would for the other members of the committee, in respect to one of the most important pieces of legislation we have before us this year. Of course, we all understand the conditions which are worldwide today and require us to give attention to our defense program. I do not know of any other committee of the House that has given more time and more serious thought and consideration to the work before it than the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House has given over the last 4 years.

We must always keep in mind that the real reason we, as representatives of this committee, are today recommending this program of expansion of our naval facilities is that over a period of nearly 20 years we have absolutely neglected building up the naval defenses of the United States. Not a battleship has been commissioned since 1923. In 1922 we had the so-called Washington Conference, at which the representatives of the great naval powers of the world were seated around the table trying to find some way by which we could bring about disarmament among the naval powers in order to stop the ruination and chaos which would surely have followed in the wake of the tremendous programs then going on among those naval powers. As a result of this conference the United States scrapped 28 battleships on which the American people had already spent over $180,000,000. We were actuated by a spirit of good will and a spirit of better understanding. That was the purpose for which the conference was called, and a great good came out of it.

Shortly thereafter one of the nations began to expand its cruiser facilities. This necessitated later the calling of the so-called London Naval Conference of 1930, which put a limitation upon all types of combatant ships. Everything went along pretty well until 1936, when we found that one of the signatories to the agreement withdrew altogether and gave notice that it would be no longer a party to the 1922 or the 1930 agreements. The result was that other parties to the agreement withdrew, and all of them except the United States embarked on a program of naval expansion. We then had to give consideration to the question of expanding our own naval facilities. There was nothing else the United States could do because, after all, we in the United States have twice the coast line to defend than has any other nation in the world.

If we are to be able to defend adequately the coast line of the United States, which as I have stated is twice as long as any other defense coast line of any other nation in the world, then it is time for us to get busy and build the Navy of the United States up to a standard which will bring about adequate defense of the continent and also our insular possessions. So we are here today for the second time in a period of 3 years advocating and asking you to authorize a further expansion of our naval facilities 10 percent above the present authorized strength of the Navy. In 1938 we authorized an increase of 20 percent over the then prevailing strength of the Navy of the country. We believe that the committee has done a very exceptional job. Those of us who have given a good deal of time to a study of the bill know that the original bill called for an expenditure of $1,100,000,000 for combatant ships. After a most careful study and after listening for many, many days, running into weeks, to the naval experts and others who are interested, we brought the bill down from $1,100,000,000 to $550,000,000 for combatant ships, and as a result of further study we now have it down to less than $400,000,000 for combatant ships. We have gone from a 5-year program down to a 2-year program with the sole objective in mind of holding a check on the naval authorizations and, necessarily, the expenditures for naval purposes which will naturally follow this bill.

We are all mindful, of course, that a program of this kind is going to cost a lot of money. We well understand the financial condition in which the country finds itself at the present time, but we have made up our minds that in view of the uncertainty that is existing throughout the world today, that in order to adequately defend our possessions and this great democracy of ours we must support this bill and recommend it for passage to the Members of the House.

As a member of the committee I have given a great deal of thought and study to it, along with other members of the committee, and I want to compliment the very excellent and patient chairman we have who has been so tolerant of our critical analyses of some parts of the bill, and who has borne with us. We feel today that we are recommending a bill that will stand the test of criticism, and in conjunction with other members of the committee I trust it will pass this House. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FADDIS.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been so thoroughly discussed from a technical viewpoint by the members of the committee and so ably presented to the House by the members of the committee that I feel that I can add nothing of value which is strictly pertaining to the bill. I particularly want to congratulate the members of the committee on the intimate acquaintanceship they have shown with all the details contained in the bill and also their intimate knowledge connected with the naval operations in which this country has engaged throughout the past 50 or 60 years. Mr. Chairman, I want to touch upon a subject today which has to do with our position in the world as a whole, and I want to state at the outset that I do not wish my remarks to be construed as any argument for a policy of imperialism. I am not advocating any policy of imperialism, but I merely want to call the attention of the committee and the country as a whole some of the facts connected with our commerce in the Far East. I do so with considerable hesitation and wish it to be distinctly understood that the ideas I express are my own and that they do not insofar as I know represent the ideas of any other individual or of any department, bureau, or organization connected with our Government. I make them solely upon my own individual responsibility as a Member of Congress and in accordance with what I believe to be my duty as a public official.

Our naval policy, is, of course, regulated by the demands, either actual or potential, which it may be called upon to meet. We do not desire a navy to further any imperialistic policy, but at the same time, we must have one sufficiently powerful to protect our economic and social interests if, when, or where the need may arise. No one can say for certain when the need may arise or that it will ever arise. Neither can anyone say for certain that the need will not arise.

During the consideration of the recent naval-appropriation bill and the question of the proposed harbor improvements on the island of Guam, it seemed to me as though there was some misunderstanding regarding the importance of our commerce with the Far East, and the large percent of our strategic materials which we secure from this quarter of the globe.

Of 20 strategic raw materials, necessary to our industrial and commercial life in time of peace and essential to our national defense in time of war, our principal source of 8 of them is from the Far East. These raw materials come from an area which embraces southern Japan, southern China, Siam, Burma, eastern India, the Malay Peninsula, Sumatra, Java, western New Guinea, the Celebes, and the Philippine Islands. This area normally produces 100 percent of the world's supply of manila fiber, 95 percent of the rubber, 95 percent of the quinine, 80 percent of the silk, 75 percent of the mica, 70 percent of the tin, 60 percent of the tungsten, and 30 percent of the antimony. The United States normally consumes 30 percent of this manila fiber, or 30 percent of the world's supply; 60 percent of this rubber, or 59 percent of the world's supply; 25 percent of this quinine, 75 percent of this silk, 30 percent of this mica, 45 percent of this tin, 30 percent of this tungsten supply, and 50 percent of this antimony. The above, let me repeat, is the proportion of our supply of these strategic and essential materials which comes from this sector of the world alone.

From the foregoing it can easily be seen that one of our most important commercial life lines stretches to the Far East. If this life line should be permanently cut, or its operation interrupted for even 6 months, our economic system would be seriously disrupted. Rubber and tin are the mainstays of two of our most important industries and there is no substitute for either of them.

Our automobile industry depends upon both of these commodities for its existence. We must have rubber for tires and tin for bearings. Besides there are many other uses in automobiles for both of these materials. Can you imagine the state of affairs in this Nation if we could not procure rubber? Millions of people would be thrown out of employment by the shut-down of the industry and the allied industries which lean on it for support. Without the automobile our transportation systems would be so overloaded as to be unable to care for the demands made upon them. Our airplanes would be unable to operate. The use of thousands of domestic and personal articles made of rubber would cease. Commerce would be paralyzed. The use of cotton in fabric for tires and upholstering for automobiles would be seriously curtailed. The disastrous effects, which would result from the cutting off or curtailing of our supply of rubber are too numerous to mention.

Now, as to tin. I need not recount the various uses for the products of our mills which produce tin plate. They also are too numerous to mention. Many thousands of workers live from the proceeds of this industry. Let us consider the magnitude of our canning industry and what its interruption for only 1 year would mean to every rural section of this Nation. Thousands of farmers and their help would be deprived of an income. Fruit and vegetables in quantities beyond belief would spoil and decay. Millions of people would suffer from hunger. Our social and economic system would be thrown into a state of chaos if we were deprived of either rubber or tin. We would plunge at once into the abyss of a depression, the like of which we have never experienced.

Now I realize that there are many interests in this Nation which believe that we should pull out of the east entirely. They are too often influenced by purely local or temporary considerations and do not look at the broad viewpoint or the long-range program. Of course there are those who believe in isolation and make light of the importance of our foreign trade. They are our timid souls who fear involvement in war if we undertake to protect our trade. Then there are those who object to the competition of certain products from the Philippine Islands. These two forces are insistent upon our withdrawal from the east and oppose the proposed improvement to our island of Guam. They fear any attempt to strengthen Guam may be a prelude to retaining control of the Philippines.

They give as their reasons for opposing any improvements on Guam that it may offend the Japanese and that it would be of no value, since it is situated so near to the Japanese mandated islands. Now, both of these objections are farfetched. In the first place, Guam is our territory. We are perfectly within our rights in doing as we please with it. If Japan has no intention of interfering with our commerce or commercial rights in the east, she should not resent such action upon our part. Even if we should convert the island into a Singapore, it is no threat to her. Fortifications are not offensive weapons. They are fixed and placed and cannot be used for invasion. They are strictly nonaggressive weapons. We have never objected to the Japanese fortifying any of their territory and if they have an easy conscience, they cannot object to similar actions on our part. Are we a Nation of men or a Nation of mice? Our consideration for our national interests should be the only consideration.

Now, as to the argument that any attempt to strengthen Guam would be foolish because of its position and distance from our shores. Such argument presupposes that amateur strategists know more about such matters than the experts who have recommended the move. Guam lies directly on our route to this section of the world from which we draw our rubber and tin.

It is the duty of the Navy to protect our national interests wherever they may appear. If protection in the Far East should be necessary, we will expect it to be capable of operating in that vicinity. If we are to expect it to operate successfully in the east, we must give it every possible assistance to do so.

It is all very well to say that we have had no trouble in that quarter of the globe so far, and that we may never have. That is true, but also we may have. If we prepare for trouble and do not have it, we will have lost money. If we have trouble and are not prepared for it, we shall have lost our trade. So far in our history the British Navy has policed this area. That has been our protection, but there is no assurance that such a state of affairs will continue. In fact, there are many indications that it will not. Such a flar-flung and heterogeneous empire as the British Empire must in time break up. It seems very likely that this will occur soon, regardless of the outcome of the present war. There is also a grave doubt regarding the outcome of the present war. We hope it will terminate favorably for the British and their allies, but as to that no one can say. If it does not, we must not be caught in a defenseless position. We must be prepared to protect our commerce.

Now, let us look at some of the influences which may disturb the present state of affairs in the Far East. The Dutch East Indies are insecurely held by Holland. They have been protected by the British Navy for the last century. They are rich in oil, rubber, tin, and many other valuable commodities. Two great nations, Japan and Russia, both of which have imperialistic designs upon any territory which they believe they can acquire by conquest, have their eyes upon southern Asia. They have long been antagonistic toward each other, but with the passing of the years and the intervention of a mutual friend, Germany, have been drawn closer together. These three nations are ambitious to control the commerce of the world. They are endeavoring to bring about a situation wherein no nation can either buy or sell in any of the markets of the world without paying tribute to one of them. They each plan to effect an internal economic, social, and political set-up which will produce commodities for the markets of the world at a price so low that it will not produce enough profit to permit the purchase of raw materials in the world's market at the world price. In order to make this plan a success they must therefore own the sources of the raw material and enslave the population of these regions in order to make them produce the raw materials for nothing. If this plan succeeds, the standard of living of the democratic nations will be driven down to rock bottom and the wages of their workingmen to the level of those of the peon and the coolie.

Japan must pull out of China. The conquest has not brought in enough revenue to justify the expense and her economic system cannot stand the strain. It is becoming more and more doubtful, every day, if even a long-range program of exploitation of China will be profitable. Soaring prices are beginning to have an undesirable effect on her already underfed and undernourished population. This is beginning to bring dangerous thoughts into the minds of the masses. These thoughts, if they continue to multiply, will bring disaster to the military party, which is not going to willingly surrender its power. Japan must do something to retrieve her failing fortunes and prevent dangerous inflation of her currency. She is preparing to pull out of the interior of China but will probably hold the main ports to collect customs until the Chinese become strong enough to drive her out entirely. This they cannot do until they build a navy or have foreign assistance.

In order to recuperate, Japan must turn her eyes to fields of easier and more remunerative conquest. She must have not only markets but supplies of raw materials which will bring in cash—gold. The yen is inflated to the limit. It must be reinforced. She is badly in need of modern fuel—gasoline and oil. Where, now, can Japan the most easily secure this fuel and the commodities which she can sell for cash? In Mexico, South America, or Central America? Obviously not. The Monroe Doctrine forbids. Which nation possesses the most of the much desired gold? The United States, of course. What are the commodities which we lack, and which we need the most? Tin and rubber. Where can they be obtained? In the Dutch East Indies. Is there anything standing between her and her desire? At the present time nothing very substantial—unless it be forces from this hemisphere—the British Navy is busy in Europe.

Another force is also looking to this quarter of the globe. Russia has long looked with greedy eyes to the warmer lands under the British flag to the south of Siberia. Here they could produce cotton, silk, rubber, tropical fruits, and almost everything needed to make the Soviet Empire self-sufficient. Stalin yearns for the collapse of the British Empire, in order that he may dominate Asia. The Khyber Pass may yet be forced. We must not get the idea that the world is static. It is not. Dynamic forces are on the march. From time immemorial, ceaseless demands have been made for a redistribution of the resources of the world, under the threat of war. Nations have risen and fallen. Cycle after cycle has been completed.

I believe that the totalitarian nations, Germany, Russia, and Japan, have agreed upon a division of what they consider the readily available desirable territory of the world. Germany is to have Denmark, middle and southern Europe; Russia is to have British India, Siam, French Indochina, and the Malay Peninsula; Japan is to have Manchukuo, the ports of China, and all the islands to the east and southeast of Asia.

In case these events take place, we will be in a position where we will be unable to sell a bale of cotton, a bar of steel, a bushel of wheat, a yard of cloth, a pound of lard or any other commodity in any market controlled by any of these nations without paying tribute to them. Worse yet, we will be forced to pay them their own price for those commodities over which they have control, many of which are essential to our economic existence. Where, then, will our commerce be? Where will our standard of living be? Where will western civilization, democracy, and Christianity be? Where will the United States of America be? [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I favor the building of an adequate Navy and also the authorization carried in this bill for additions to our Navy. We are dependent, as is a diver, upon our life line, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] just pointed out, and there are some vitally necessary supplies which we must yet obtain from overseas.

It may appear strange that one like myself from so far into the interior of the country would take a special interest in naval bills. I do this not only because I am concerned, as is every other Member, with the problem of national defense, and wish to place our first line of defense far out at sea so that no enemy may ever set foot on our soil, but I also want to maintain those vital connections with the other countries of the world for our strategic and indispensable supplies. So long as there are indispensable supplies which we cannot produce ourselves and must get from distant countries, just so long will that fact be a determining factor in the size and strength of our Navy.

In my judgment, the committee has done well to reduce this bill in all items but one, for in these critical times we must build adequately, and yet in these days of great indebtedness we must not overbuild. Of course, we must not let ourselves be cut off from such supplies as rubber and tin. However, if I had my way, we would develop our own supplies of every kind of strategic material which it is at all possible and feasible to produce at home.

Take, for instance, such a strategic material as manganese, which is absolutely necessary for us both in wartime and in peace. The record will show that I have worked earnestly to provide for the necessary stock pile of these strategic minerals, even though the emergency required us to procure them from abroad. But I have been just as anxious to develop our own production as fast as possible. Let me remind the Members that it was in a naval bill passed in 1937 when the first successful effort was made to get through an appropriation for the laying in of a stock of the strategic minerals. It seems to me that wisdom requires this twofold effort for our adequate defense; that is, maintaining our connection with the foreign source of supply as long as it is necessary and at the same time developing our home source of supply. Both of these are very important.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. JEFFRIES].

Mr. JEFFRIES. Mr. Chairman, I am only a baby in this wonderful organization, and I deem it a great privilege today of having had the opportunity to serve on this wonderful committee. I, too, would pay my compliment to the chairman and the members of this committee upon their approach to this great problem. I live by the sea. My people before me, even down to my brother and myself, have lived in ships. The great State from which I come pays into the Treasury of our Federal Government two-hundred-million-and-odd dollars per year, and receives back in benefits just a little over $100,000,000. It is an industrial State, and some of the most vital industries to the welfare of this Nation are in that State. We definitely believe that our Navy should be sufficient to render us complete defense. In my approach to this subject I believe that America is single unto herself. I do not think that any of the powers or nations or peoples of Europe or of Asia understand America; nor do I believe that we, the people of the United States, understand the people of the rest of the world. We have had our experiences. We involved ourselves before and got away from the traditions of our forefathers. We had the experience of the World War. We won the war, sure, until finally we discovered that we lost it. I like to look at this matter from a strictly selfish viewpoint. I like to feel that the people of this country—the greatest of all on the face of the earth—have a right to do as we please in the defense and protection of America, and I get awfully sick and tired of hearing the arguments pro and con about what this nation will think or that nation will say.

The situation is somewhat similar to a boxer down here at the arena. Last night I had the privilege of looking at a good boxing match down there. One of the contenders had a great left, and he knew how to stick it out and throw his opponent off balance, and eventually he was able to score enough blows so that he gained the decision. That looks like America to me. We need our Navy. It is our left. I like to feel that we as a nation will tell the world that we will build a navy to suit our own ideas and our own dreams and for our own protection and to suit our pocketbook, and as soon as we can get our house in order financially, and are in such position that we can afford to build two navies, I shall vote for two navies, and I will not take any odds from anybody else when I do vote for two navies. That is the reason why today I felt a little perturbed, and felt that I would have to put myself down here in this pit for the first time. I want to tell the whole of the Nation the fact that I am proud that our committee has done such a wonderful job—impartial, nonpolitical. We have approached this subject honestly for the defense of America and I would like to see us spend all of our money in creating our defense, and being ready to tell the world to mind its own business, and we will mind ours, and let them come over and try to start trouble if they will, because we will be able to defeat the whole world if they want to try it. [Applause.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I favor adequate appropriations for our national defense, appropriations to properly defend America, but not to prepare for intervention in foreign wars in foreign lands. It was Abraham Lincoln who said, after pointing out our geographical location, that the danger to America would come from within and not from without. I believe the real danger to America is from within, and that danger lies in our continuing annual deficits of several billion dollars for many years and our rapidly mounting, staggering, stupendous national debt, which has already passed the $42,000,000,000 mark.

Let us not become extravagant with reference to expenditures in the name of national defense and help pile onto our Federal Government deficits and national debt an additional burden which may result in the destruction of our beloved country from within, as a result of Federal bankruptcy and resulting devastating inflation. Anyone who has studied the history of the world knows that a loose fiscal policy such as the New Deal has followed for 7 long years will inevitably plunge the United States of America into bankruptcy and inflation, with resulting misery, suffering, distress, and despair second only to a major war of invasion.

I intend to offer an amendment to this bill, and so that the Members may have an opportunity to know about this amendment, so that they can be prepared to vote on it, I shall read it now. This is an amendment offered in behalf of our American national defense.

This amendment proposes to add after the period at the end of line 15, on page 3, the following proviso:

Provided, That no foreign government shall directly or indirectly be permitted to purchase or acquire any type of aircraft or equipment herein authorized, or obtain secret information with reference thereto.

Mr. Chairman, we noted in the press several months ago that a representative of the French Government was found to be riding a Douglas bomber which cracked up; one of our latest Douglas bombers which had been produced and perfected for our own American national defense.

We find in the Washington Star of yesterday, March 11, a headline, "Army May Release 400-M. P. H. Planes for Sale to Allies":

New American-made fighting planes which travel 400 miles an hour may yet salute soldiers on the western front. Aircraft trade circles heard today that the War Department was considering releasing for sale to France and Great Britain one of its latest models—possibly the Curtiss P-40.

Mr. Chairman, the history of the nations of the world, including recent history, reveals that a friendly country today may be an enemy tomorrow, or be under the control of an unfriendly country. If you were to arm yourself with a pistol to defend yourself from a second-story porch climber you would not provide that porch climber with the same kind of a weapon with which to greet you.

I do not believe, when we are spending billions of dollars for our national defense that any foreign country should be given the secrets of our latest inventions and secrets with reference to the latest improved implements of our national defense.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the country will be very interested in a remarkable situation which has recently developed. We know that in the interest of national defense our overburdened taxpayers have expended many millions of dollars in the way of subsidies to build up our American merchant marine, which is as essential to an adequate and proper national defense as are cruisers, battleships, aircraft carriers, airplanes, and so forth. Many of us who followed our New Deal brethren in 1917 and went overseas to help them make the world safe for democracy, found out that we had to travel in foreign bottoms. I know our outfit did. Is it not rather startling that after all of these expenditures to subsidize and build up our own American merchant marine, to find our multimillionaire New Deal Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, going abroad on a Government mission and not using an American-flag ship, but sailing on the ship of a foreign nation? What else do we find today? We know that there are more than 11,000,000 of our people who are unable to find jobs, even after 7 long years of this wonderful New Deal, which has almost plunged our country into bankruptcy. More than 11,000,000 of our American people who cannot find jobs, who are looking for jobs, and want jobs. Included in those 11,000,000 are many unemployed tailors, many unemployed workers in the textile mills, and many unemployed butlers and valets.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding these facts, we find that the press this morning contains the following article:

LONDON ACCLAIMS "BRITON" WELLES

LONDON, March 11.—The United States Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles "wears his perfectly cut blue suit like an Englishman, talks like an Englishman, with no trace of an American accent, and behaves as an Englishman would like to behave," the Evening News said today.

Quoting further:

A later dispatch from John O'Donnell, Washington newspaperman accompanying the Under Secretary, said that Welles went out this afternoon and ordered six suits from a West End (London) tailor.

Mr. Chairman, this is not very good news for the millions of unemployed in America, including unemployed tailors and unemployed persons who formerly worked in the textile mills, manufacturing cloth to be made into suits by tailors.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. THILL. Is it true that the Under Secretary of State, Sumner Welles, employs a valet who is a British subject?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is absolutely true. This multimillionaire New Deal Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, who goes abroad on a Government mission in a foreign boat and who purchased six suits from a foreign London tailor, also carries with him a foreign valet who is a British subject, and his name is Mr. Riggs. Mr. Welles had to leave Mr. Riggs in Switzerland when he went into Germany because Mr. Riggs was a British subject and not an American citizen.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I sincerely hope that when our multimillionaire New Deal Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, who, the London papers say, wears his clothes like an Englishman, talks like an Englishman without trace of an American accent, and buys his suits from a London tailor, returns to America from the mission upon which the New Deal "Fuehrer" in the White House sent him [laughter], he will not put on those English clothes which are pressed and kept in order by his British valet, and ask that we sing God Save the King instead of My Country 'Tis of Thee.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. What is Mr. Welles doing in Europe and England?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, he is no doubt pussyfooting around, no doubt trying to make some secret agreements as did our Democratic brethren prior to our entrance in the other World War. When we remember that we have more than 11,000,000 unemployed American citizens we should require that Mr. Welles, when on a Government mission, should travel in boats flying our American flag, should purchase American clothes, the cloth of which is produced in American textile mills by American workers and made into suits by American tailors. Our multimillionaire New Deal Under Secretary of State, Mr. Welles, apparently forgets that the 11,000,000 unemployed in our country include many tailors, valets, textile workers, and seamen.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am pleased to yield to the able and distinguished lady.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Too often we find that men who go to Europe to represent Uncle Sam lose their shirts. Probably this wandering gentleman is no exception to the rule.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Perhaps he lost his coat, vest, and pants, as well as his shirt, and that may be his alibi for buying six British suits in London. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of Congress I regret very much to see the American people being carried off their base by hysteria for rearmament at this time. The records disclose that we are now building eight battleships and that we have appropriated money to construct two more.

When we consider the internal conditions of this country, and the world conditions, we must realize that the great powers of the world are engaged in a long and exhausting war. It will be many years, no matter what the outcome of this war, no matter which country is victorious, before any attack could be made on this country.

Under the rules of the Navy, warships are rated as obsolete after 22 years. It seems to me at this time, in view of the appropriations that have been made, in view of the money that we are now expending for naval defense construction, that we are going too far, that this expenditure is uncalled for. We know that we are $44,000,000,000 in debt. We know that we are raising $1,000,000,000 by taxation to pay the service charge on this debt. I do not believe it is good business, I do not thing it is necessary at this time, to be carried off our feet by this hysteria to rush into an immense defense program when we must realize that the ships built under this program will be obsolete before they can answer any need.

I was very much interested in the statement made by the eminent chairman of this committee to the effect that the British Empire was stronger and mightier at the close of the World War than it was at any time before. We joined with the British Empire in a fight to make the world safe for democracy. What was the spectacle of that mighty country at the close of the World War? After they fought to make the world safe for democracy they stood idly by and let the unspeakable Turks destroy Armenia and drive the Greeks into the sea at Salonika. They stood idly by and let Japan invade Manchuria. If the British were as mighty and as strong at the close of the World War as was said by our eminent chairman, still they had no spirit to carry out the ideals for which we sacrificed our blood and treasure to make the world safe for democracy. In spite of all the might of the British Empire, the policemen of the world, if you please, we have seen the very ideals for which they fought overturned, we have seen the invasion and oppression of many small countries. We saw the British stand idly by, with all her might concentrated in the Mediterraneon withdrawn, and Italy permitted to go into Ethiopia and wreck that country.

I am sure that after this war these powers will have no will to war and we shall have no use for these great defense weapons we are building. We shall have a lot of obsolete battleships on our hands. This will prove a useless expenditure. Our Navy is strong enough. Let us spend this money for some useful purpose in an effort to take care of the domestic problems of our country, rather than to spend it carrying out a program inspired by hysteria. [Applause.]

[Here the gave fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authorized composition of the United States Navy in under-age vessels as established by the act of May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 401), is hereby further increased by 218,000 tons, as follows:

(a) Aircraft carriers, 75,000 tons, making a total authorized under-age tonnage of 250,000 tons.

(b) Cruisers, 110,000 tons, making a total authorized under-age tonnage of 522,524 tons.

(c) Submarines, 33,000 tons, making a total authorized under-age tonnage of 114,956 tons: Provided, That the foregoing total tonnage for aircraft carriers, cruisers, and submarines may be varied 21,800 tons in the aggregate so long as the sum of the total tonnages of these classes as authorized herein is not exceeded: Provided further, That the terms used in this or any other act to describe vessels of designated classes shall not be understood as limited or controlled by definitions contained in any treaty which is not now in force.

Committee amendment:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "218,000" and insert in lieu thereof "167,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "75,000" and insert in lieu thereof "79,500."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the 79,500 tons.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment would strike out all of the tonnage for the aircraft carriers. Is that his purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] rise in opposition to the committee amendment?

Mr. FISH. I am in favor of my own amendment. I am not going to contest the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman's amendment is agreed to, it will put the bill back where it was.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee amendment better be disposed of first.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. If the committee amendment is agreed to, no further amendment to the number of tons shown in lines 8 and 9 would be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TABER. An amendment to that would have to be an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mine would be in the nature of an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment not having been adopted, the gentleman from New York rises in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, in view of the dilemma the gentleman from New York finds himself in as to the proper way to eliminate the committee amendment, does that not signify to the committee the wisdom of adopting the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, strike out "250,000" and insert "254,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, strike out "110,000" and insert "66,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out "522,524" and insert "479,024."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out "33,000" and insert "21,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out "114,956" and insert "102,956."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out "21,800" and insert "by 16,700."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 1, line 8, strike out all of subparagraph (a).

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation, the Navy Department recommended three additional airplane carriers and the House Naval Affairs Committee retained those three in the bill. The committee did make certain substantial cuts in other items but it left the maximum proposal for airplane carriers in the bill. As far as I have heard the debate today I find no reason for one airplane carrier even, yet the pending bill calls for three at a cost of $47,000,000 apiece. The committee has had several hours this afternoon to show the need for these airplane carriers in addition to the seven we already have. I am not so sure they can even prove the need for the seven we already have for adequate national defense. I will go along with any Member, whether Republican or Democrat, for the fullest and most adequate national defense for our own shores, but these three airplane carriers at a total of $141,000,000, and probably $6,000,000 more annually for their maintenance, are not for an adequate national defense. That goes away beyond our needs and takes us toward aggression and war in other lands. If it is the idea to prepare for foreign wars, then we need not three but three times three, but if this bill is designed for national defense, then we do not need any of these airplane carriers. Italy has no airplane carriers and is building no airplane carriers. We have five already and two about to be launched. Germany has none and is only building two.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Could those airplane carriers be used at all, assuming that we do not attempt to cross the Atlantic or the Pacific Oceans looking for war?

Mr. FISH. As I said in the beginning, I do not think we can even prove a case that we need the seven. We have five already and we have authorized two more. I do not think anybody can make out a real case that we need those seven for defensive purposes, yet we are being asked to provide three more just because the Navy said so and the committee accepts the whole quota.

Other items in the bill were cut down by the committee. In addition, as I explained this morning, we will have 8,500 airplanes, and if we did not have a navy, did not have any navy at all, just sank our Navy, the totalitarian nations could not bring over more than 500 airplanes against us by airplane carriers, yet we will have 8,500 airplanes against the 500 representing the combined strength of the dictator nations.

If you really believe in economy—and this is utterly nonpartisan and has nothing to do with one party or the other—and want to strike $143,000,000 out of this bill and still have adequate national defense here is your opportunity. The trouble with all of us is that we give lip service to economy, particularly in our home districts, but when we have a chance to strike a blow for economy and preserve our national defense at the same time we go merrily along and vote for huge expenditures for airplane carriers that are not needed.

I know my amendment probably will be defeated, but I am willing to present the facts to you and let you vote accordingly. I am not insisting on anything except that we be given a vote on this proposition to save $143,600,000 here today and not impair our national defense.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. If the Navy does not know what we need, who does?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has been here many years, and he knows that if we should follow the Navy's recommendations we would have a Navy two or three times as large as we have today. We have to cut down their estimate each time. If you are going to raise that question, the trouble is that nobody opposes these huge appropriations, not even the farmers. No one has the temerity to get up here and oppose them; yet all the Members who represent shipyards, dockyards, airplane factories, and armor-plate plants are on the floor ready to push through this kind of a naval bill because of the special interest in their own districts. I am in favor of providing any sum for necessary national defense but not one dollar to build a supernavy for aggression. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to straighten out the record as far as the facts are concerned. The gentleman who just spoke said the possible coalition of Japan, Germany, and Russia could not be any potential threat to us in the way of carriers. I want to point out that Japan has built or building 8 carriers, Germany 2, and Russia 3, which is a total of 13 against our proposed 10 if we build the 3 we are asking for in this bill.

The life line of this Nation is the Panama Canal, and we must have carriers with their airplane scouts and striking force on both sides of the Canal if we are to keep the Canal available for the fleet to pass through in case of emergency on either side.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman has just said that Japan has eight carriers built and building.

Mr. MAAS. That is right.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The records of the Navy Department show that Japan already has 11 and 2 others are already under construction, making a total of 13 for Japan.

Mr. MAAS. I believe that refers to England.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. No; Japan.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts is absolutely correct. The Naval Intelligence notified me this morning that Japan has in all 13 airplane carriers.

Mr. MAAS. That is most significant, and this information bears out an important point that is that we do not know what other nations are doing now in the way of naval construction. Their plans are very secretive. The figures I gave are the official figures of a year ago. We have no way of knowing today what these other nations are building, England or Germany or France or Japan or any of the rest of them.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me make this statement to correct the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I was given this advice this morning by the Naval Intelligence, after checking up Jane's and getting all the information, and this is the correct situation as far as the Navy knows about airplane carriers throughout the world.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for a question, I wonder why it is that the hearings on page 1720 show that Japan has eight carriers of a tonnage of 113,470.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. They are building six now.

Mr. TABER. In addition to those eight?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In addition to those 8. Let me read the statement that was given the Committee on Naval Affairs by the Naval Intelligence. Great Britain has built and building and appropriated for 15, Germany has 2, Italy none, France 4, Japan 13, and Russia 3. This is the information telephoned to my office, and it is substantiated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] who has the figures there.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from Georgia is answering the remark I made, and I should like to say that I rang up the Navy Department myself this morning and got these exact figures from them, that Japan has six built of 88,000 tons and two under construction of 44,000 tons, making a total of six. This information was given me today by the Navy Department itself.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman did not call the right place. He can get the information only from the Bureau of Intelligence.

Mr. FISH. Does it not seem a little extraordinary to the gentleman that all of a sudden today, after the committee has reported the bill, he should find this information to give to the House?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The hearings will disclose that we knew that Japan had eight carriers. The hearings disclose this fact and there is no dispute about it, and the gentleman will see that in my remarks. I said that Japan had eight carriers. After making that statement I was advised by the Navy Department that the information they have is that Japan is building six carriers in addition to those eight.

Mr. FISH. This special department of the Navy Department found that out at what time? Four o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; I got this information at 10 o'clock this morning.

All this bears out our contention of the importance of authorizing these three carriers at this time as constituting the absolute minimum expansion now immediately necessary consistent with any program of safety and security for the United States. Anything less than this will only court and invite disaster. I trust that the amendment will be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to construct such vessels, including replacements authorized by the act of March 27, 1934 (48. Stat. 503), as may be necessary to provide the total under-age composition authorized in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire or construct naval airplanes, and lighter-than-air craft, and spare parts and equipment, as may be necessary to provide and maintain the number of useful naval airplanes at a total of not more than 6,000; and the number of useful lighter-than-air craft at a total of not more than 36.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 1, strike out all of section 3 and insert:

"SEC. 3. The President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire or construct naval airplanes, and lighter-than-air craft, and spare parts and equipment, as may be necessary to provide and maintain the number of useful naval airplanes at a total of not less than 4,500, including 500 airplanes for the Naval Reserve; and the number of useful lighter-than-air craft at a total of not less than 12."

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which is at the clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of New York to the committee amendment: Strike out the word "less" and insert "more than."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: After the period at the end of the committee amendment insert: "Provided, That no foreign government shall directly or indirectly be permitted to purchase or acquire any type of aircraft or equipment herein authorized, or obtain secret information with reference thereto."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman, but the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, I did that in the hope that the gentleman might give us some more information about the Under Secretary of State.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman, and I will give him some information with reference to the rules of the House. A point of order will not lie against my amendment because it is a limitation on the authorization and is germane to the amendment which it proposes to amend.

I shall read this amendment slowly so that the Members of the Congress who are now providing for the defense of the United States of America will realize its importance from a national-defense standpoint.

Mr. Chairman, my pending amendment reads:

Provided, That no foreign government shall directly or indirectly be permitted to purchase or acquire any type of aircraft or equipment herein authorized or obtain secret information with reference thereto.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the interest of our American national defense and the welfare of our American people. We observed in the press on yesterday an Associated Press release headed, "Army May Release 400-Mile-Per-Hour Planes for Sale to Allies." Mr. Chairman, these are some of our latest and most efficient planes, developed for our own national defense. Several months ago when a Douglas bomber cracked up we found a representative of France, a foreign country, was riding in that bomber, which was a part of our national defense. I know that the Members realize that a nation may be friendly today but may be an enemy tomorrow. The history of the world, and particularly the history of the last 25 years, clearly indicates this to be a fact. Why should we furnish our latest, improved, and up-to-date fighting planes to any foreign country and run the risk of finding at some future date our own American aviators shot down by these improved and efficient American planes which are as efficient as the ones which our American aviators are flying?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The effect of the gentleman's amendment is to prohibit the sale of aircraft of any kind to any foreign government.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman read it again and let us see?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is to prohibit the sale of the type of airplanes authorized in this pending bill to foreign nations.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. All right; but wait 1 minute. This bill authorizes all types of aviation. It authorizes pursuit planes, scout planes, patrol planes, bombers, and everything.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It does.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That type of aviation is prohibited from being sold to any foreign government by the gentleman's amendment, is it not?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. My amendment is clear.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman wants to state what the amendment does?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman do that?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes. It is self-explanatory. It is an amendment to the committee amendment which is offered at page 3, providing for the construction of naval airplanes, lighter-than-air craft, and spare parts and equipment, and my amendment simply provides that—

No foreign government shall directly or indirectly be permitted to purchase or acquire any type of aircraft or equipment herein authorized or obtain secret information with reference thereto.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am willing to admit that when the gentleman's amendment states "herein authorized" the amendment is germane to this particular section, but the effect of it is to prohibit the Government from permitting any corporation or any citizen to sell any type of airplane because all types are referred to in this measure. Is not that what it does?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No; it does not do any such thing. It only refers to the naval planes and equipment, which is authorized under the amendment to which my amendment is offered.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly. The gentleman is correct about that, but what is authorized? The language is:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire or construct naval airplanes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And the language "naval airplanes" embraces what? It embraces every type devised by man. Every type of plane used is a naval plane provided it is used in the Navy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Just one moment. The authorization is for the Secretary of the Navy to acquire or construct naval airplanes to provide for our national defense. My amendment only restricts these types of naval planes to our own national defense, and aims to prohibit the peddling of planes of their type to foreign nations who might be our enemies in the future. The amendment is in the interest of our own national defense. I sincerely hope that our distinguished colleague from Georgia, in the interest of our American national defense, will accept the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, no one wants the secrets of the Navy or the Army sold to foreign governments, as was intimated in the newspaper this morning in respect to the 400-mile-an-hour planes, but that is not what the gentleman's amendment does. The gentleman's amendment proposes to prohibit the sale by any citizen of this Government to any foreign nation of any type of plane that is used in the United States Navy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, no, no. The gentleman must read my amendment again—any type of plane which the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to purchase or build under this bill; that, and that alone. Those are naval defense planes, the latest improved planes. My amendment is restrictive only as to the sale of those planes to foreign countries. Why should Uncle Sam develop and perfect the finest and most efficient planes for his own national defense and then permit foreign nations, who are potential enemies, to have the same kind of planes? To do so would be the same as providing yourself with a pistol to defend yourself from a burglar and then making certain that he is furnished with the same kind of a weapon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia withdraw his point of order?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does the proposed amendment prohibit the sale of planes of the type that are provided for here?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; exactly.

Mr. TABER. There would be some sense in prohibiting the turning over to a foreign government planes of the current design.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I agree with that, and I grant the gentleman is correct.

Mr. TABER. That our Government is putting in an order for, but I cannot see how we can go so far as to prohibit the sale of planes of the same type. That would mean that our manufacturers could not sell a pursuit plane.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. Or a bomber.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. Regardless of whether it was according to Government plans or not. That is the trouble about that amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The President of the United States is hereby further authorized to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of 125,000 tons of auxiliary vessels of such size, types, and design as he may consider best suited for the purposes of national defense.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, beginning in line 18, strike out "125,000" and insert "75,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, which purposes shall include essential equipment and facilities at navy yards for building any ship or ships herein or heretofore authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, which purposes shall include, in addition to shipbuilding ways and shipbuilding docks at the navy yards at Portsmouth, N. H.; Philadelphia, Pa.; and Norfolk, Va.; essential equipment and facilities at naval establishments for building and equipping any ship or ships herein or heretofore authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. RAYBURN having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LEAVY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8026) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 390, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 78 and noes 7.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 305, nays 37, not voting 88, as follows:

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Texas, Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON, is detained in Texas because of a recent death in his family.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MYERS, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SACKS, have been detained from the House. If present, they would have voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCGREGOR, was called away this afternoon. Had he been present, he would have voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. VOORHIS of California was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (Rept. No. 1761) for printing under the rule:

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 424

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7079, a bill to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a brief statement on the services of the United States Engineers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a radio speech delivered by myself on March 6, 1940, entitled "Ten Million Forgotten Men."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper editorial from the Milwaukee Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Colorado whether he expects to bring up the judgeship bill on Thursday?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It has not been decided definitely as yet. I think there may be some possibility that it may be called up tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House will indulge the Chair, the Chair will state that the bill will not be called up tomorrow. The Chair has conferred with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and the intention is to take up the legislative bill tomorrow. If the legislative bill is finished tomorrow, the judgeship bill will be called up on Thursday. If the legislative bill goes over into Thursday, the other bill will be called up on Friday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

STREAM POLLUTION CONTROL—APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 685), an act to create a division of water pollution control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, with House amendments, insist upon the House amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may be in error, but were not conferees appointed the other day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that that was not done.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MANSFIELD, GAVAGAN, DEROUEN, SEGER, and CARTER.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very interesting letter I received from Commissioner Long, tax commissioner of Massachusetts, on the local tax question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and insert therein a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following resignation from committee:

MARCH 12, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which resignation is to take effect immediately.

Very truly yours,

ALBERT L. VREELAND,
Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 426

Resolved, That ROBERT K. GOODWIN, of Iowa, be, and he is hereby, elected to the following committees of the House of Representatives: Committee on the District of Columbia, Committee on Pensions, and Committee on the Territories.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] requests leave of absence from the House indefinitely, because of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MCCORMACK, for 1 week, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCRUGHAM, for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. TOLAN (at the request of Mr. HAVENNER), indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. GARRETT (at the request of Mr. POAGE), for yesterday, today, and the balance of the week, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who fillest space and time and yet transcendest all: We beseech Thee to communicate Thyself to our spirit's need and out of Thine eternity calm our hearts, bowed down beneath the shadows of our times. The world is full of sighs and tears, and men's hearts failing them for fear. With hopes and prospects rudely shattered, we ask for Thine especial blessing on those valiant ones who suffer from the inexorable power of hateful force and crushing might. Grant through faith and hope and love's transcendent dower, that they may rise to an even finer, nobler citizenship, worthy of the sons of God. Though heart and flesh may fail and all glory become as a fading flower, keep, Thou, their souls, dear Lord, in this their day of visitation. We ask it in the name of Him whose glory is the cross, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, March 12, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. SEGER, and Mr. CARTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8026) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 38), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of each part and subsequent parts of Senate Report No. 1182, submitted pursuant to Senate Resolution 71 (74th Cong.), entitled "Investigation of Railroads, Holding Companies, and Affiliated Companies," of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, 500 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and 500 copies for the use of the House document room.

DATA ON INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of costs, cancelations, and miscellaneous irrigation data pertaining to Indian irrigation projects for the fiscal year 1939, which, with the accompanying statement, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COMPANIES ISSUING FACE-AMOUNT INSTALLMENT CERTIFICATES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, transmitting a report on companies issuing face-amount installment certificates, supplementing the Commission's over-all report on its study of investment trusts and investment companies, made pursuant to law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at the seventh anniversary of the A. A. A. farm-program dinner held at Jeffers, Cottonwood County, Minn., favoring necessary appropriations to continue the operation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, including parity payments and commodity loan and surplus removal funds, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a meeting of stockholders of the local farm-loan association at Darlington, S. C., protesting against the proposed transfer of the Farm Credit Administration to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Polish Literary Guild of New Britain, Conn., favoring the granting of relief to the people of Poland suffering as a result of the invasion of that country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition, signed by Fred C. Wagner, chairman, Seventeenth Congressional District Townsend Clubs, Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the enactment of House bill 7447, providing for Federal aid in the construction of a T-tunnel project at San Pedro Harbor, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLT presented a memorial of 2,000 citizens of West Virginia, remonstrating against the levying of new processing taxes on bread, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of members of Local No. 2, W. P. A. Workers Organizing Committee, and Labor's Non-Partisan League, of Cabell County, Huntington, in the State of West Virginia, praying for the elimination of the automatic furlough clause in existing law relating to those working 18 months on the W. P. A., which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the West Virginia State Federation of Labor, praying for amendment of Army and Navy appropriation bills so as to eliminate aliens from the Government service in the Canal Zone, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution of the Fairmont (W. Va.) Board of Commerce, protesting against the installation of generating equipment at Gallipolis Dam on the Ohio River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Berkeley Post, No. 14, American Legion Auxiliary, of Berkeley, W. Va., praying for the enactment of House bill 7593, the so-called World War widows' and orphans' pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of R. G. Peterson, a member of Branch No. 531, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Charleston, W. Va., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 487, the so-called postal longevity pay bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of the W. C. T. U. of Buckhannon, W. Va., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BARKLEY presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Kentucky, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Resolution 126

Resolution petitioning the Congress of the United States of America to take such steps as are necessary to cause Obion Creek to be drained as a health project from the trestle about one-half mile south of Pryorsburg, Ky., on the Illinois Central Railroad, westward through Graves and Hickman County at a point where said creek empties into the Mississippi River

Whereas by reason of erosion upon a scale that cannot be controlled by private enterprise, Obion Creek has been filled from the trestle on the Illinois Central Railroad Co.'s right-of-way about one-half mile south of Pryorsburg, Ky., westward through Graves and Hickman County to a point where said creek empties into the Mississippi River, thereby causing said creek to overflow and form slashes and ponds along the same that stand through the middle part of the summer each year, which ponds and slashes become breeding places for multiplied millions of mosquitoes that spread malaria fever over a large portion of Graves and Hickman County; and

Whereas the foreign demand for dark-fired tobacco, which is the money crop of said counties, has decreased to such an extent that the farmers along said creek and whose land will be affected by the drainage thereof are unable to incur the expense of draining said creek without practically confiscating the land so affected; and

Whereas the existence of said slashes and ponds constitutes a menace to all the people living in the surrounding territory that can be reached by the flight of mosquitoes or to which they can be brought by wind: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be petitioned to take such steps as are necessary to cause Obion Creek to be drained from the trestle on the Illinois Central Railroad right-of-way about one-half mile south of Pryorsburg, Ky., in Graves County, westward through said county and through Hickman County to a point where said creek empties into the Mississippi River as a necessary health project.

SEC. 2. That each United States Senator and Representative in the Kentucky delegation be urged to use his personal efforts to secure the action herein contemplated.

SEC. 3. That the secretary of state be directed to certify copy of this resolution to each Member of the Kentucky delegation in the Congress of the United States.

COL. BENJAMIN CHURCH MILITARY RESERVATION, R. I.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference a resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, asking that a certain military reservation in that State be named after Col. Benjamin Church.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolution requesting the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps to have the United States military reservation upon the West Main Road in the town of Little Compton, R. I., named in honor of that illustrious colonial soldier, Col. Benjamin Church

Whereas there is now located in the town of Little Compton, R. I., upon the West Main Road, a United States military reservation and, at a meeting of the Town Council of said town, held upon February 12, 1940, a vote was recorded to ask the proper authorities that the said military reservation be named in honor of the colonial soldier, Col. Benjamin Church; now, therefore, shall this general assembly record herein something of the achievement of that redoubtable Indian friend and fighter, who was one of the original proprietors of Sogkonate, upon whose title, thus conferred, now depend at law the landed interests in Little Compton.

Col. Benjamin Church, born at Plymouth, Mass., in 1639, followed the carpentry trade, journeying to many parts of Plymouth Colony. By 1674 he had bought land and was engaged in building a house at Sogkonate (Little Compton, R. I.), where he became well acquainted with the Indians and was soon in great esteem among them. Through the perils and adventures of later war he endeavored to maintain friendly relations with the neighboring Indians, was their adviser and defender and tried honestly to keep his solemn promises to them to live up to treaties. He believed that although title to lands at English law was complete by the grant of the Plymouth Colony, the Indians had moral rights and their lands should be purchased from them.

The outbreak of King Philip's War, in June 1675, found Mr. Church living on the frontier, where his first act was to dissuade Awashonks, squaw-sachem of the Sogkonate Indians, from joining the Wampanoags.

Commanding small detachments of Plymouth troops, Church fought numerous skirmishes which taught methods of Indian warfare and he was constantly urging his superior officers to pursue the enemy instead of building forts.

In the great swamp fight of December 19, 1675, near South Kingstown, R. I., he played a prominent part as captain of a Plymouth company and was twice wounded.

During the following spring and summer the troops of the United Colonies undertook the systematic destruction of the Indians' corn and the capture of the warriors with their women and children. By offering his captives their choice between slavery or fighting against their kinsmen, Church enlisted many Indians in his forces and, with their assistance, took additional prisoners, including a squaw and son of Philip.

The sachem himself, with his remaining followers, took refuge in a swamp near Mount Hope (Bristol, R. I.), where he was ambushed by Church and shot by one of Church's Indians.

During King William's and Queen Anne's wars, he served as major, and later colonel, in five expeditions against the French and Indians in Maine and Nova Scotia; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this general assembly heartily edorses the effort of the people of Little Compton, R. I., to give recognition to the accomplishments of Col. Benjamin Church, believing that he should be so honored by adding the distinction of his name to the United States military reservation upon West Main Road, in said town, and, therefore, at this time respectfully requests the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps to have this military reservation so named; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress.

RESOLUTIONS, PATRIOTIC ORDER SONS OF AMERICA (PENNSYLVANIA)

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions adopted by the State executive committee of the Patriotic Order Sons of America of the State Camp of Pennsylvania in regard to diplomatic relations of the United States with Soviet Russia, the Dies committee, subversive youth movements, and the sugarcane industry. These resolutions were adopted by the organization referred to on March 2, 1940.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to committees, as follows:

To the Committee on Foreign Relations:

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH SOVIET RUSSIA

Whereas diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union were established on the undertakings set forth in an exchange of notes dated November 16, 1933, between the President of the United States and the People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, as follows:

"EXCERPT FROM LETTER OF PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT TO MR. MAXIM M. LITVINOV, PEOPLE'S COMMISSAR FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS, UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS, NOVEMBER 16, 1933

"1. To respect scrupulously the indisputable right of the United States to order its own life within its own jurisdiction in its own way, and to refrain from interfering in any manner in the internal affairs of the United States, its Territories, or possessions.

"2. To refrain and to restrain all persons in Government service and all organizations of the Government or under its direct or indirect control, including organizations in receipt of any financial assistance from it, from any act overt or covert liable in any way whatsoever to injure the tranquillity, prosperity, order, or security of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions, and in particular from any act tending to incite or encourage armed intervention or any agitation or propaganda having as an aim the violation of the territorial integrity of the United States, its Territories, or possessions, or the bringing about by force of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions.

"3. Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which makes claim to be the Government of, or makes attempt upon the territorial integrity of the United States, its Territories, or possessions; not to form, subsidize, support, or permit on its territory military organizations or groups having the aim of armed struggle against the United States, its Territories, or possessions, and to prevent any recruiting on behalf of such organizations and groups.

"4. Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of, or the bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions"; and

Whereas the recognition of Soviet Russia has resulted in no benefit to our country and much embarrassment through its attempts to subvert our republican form of government and exchange the benefits derived from the Christian religion to the immoral possibilities of their atheistic attitude; and

Whereas evidence of a conclusive nature obtained during investigations by the Dies committee has been deemed by this committee to "constitute a violation of the treaty of recognition entered into between the Government of the United States and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1933" (p. 4, H. Rept. No. 1476, 76th Cong., 3d sess.): Be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Congress be advised that the Patriotic Order Sons of America urges that the diplomatic and consular representatives of the United States to the Soviet Union be withdrawn and the appropriations for their maintenance be discontinued.

To the Committee on the Judiciary:

DIES COMMITTEE

Whereas the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, popularly known as the Dies committee, under the competent and efficient leadership of Congressman MARTIN DIES, has furnished conclusive evidence of the existence of a vast amount of un-American activity, especially among the Communists, Fascists, and Nazis, and their sympathizers, and

Whereas concerted effort is now being made to discredit the aforesaid investigation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Patriotic Order Sons of America goes on record as approving the work done to date by this committee and lauds the patriotism of the chairman and members of the committee in bringing to light all un-American activities, particularly the penetration of Government offices by the Communists and all those who would effect a change in our form of government.

And—

SUBVERSIVE YOUTH MOVEMENT

Whereas a determined effort is being made to socialize and communize the youth of our country and for this purpose the leaders of these movements have penetrated our schools and colleges and have formed unions, councils, committees, clubs, federations, congresses, social-service clubs, work clubs, workers' schools, institutes, and collectively they often assemble in conferences and congresses; and

Whereas the result of all this is to create in the youthful mind a disrespect for the home and paternal guidance, contempt for our institutions and a hatred of religion: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Patriotic Order Sons of America condemns all subsersive youth movements and censures their guiding adults who might be better employed in the teaching of youth to love their religion, home, and country.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

SUGARCANE INDUSTRY

Whereas Pennsylvania has lost jobs and industry in recent years; and

Whereas such loss has created serious unemployment and tax burdens; and

Whereas a large part of this loss is due to the drastic decline in the Pennsylvania cane-sugar industry: Therefore be it

Resolved by the State Executive Committee, Patriotic Order Sons of America in meeting, Saturday, March 2, 1940, That the Senators and Congressmen of this State be urged to see that sugar legislation be enacted in 1940 which will stop any further loss to the local industry; such loss would arise if there are increases in the quotas for off-shore tropical refined sugar, or for the highly subsidized beet-sugar industry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2377) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, to extend its provisions to hides, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 39) extending the time for the submittal of the report of the Joint Committee on Forestry (submitted by Mr. BANKHEAD on the 4th instant), reported it without amendment.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3018. A bill to amend section 210 of the Communications Act of 1934, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1073; 47 U. S. C. 210), so as to permit communication utilities to contribute free services to the national defense (Rept. No. 1305); and

S. 3065. A bill authorizing the sale of fuel, electric current, and water at isolated naval stations (Rept. No. 1306).

Mr. WALSH also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3017. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va.," approved June 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 395), so as to permit the removal of certain encumbrances on the lands concerned (Rept. No. 1307);

S. 3456. A bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain personnel or former personnel of the United States Marine Corps for the value of personal effects destroyed as a result of a fire at Raritan Arsenal, Metuchen, N. J., on October 10, 1938 (Rept. No. 1308); and

H. R. 7081. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell certain surplus land owned by the United States in Bremerton, Wash. (Rept. No. 1309).

HEARINGS BEFORE THE FINANCE COMMITTEE ON EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 242, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. I did not understand the nature of the request made by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. The resolution provides for the printing of additional copies of the hearings on the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Mr. HATCH. It would not displace the pending business?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all. There has been such a demand for the hearings that they were exhausted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 242) submitted by Mr. HARRISON on the 11th instant was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Finance of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 400 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 3569. A bill granting a pension to Casimira Gallegos de Garcia; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. 3570. A bill to grant the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Allegheny River at Port Allegany Borough, Liberty Township, in the county of McKean, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

S. 3571. A bill to grant the consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Monongahela River, at a point between the boroughs of Elizabeth, in Elizabeth Township, and West Elizabeth, in Jefferson Township, in the county of Allegheny, and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Commerce.

(Mr. DAVIS introduced Senate bill 3572, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 3573. A bill to readjudicate the annuity of Jesse German; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 3575. A bill to make better provision for the teacher of music, the leader of the Military Academy Band; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 3576. A bill to provide for mandatory or compulsory inspection and permissive or voluntary grading of fish, fishery products, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

(Mr. WAGNER (for Mr. KING) introduced Senate bill 3577, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. TOWNSEND introduced Senate Joint Resolution 230, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

DAVID WILLS HOUSE, GETTYSBURG, PA., SHRINE TO MEMORY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am sending to the desk a bill to provide for the purchase and restoration to the original condition of the David Wills house in Gettysburg, Pa., as a perpetual shrine to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. It is needless to say that the historical importance of the David Wills house is found in the fact that here Abraham Lincoln wrote his immortal Gettysburg Address.

The house on the southeast corner of the town square on York Street, known as the David Wills house, was built in 1818 by Col. Alexander Cobean. David Wills bought the house in 1859. It was a many-windowed house, dignified and stately, and in every respect a home. In 1897, Mr. Charles S. Duncan bought the property. Mr. Duncan sold it to Mr. Schuyler A. Hammond in 1903. In 1914, Mr. Hammond sold the property to Mr. P. W. Stallsmith, the present owner.

The Wills house is a large three-story brick building, with a two-story brick structure adjoining the house on the east along York Street. The first floor of the main structure is now occupied by the retail drug firm of Rea & Derick; the second floor by the Lincoln Room Museum and a beauty salon; the third floor by the offices of the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, and the office of Mr. P. W. Stallsmith, owner of the building.

According to Mr. P. W. Stallsmith, who remodeled the interior of the building, the number of rooms in the large, original Wills house were as follows: First floor, five rooms and a large hallway; second floor, five rooms and a hallway; third floor, five rooms and a hallway. There was a large, unfinished attic. The approximate height of the building is 45 feet. The building is approximately 40 feet square. The original arch over the door at the York Street entrance has never been removed.

It was in this building that President Lincoln prepared his immortal speech. He left Washington for Gettysburg at noon on Wednesday, November 18, 1863, in a special train. The journey occupied the entire afternoon. The President was conveyed to the home of Mr. Wills, rather than to the hotel in Gettyburg because the hotel was crowded. The arrangements proved entirely satisfactory. Sometime between 9 and 10 o'clock Lincoln went to his room, accompanied only by his colored servant, William. He laid out his papers, ready to write, and then asked William to go down and ask Judge Wills to come to him. After a brief conversation with Lincoln, Judge Wills went downstairs, and for an hour he heard noth'ng from the President. About 11 o'clock William came down again and said that the President would like to see Judge Wills. President Lincoln told the judge that he would like to confer with Secretary Seward. Together they went to the Harper house next door. Mr. Lincoln carried in his hand the sheets of paper on which he had been writing. About half past 11 the President returned, the manuscript still in his hand. About midnight he lay down to sleep.

The history of the next day is so well known that I shall not attempt to narrate it here.

Mr. Everett, the orator of the day, had spoken for an hour and fifty-seven minutes, ending with a very eloquent peroration. Lincoln was nervous as the time approached for him to speak. He drew out his manuscript, adjusted his spectacles, shifted his position in his chair, and reviewed his speech. Virtually he had learned it by heart. He could have delivered it without any manuscript. Standing firmly on both feet, he held his manuscript in both hands, and glanced at it infrequently. Although he spoke very slowly, he was on his feet less than 3 minutes. Compared with Everett's oration, the President's speech seemed like almost no speech at all.

Mr. President, the historical significance of the David Wills house is assured past all controversy. It was here that Lincoln prepared the first and second drafts of the memorable address with which his name is forever identified, and, Mr. President, I wish humbly to repeat this great message:

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place of those who here gave their lives that this Nation might live. It is altogether fitting that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall have not died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce the bill and have it referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I also ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3572) to provide for the purchase and restoration to original condition of the David Wills House, Gettysburg, Pa., as a perpetual shrine to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, by purchase at a cost of $125,000 the David Wills House and property connected therewith at Gettysburg, Pa., in which house President Abraham Lincoln was entertained on November 18 and 19, 1863, and in which he wrote the world-famed Gettysburg Address; the amount of the purchase herein designated to be used,

(a) $97,500 for the building and site.

(b) $27,500 for the restoration of the building as nearly as possible to its condition as of November 18, 1863, said building to be dedicated as a perpetual shrine to the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

The administration, protection, and care of the said building and property shall be under the supervision of the Board of Directors of the Gettysburg National Military Park.

SETTLEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF ALASKA

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I ask consent to introduce a bill for that Senator providing for the settlement and development of Alaska. I also ask unanimous consent that a memorandum relative to the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3577) to provide for the settlement and development of Alaska was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

The memorandum relative to the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON ALASKAN DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION BILL

I. PURPOSES

The Alaskan Development Corporation bill seeks to accomplish three interrelated purposes:

(1) To enlist private capital in the development of Alaskan resources.

(2) To encourage the settlement in Alaska of men and women who want to make Alaska their home and who are prepared to conquer the problems of an undeveloped country.

(3) To provide an adequate mechanism of Federal control over such development and settlement, so as to guard against the dangers of unrestricted exploitation of natural and human resources.

1. Sources of capital: The amount of capital available in Alaska for industrial development is negligible. American capital has in recent years shown little interest in Alaskan development. Some of the American concerns that have invested in Alaska have been interested only in taking raw materials out of the Territory, and such investment has made little contribution to the development of Alaska. At the present time, however, there are many American citizens who are sending substantial sums abroad for the relief of victims of war and persecution. Rather than pour these funds endlessly into lands where the recipients are not allowed to earn a living, the suppliers of these donations would consider it a privilege to establish permanent sources of livelihood in a territory where some of these victims might utilize their abilities and become self-supporting. As between the Territory of Alaska and other proposed lands of refuge in Africa and South America, the attraction of the American flag appears irresistible. It is hoped that persons and organizations interested in refugee settlement may be in a position to invest considerable amounts of capital in the development of Alaska. (The total capital of all Alaskan banks at the present time is approximately $900,000.) Sums expended for the construction of homes, mills, canneries, and factories, for the improvement of land, and for the purchase of industrial and agricultural equipment would represent a permanent addition to productive capital in the Territory.

2. Character of settlers: The white population of Alaska has been almost stationary for three decades, and the practical cessation of foreign immigration under existing quota laws has removed what was in the past a principal source of new population. Even today, approximately one-third of the white population of Alaska is foreign-born. A certain number of Americans without jobs or resources drift to Alaska and intensify the winter relief problem of the Alaskan cities. Ordinarily, Americans with the capital and training that would be needed to meet the problems of Alaskan living do not have the urge to leave the United States and start life anew on the frontier. Therefore, the problem of populating Alaska depends in the first place upon encouraging foreign immigration of the proper sort under conditions which assure that immigration will make a positive contribution to the economic life of the Territory.

At the present time, immigration to the United States naturally tends toward localities where friends and relatives of the immigrants are located, where industries are established, and where the conveniences of civilized life are readily available. If, therefore, the highest type of immigrant is to be attracted to Alaska, some special incentive must be offered. The most effective possible incentive would be permission to enter Alaska in cases where because of quota limitations the immigrant could not enter the United States for many years to come.

Such immigrants, in meeting the problems of frontier life, would not be thinking of the comforts of life in the States that they had sacrificed, but in terms of the savagery and hopelessness of the conditions abroad from which they had been rescued. To such people the difficulties that seemed so fearful to some of the Matanuska settlers would appear trivial.

The proposed bill seeks to assure the highest possible type of immigration to Alaska by laying down rigid standards of physical, mental, and moral fitness, which are supplementary to existing immigration restrictions. The only immigration restrictions waived by the proposed bill, aside from quota restrictions, are the prohibitions against guaranteeing employment to immigrants and against contributing to their costs of passage.

The bill provides that with respect to at least 50 percent of the openings in any project, preference shall be given to American citizens. This provision is designed to insure against any of the proposed projects taking the appearance of foreign colonies, to assist assimilation and Americanization of the immigrants, and to guarantee that the program as a whole will, instead of depriving any Americans of jobs, actually create a substantial number of new jobs for citizens, based upon capital which would not otherwise be available for the creation of jobs on American soil.

3. Federal supervision: In this program of settlement and development, governmental control is important (a) in the interests of conservation; (b) in order to direct industrial development into lines of greatest national advantage; and (c) in order to make certain that the settlers are furnished with the equipment and materials they require for healthy living and self-support. The most effective way to accomplish these purposes appears to be through federally chartered corporations responsible to the Secretary of the Interior for the carrying out of specific undertakings with respect to the amount and type of capital investment per settler, the occupations to be pursued, the basis upon which settlers are to be selected, and other essential details of particular projects.

The bill sets forth specific limitations designed to insure that the proposed corporations will engage in enterprises, based upon the resources of Alaska, that will not compete with American industry or displace any workman in Alaska or the United States. The bill also imposes a rigid limitation upon the amount of profit that may be drawn from the Territory by stockholders and bondholders of the corporations.

The bill assures that there will be no "dumping" of penniless refugees in Alaska; that no corporation will be chartered until at least two and a half million dollars has been actually raised; that no corporate project will be authorized until the essential details of a practical course of development have been scrutinized and approved; and that no immigrant will be given a special visa until the funds are available and the plans approved to guarantee an opportunity for healthy living and ultimate self-support.

II. OPERATION OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

If the proposed bill is enacted, the first step to be taken under it would be the organization of Alaska development corporations, under section 1 of the bill. Such corporations would be chartered by the Secretary of the Interior upon a finding that the articles of incorporation conformed to all the requirements of the law (secs. 2 and 3) and that shares of stock or debentures amounting to at least $2,500,000 had been subscribed to, in good faith (sec. 4). All stock must be paid for in cash and only citizens of the United States and settlers in Alaska may hold voting stock (sec. 5).

Such corporations may engage in specified industries, based primarily upon the unused resources of Alaska (sec. 6). In addition to the usual powers of commercial corporations, these Alaska development corporations may present for the approval of the Secretary of the Interior plans for a specific settlement projects (sec. 8).

Upon the approval of such a plan, the Secretary of Labor is empowered to pass on the qualifications of prospective immigrant settlers; such as are found to be qualified may receive special visas from the appropriate consular officers, similar to student or visitor visas, and entitling the recipient to travel to Alaska and to engage in the occupations which the bill authorizes (secs. 9 and 10). Violation of the conditions of the visa is made a punishable and deportable offense (sec. 14).

Settlers admitted under special visa will not be eligible to citizenship until they have been reclassified as quota immigrants (sec. 10). Such reclassification may be authorized by the Secretary of Labor in any year when the quota assigned to the country of the settler's origin is not otherwise filled (sec. 10). Admission to citizenship, after such reclassification, discharges the conditions of the settler's special visa.

Provision is made, along the lines of the China Trade Act of 1922, for the supervision of reports and records of the Alaskan Development Corporations (sec. 11), the conduct of investigation by the Secretary of the Interior (sec. 12), and court proceedings in the event that any such corporation infringes the conditions laid down in its articles of incorporation or violates any law of the United States (sec. 12). Alaskan Development Corporations, in view of their public purpose character, are exempted from requirements of the Securities Act, and gifts and bequests to such corporations are exempted from Federal taxation, but in their operations in Alaska the proposed corporations would be subject to Territorial taxes (sec. 13).

III. ANALYSIS OF POSSIBLE OBJECTIONS

Provision has been made in the proposed legislation to overcome the following objections:

(1) That the plan would deprive Americans of jobs: The guaranty of citizen preference (sec. 8) and the restriction of corporate enterprises to noncompeting industries (sec. 3) were specially framed to overcome this objection

(2) That Alaska would be burdened with penniless refugees: The capital requirements prescribed (sec. 4), the prior scrutiny of corporate enterprises (sec. 8), the limitation of the number of special visas granted (sec. 9), and the requirement that sponsoring corporations give adequate guaranties that no settler will become a public charge (sec. 9), are designed to eliminate this danger.

(3) That immigrants would use Alaska as a stepping stone to illegal entry into the United States. Federal supervision of the affairs of these corporations and the system of special visas would make possible more effective control over immigrant settlers than is possible with respect to any other class of immigrants or nonimmigrant alien visitors under existing law. Furthermore, it should be noted that immigrants with guaranteed opportunities of livelihood in Alaska are not likely to want to become deportable aliens in the United States. Immigrants who seek to enter the United States illegally are likely to choose approaches closer to their routes of travel than Alaska—e. g., Canada, Mexico, or the West Indies.

(4) That admission to Alaska of immigrants who are not entitled to enter the United States would place Alaska in an inferior political status. In answer to this argument it should be noted that Hawaiians do not consider it a mark of inferiority that certain immigrants who are not entitled to enter continental United States may be admitted to Hawaii when the Secretary of the Interior decides that the needs of Hawaiian industry so warrant. Nor do the citizens of the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and other island possessions object to the law under which aliens in these territories may be refused admission to the United States. Neither do the inhabitants of New Haven consider themselves put in a position of inferiority when a student visa is issued restricting the bearer to attendance at Yale University.

(5) That the proposed legislation is a radical departure from past precedents. Each important feature of the proposed bill has been based upon legislation now in force. It has already been noted that the corporate features of the bill follow those of the China Trade Act.[1] The principle of according immigrants to a territory a status distinct from that of immigrants to continental United States finds ample precedent in the act of April 29, 1902,[2] section 1 of the act of February 20, 1907,[3] and section 8 of the act of January 17, 1933.[4] The granting of a quota-exempt status to immigrants whom, for reasons of national policy, we seek to encourage is supported by numerous acts conferring such special status upon immigrants from Canada and Latin America and upon immigrant ministers, teachers, students, and various other classes.[5] Likewise, there is ample precedent in existing law for making the admission of immigrants dependent upon effective guaranties by third persons that such immigrants will not become public charges.[6] The constitutionality of legislation imposing special restrictions upon the residence or occupation of immigrant aliens is clearly established.[7]

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8026) to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MINTON submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a written notice of my intention to move a suspension of the rules of the Senate in a certain particular, and I ask that the notice be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

On page 82, line 4, before the period insert a colon and the following:

"Provided further, That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937 with respect to the 1940 crop shall be withheld from any producer in the mainland cane-sugar area, because of the marketing (or processing) of sugarcane in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, if the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940: Provided, however, That payments shall be made only with respect to the proportionate share acreage established for the farm under the provisions of such act, and the following deductions shall be made from such payments on account of the excess of the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 over the proportionate share for the farm: For so much of such excess as does not exceed 25 acres, no deduction; for so much of such excess as exceeds 25 acres, but does not exceed 125 acres, a deduction of $5 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 125 acres but does not exceed 625 acres, a deduction of $10 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 625 acres but does not exceed 1,125 acres, a deduction of $15 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 1,125 acres, a deduction of $20 per acre."

Mr. ELLENDER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agriculture Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed. (For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

INVESTIGATION OF PURCHASE OF ARMS, ETC., BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama. The Chair was advised this morning by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that he desired to address the Senate, but he is not on his feet. So the Chair is compelled to recognize the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know why the Chair ought to be compelled to do so. I had the floor when the Senate recessed last evening to discuss the amendment offered by me, and I yielded to the majority leader for the purpose at that time of moving a recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator.

Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to submit a Senate resolution and ask that it may be read, and I desire to make a brief statement concerning it prior to its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 244), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report to the Senate:

(1) Whether the purchase of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, including aircraft, by foreign governments or their nationals has delayed or threatens in the future to delay the delivery of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, including aircraft, to the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

(2) What if any arms, ammunition, or implements of war, including aircraft, bomb sights, and other aircraft equipment, antiaircraft guns and devices, which prior to September 3, 1939, were considered as military or naval secrets, have been released for purchase by foreign governments or their nationals.

(3) What influence, if any, the purchase or contemplated purchase by foreign governments or their nationals of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, including aircraft, has had or may have upon the price which the United States Government has paid, or will have to pay, for its armament and rearmament requirements.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, when the Neutrality Act was under discussion at the special session I addressed the Senate on October 12, 1939. At page 322 of the RECORD there appears a statement in which I expressed apprehension regarding the effect which the modification then contemplated of the Neutrality Act and the repeal of the arms embargo might have upon the armament and rearmament program which the United States has already embarked upon, and which, I may add, it is intending to implement and further increase at this session.

In that discussion I referred to the experience we had in the World War, when the large purchase of Lee-Enfield rifles resulted in the tooling of armament factories in this country for the production of that particular type of foreign rifle, and the difficulty and embarrassment which it created when this country finally entered the war, and we desired and it was imperative that our Armies should be equipped with the then most modern type of the Springfield rifle.

Mr. President, in connection with resolution submitted by me, I wish to call attention to an article appearing in the New York Times of this morning, by Hanson W. Baldwin, a well-recognized and highly respected military expert of the New York Times, in which he points out the controversy which he alleges has arisen in the executive branch of the Government over our policy in relation to the export of arms, ammunition, implements of war, and aircraft under the amended Neutrality Act. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the article, but I ask that it may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

I also call attention to an article appearing in the Washington Post of this morning, by Mr. Felix Cotten, which is upon the same subject. I ask also to have that article printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, I am not in any position to pass judgment upon the statements contained in these articles; but I believe that the Senate, the Congress, and the country are entitled to all the facts which I have sought to bring out in the resolution I have just submitted. I express the hope that the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate will give the resolution early, careful, and I hope favorable consideration.

I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin to print at the conclusion of his speech the articles referred to by him? The Chair hears none.

The articles are as follows:

PLANE EXPORTS STIR CAPITAL TEMPEST; INQUIRY IS ORDERED—HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE TO STUDY ALLIED WAR PURCHASES AS TO EFFECT ON DEFENSE PLANS—RISE IN COST IS FEARED—COMPETITION FOR FIRST RIGHTS TO NEW MODELS REPORTED—EARLY BACKS FOREIGN SALES

(By Hanson W. Baldwin)

WASHINGTON, March 12.—A political tempest of the first magnitude, which has already manifested itself in growing differences within the administration, appeared to be brewing here tonight over the sale of United States military planes to the Allies.

Prompted by a statement by the War Department that the new Curtiss P–40 pursuit ship, powered with the Allison liquid-cooled engine, had been released for foreign sale and by reports that Allied purchasing commissions in this country expected to be able to procure even later models which have not yet been delivered to our own forces, a House subcommittee planned to discuss the question of foreign plane purchases tomorrow morning.

The decision followed several weeks of hearings before another congressional committee on the Army appropriation bill. It is understood that the effect of foreign orders on our own plane-procurement program received considerable attention and that some of the testimony of War Department officials tended to indicate that the problems of plane procurement for our own forces had been made more complex by foreign orders.

EARLY STATEMENT BACKS EXPORTS

This was disputed in a statement issued tonight by Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary, who quoted figures to show productive expansion of the aircraft industry as a result of foreign orders. He said that foreign capital was thereby aiding in developing our industry.

This afternoon, during debate on the naval-expansion bill, Representative John C. Schafer, Republican, of Wisconsin, offered an amendment to the bill which would have prevented the Government from selling planes specified in the bill to any foreign government. The amendment was overwhelmingly defeated by a viva voce vote.

The inquiry into the plane situation tomorrow morning will be conducted by the aviation subcommittee of the House Military Affairs Committee, of which Representative DOW HARTER, of Ohio, is chairman. Mr. HARTER said that he was calling his subcommittee together to discuss the sale of new American war planes and of other new arms or items of equipment to foreign governments.

Behind the differences, which stem from prospective Allied orders for an estimated additional 5,000 to 8,000 planes, costing nearly $1,000,000,000, is a disagreement as to policy. It concerns the dispute between those in the administration and in Congress who believe that the United States should do everything possible short of war to aid the Allies and those who hold that that aid should be circumspect, with the filling of our defense requirements put first.

ARMY ANY NAVY POSITION NOTED

Army and Navy officers, furthermore, want to supervise personally the foreign purchases of planes. After the President designated a special coordinating committee, which included representatives of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, as well as the Army and Navy, the last two were subordinated. Secretary Morgenthau was instructed to centralize and coordinate foreign purchases.

Under present policy it is not this committee, but the Joint Army and Navy Aeronautical Board which determines which new plane types are to be released for foreign sale and whether such sale is detrimental to national defense. Since the Aeronautical Board is responsible to the President, however, and since Mr. Morgenthau is understood to represent himself as the President's agent, only the President has retained close control over and knowledge of the foreign plane purchases.

Some Army and Navy officers are afraid, it is reported, that the large foreign purchases of planes are partially responsible for some increased plane costs, notably a large labor cost increase at the Boeing plant, and that some delays—notably in the delivery of Lockheed, Bell, and Consolidated planes—are probable. Still others are opposed to sale of our latest types of planes and equipment to foreign countries at least until such equipment is available in some quantity for our own forces.

The present flare-up has been traced to the testimony before the House Appropriations Committee of Maj. Gen. H. H. Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Corps, that $170,000,000 appropriated for the Army's plane-expansion program last year would be insufficient by $20,000,000 to $30,000,000.

NEW CURTISS PLANE GOING TO ARMY

There was no objection by the Army to the release of the Curtiss P–40 pursuit plane, powered with the new Allison engine, for foreign sale. In recent weeks, however, it was proposed that the first 25 of these ships, with the new engines, should be turned over to France, rather than to the Army. Army officers objected, and after a series of conferences they were upheld. The first 25 P–40's will go to the Army, but it is understood the next 5 will go to France. France is represented as wanting to purchase 3,000 of this type. It is understood, also, that about 375 Allison engines have been earmarked for her use.

It was learned on Saturday that the British and French missions, headed by Arthur B. Purvis, Sir Henry Self, and Col. Paul Jacquin, were interested in the procurement of even later types than the P–40 and apparently believed that they would be permitted to buy them in quantity, for delivery before July or September 1941, even though such planes have not yet been released for foreign export and have not been delivered in any quantity to our own forces.

The planes in which they are interested, according to reports here, include the P–39—the so-called Bell Aircobra, a pursuit ship powered with an Allison engine mounted behind the pilot and armed with a cannon; the P–40; the P–41, a Republic pursuit plane powered with a Pratt & Whitney engine; the P–44, also a Republic-built pursuit, powered with a Pratt & Whitney engine; the P–38 Allison-powered twin-engined interceptor; the new Douglas A–20 attack bomber, powered with two Wright Cyclones, and reputedly some new Grummann monoplane fighters now under production for the Navy.

ALLIED EFFORTS TO BUY PLANES STIR CONTROVERSY IN ADMINISTRATION

(By Felix Cotten)

Allied negotiations for purchase of $1,000,000,000 worth of military aircraft were reported yesterday to have aroused a vigorous controversy within the administration which may flare into the open in Congress.

The British and French purchasing mission, in their haste for speedy delivery of planes, it is said want their purchases given the right of way over deliveries to the American Army and Navy.

Moreover, having obtained the Army and Navy's consent to the release of the 400-mile-an-hour Curtiss pursuit ship P–40, it is said, they want also released certain other types regarded as superior to the P–40.

CONFERENCE SCHEDULED TODAY

The whole controversy, it is expected, will be discussed behind closed doors this morning by the Aviation Subcommittee of the House Military Affairs Committee. Representative HARTER (Democrat), of Ohio, chairman of the group, has called the subcommittee together to inquire into release of the P–40, but the investigation may be extended to include the Allied negotiations.

Meanwhile, the White House announced that domestic aircraft manufacturers denied Allied orders had caused an increase in cost of planes acquired by the Army and Navy, or that delivery of planes for national defense was being delayed.

Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary, told reporters foreign sales had enabled manufacturers to perfect at least three new plane models in as many sizes and had permitted them to expand and improve production facilities to such an extent that they should be able to "move forward the delivery dates on domestic military orders."

ARMY BALKS AT RELEASE

The Army is said to be unwilling to release newer plane types, about seven in number, to the Allies. Reports were that pressure was being brought to bear on Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to secure the release.

Morgenthau is liaison officer for President Roosevelt, charged with coordinating Allied purchases with domestic military and commercial needs. He has insisted that deliveries to supply domestic needs shall come first.

The question of plane prices has been a matter of controversy. Morgenthau has insisted that manufacturers had not hiked prices unduly and were not profiteering. Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, Army Air Corps Chief, is said to have told the House Military Affairs Committee recently that the high scale of prices exacted by manufacturers from the Allies was influencing domestic prices and requiring this Government to pay more for planes.

The Curtiss P–40 was released by a joint Army and Navy aeronautical board because the board felt that new pursuit planes for which arrangements have been made were much superior.

Early read figures obtained from the Treasury showing a marked expansion in production facilities by the Nation's three producers of aircraft engines of 1,000 horsepower and over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Texas if I will not lose the floor. I want to be accommodating.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not see why the Senator should lose the floor by yielding to me when he did not lose it by yielding to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is up to the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure the Chair will consider all Senators on a parity when it comes to matters of that kind. I desire only a moment. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think that is where it should go. I think, however, it calls for some conclusions rather than facts; and, under the rules, resolutions of inquiry are supposed to be restricted to facts.

Mr. President, I am gratified that this seems to be the first note of complaint about the operation of the Neutrality Act which was passed at the special session of the Congress. Senators will remember that we were warned in bitter tones that the enactment of that legislation was the first step toward war, and that if it passed, the United States inevitably would be drawn into the war now raging in Europe. I have not yet heard anybody say, "I told you so." As a matter of fact, since the enactment of that legislation not a single American ship has been sunk and, so far as I am advised, not a single American life has been lost on the high seas. The legislation has attained its objective far beyond even the most sanguine hopes of those who proposed it; so I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama be kind enough to yield to me again?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot yield now. I had no thought that we were going to have a debate on this matter. I regret not to be able to yield further.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a brief statement in connection with this subject, without its causing the Senator to lose the floor?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin—which I think ought to go, and I think has gone, to the Committee on Military Affairs—I am sure that committee will give it proper consideration; but I think at this time it should be stated that since the enactment of the Neutrality Act, as we all know by the public press, there have been considerable purchases of military equipment in the United States.

There is now in this country a mission representing the Allies which proposes to spend approximately $1,000,000,000 for aircraft, engines, planes, and equipment, to be delivered in 1941. I think the Senate will be interested in knowing what has happened and what may happen to this industry under the proposed program; and my information is—I suppose, of course, the Military Affairs Committee will give that matter consideration—that such purchases will in no way interfere with the program of the United States with respect to either its naval or its military air force.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from where his information comes?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should not care to divulge that, except to say that I make the statement after conferring with representatives of the Navy Department; and I think the same situation exists as to the War Department.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator conferred with representatives of the War Department about it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not in the last few days.

Before the beginning of these purchases the amount of space occupied in the manufacture of airplanes and air equipment in the United States was 1,872,000 square feet. With the purchases already made—this statement applies only to aircraft—the floor space occupied by these concerns is now 3,103,000 square feet. Under the proposed new program it would be increased to 4,150,000 square feet.

Prior to beginning these purchases the entire combined capacity of our factories was 7,270 engines a year. That capacity now has been increased to 19,280 engines a year; and under the new program of purchase it will be increased to 29,280 engines a year.

Prior to the beginning of these purchases there were employed in aircraft factories 8,700 men. There are now employed in them 22,350 men. Under the proposed program of purchases the number of employees will be increased to 35,000; and that does not include any indirect employment elsewhere in the country brought about by the manufacture of these airplanes.

I will say also that the foreign purchasers of the airplanes, engines, and all other airplane equipment, are paying for the expansion of the plants in the United States in which the increased output of air equipment is to be brought about. In other words, they are not only paying the price required by the American manufacturers for the airplane equipment, but they are paying in cash the cost of the expansion of all the factories in the United States engaged in the manufacture of airplane engines and air equipment with which they have or will have contracts; so that when the war shall end, under such a program as that, our own manufacturers will not suffer any loss because of having been compelled or induced to spend their own money in expanding their plants, but they will have been expanded at the expense of the foreign purchasers, and will then be available to the people of the United States and the Government of the United States for the manufacture of as many planes, engines, and other articles of aircraft equipment as our country may need. I think the Senate, and the country, ought to realize that that is the situation with respect to the expansion of the capacity of our airplane and other factories, which are making airplanes and airplane equipment.

I thank the Senator from Alabama for the courtesy he has done me in yielding.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make a slight revision in the amendment now pending. I send it to the desk and ask that it be stated, as revised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment, as proposed to be modified by the Senator from Alabama.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert, on page 7, after line 18, the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee or political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate or political party nominee for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity, and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(c) Presidential electors and the President of the United States for the purpose of this act are declared to be elective officers.

(d) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person or corporation directly or indirectly in excess of $1,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

(e) Any person who directly or indirectly contributes more than $1,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election in violation of the provisions of this section is guilty of pernicious political activity and on conviction shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not exceeding 5 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon I discussed some phases of the Hatch bill, and presented some of the objections I have to the bill. I do not intend this morning to repeat arguments and statements made about the bill yesterday if I can avoid doing so, for I have no desire to trespass unduly upon the time of the Senate, or to delay unreasonably a final vote on the bill.

I am fundamentally opposed to the amendment proposed to the Hatch law. I opposed, as my votes show, certain phases of the original law contained in section 9. When the subject covered by the law was first brought before the Senate, about 2 years ago, under the leadership of the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I voted against the passage of the bill then pending. The author of the bill knew at the time that I was opposed to it; so I am not now taking any new position on the subject. I have not changed my attitude, I have not changed my convictions, and I have found no reason, either personal, legislative, or political, to cause me to do so. I do not object to anyone changing his position if he sees fit to do so. That is a right every man possesses, and it is often the evidence of fine judgment and wisdom, and I do not claim that I have never done it, but I have not done it in this instance.

The law involves fundamental principles and the pending bill, especially, involves fundamental principles. It proposes that to go down into the States and endeavor, through the long arm of the Federal power, to take charge, in effect, of the right of franchise in the different States, to indicate who in the States can take part in elections, other than by voting and by discussing subjects.

A person covered by the language of the bill would not be allowed to discuss candidates. He could talk about weather conditions, he could talk about Hitler, although that might involve a political phase. He would be permitted, under the language of section 9, to discuss subjects. But a candidate is not a subject; a subject is an inanimate thing. We know that when one works on a job, works on a street in the city of Birmingham, we will say, where W. P. A. work is being conducted under a project, the men employed there are brought under the influence and power and condemnation of the proposed amendment of section 9 of the act, and are prevented from doing anything more than voting, according to the language of the provision, or discussing subjects. I am fundamentally opposed to any law which would bring about that sort of control, that sort of discrimination between different classes of citizens in our country, who, merely because of their unfortunate economic situation, find themselves working upon Government projects, unable to get work elsewhere, forced to take that kind of work in order to feed their families and sustain themselves. Because of their necessity, growing out of poverty, growing out of lack of employment, they are economically forced to take work to the cost of which the Government contributes some part of the funds.

Will anyone tell me that it is fair and just, merely because the Government puts up a part of the money, or even all the money, on a project of that sort, or of any kind, that in itself should be the dividing line between freedom of citizenship, on the one hand, and restrictions, the deprivation of the rights of a citizen, his freedom of action in this country, on the other? If anyone tells me that, I am bound to differ from him, no matter how much respect I may have for his purity of thought, or for his exalted idealism. I am unable to understand a doctrine of that sort. I have never understood such an attempt at discrimination under our Constitution and under our Bill of Rights, and under our declaration that all citizens are born equal. I have never understood, even if there were the strict legal right, that such a discrimination, such a division, was within the spirit of our Constitution guaranteeing the freedom of our citizenship.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Yet what the Senator has pointed out is the only thing which distinguishes between pernicious and nonpernicious activities of the great body of employees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. MINTON. The mere fact that they hold Federal jobs or State jobs is the only thing which makes their activity pernicious when, if the same identical acts were done by a member of their own family engaged in other lines of work, it would not be pernicious.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not see any particular value in my undertaking at this time to point out differences between the Hatch law and the pending bill in any respect, but it may be proper to say that, under the original law, as was stated yesterday, punishment is provided which is entirely different from the punishment provided in the new bill. In the original measure, subsection (b) of section 9, we find this provision:

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress—

As long as he lives, I will interpolate—for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Would the Senator mind indicating what the crime is a man has committed which results in him being sentenced for all of his life never to enjoy a position under the government?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Many things, such as opposition to the election of an elector on a street improvement, as I construe it, which may mean a tax on his property, if he has any; because that is a political activity, as I understand.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator understands that the Attorney General of the United States has ruled contrary to the opinion which the Senator has just expressed.

Mr. MINTON. The Attorney General only said that someone has to be elected. If someone is running for election as street commissioner, certainly the Senator's observation would apply.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would not accept as final and conclusive the view of the Attorney General. Which Attorney General was it? They are changing all the time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He is now a Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has he rendered any judgments since he went on the Supreme Court? This language does not say "election of candidates." It does not limit the activity only to the election of a candidate for office. It says that, while a person who comes under the provisions of the act may discuss subjects or may vote, he may not take any active part in a public way, because the whole theory of suppression of Government employees is based on the idea that they must withdraw from all action in connection with public affairs, and conceal from the public their views and judgments upon the same questions on which you and I and other citizens of this country have the free right to express ourselves. Mr. President, I maintain that the Government employee has not only the right to go into a ballot box and vote but to go wherever he sees fit and take part, as everyone else has the right to take part, in any sort of political activity or election.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Let me indicate to the Senator the kind of muzzle the Senator from New Mexico wants to put on those affected by this measure. This is the kind of muzzle he would put on them, because, as he says, he wants to put the civil-service muzzle on Government employees. The Civil Service Commission's interpretation of political activity is:

An employee may participate in a discussion where no political issue is involved—

Mind you, in a free country—or make an address on any moral or ethical subject—

Of course, politics is immoral and unethical—

but when two or more parties or factions become engaged in a contest for rival or antagonistic measures—

That is, speeches such as the Senator is discussing, not with respect to candidates, but measures—or policies of governmental control or regulation a political issue is created.

Then he must "close his trap."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then he must take to cover; then he must become muzzled.

Mr. MINTON. I read to the Senator from the Civil Service Commission interpretation of political activity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All my life I have heard denunciation against gag rule. I have heard denunciations upon the floor of the Senate and in the House of Representatives, the highest legislative bodies in the country, against the use of gag rule. I have heard such denunciations in other bodies operating under the rules of parliamentary procedure. I have heard them on occasions when people were not permitted to express themselves with freedom upon matters involving the public interest. If this is not gag rule sought to be imposed by persons who insist that they are advocating clean politics, I do not know what gag rule means. It is an effort to gag men and women, to shut their mouths, to deny to them the same privilege their neighbors enjoy, merely because of the difference of the source of their wages upon which they are sustained.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. What has become of our boasted amendment to the Constitution about freedom of speech? Has that also gone into the discard?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It all has gone into discard under this bill. That is the underlying thought and my fundamental objection to it. From the beginning I have insisted that this legislation should specify what activities are condemned by the law, so that the Congress itself could decide which activities are proscribed, which are denied, which constitute perniciousness, rather than leave it to an appointed board, whose decision, as has been pointed out here, may be changed from day to day. How on earth can we, as men of wide experience, expect the four or five million men and women who receive some part of their daily living out of the Federal Treasury to know with accuracy and with certainty what particular transactions and activities the Civil Service Commission in an order issued from Washington has forbidden? They would have to get the regulations down to date. They would have to find out whether any new regulations were issued yesterday with respect to the matter of political activity.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I wonder if the Senator has noticed rule 12 which the Civil Service Commission has promulgated, and which provides:

Organization or leadership of political parades is prohibited, but marching in such parades is not prohibited.

In other words, a petty Government official may march in the second line of a political parade, but he cannot march in the first line.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator read that statement again?

Mr. BROWN. This is rule 12:

Organization or leadership of political parades is prohibited, but marching in such parades is not prohibited.

If a Government official wants to march in the second line, or carry a torch, he may do so. If he happens to march in the first line of a political parade, he comes within the prohibition. He may not do that. I call the Senator's attention to that rule. The employee who violates the rule, and who happens to go into the first line instead of the second line of the political parade, is not only subject to be ousted from his job, but he is permanently barred from ever getting on the pay roll again.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In other words, if he marches where the public is likely to see him he will be punished. If he gets under cover somewhere, or perhaps behind some woman's skirts, he may safely march. That is a remarkable way to deal with the freedom of our citizenry.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator a question while he is on that particular subject. I was interested in the enumeration of rights the employee has in connection with political parades. I understand the Senator to say that the employee may carry a torch in the parade.

Mr. BROWN. He may march in the second line of the parade, and there is no prohibition with respect to carrying a torch. Probably if he carried a banner he would be taking a prominent part in a political activity.

I should like to call attention to rule 13. It must be remembered that rule 13 has the effect of statutory law. We have turned over to the Civil Service Commission the work of writing the effective portions of this law.

Among other forms of political activity which are prohibited are distribution of campaign literature, assuming political leadership, becoming prominently identified with political movements * * *.

In other words, one can take a minor part, but he must not become prominent in any political activity. It seems to me that is an indefinite rule as applied to a Government official who might want to take part in politics. What is a "prominent" part, and what is an "unprominent" part in political activity?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know that I need to make an argument here, because those who are against us will not stay and listen to us. The situation reminds me of an old primitive Baptist preacher in my section of the country who, after the war, went to Baltimore on a visit to some relatives, and while he was up there his relatives arranged for him to preach at one of the Baltimore churches. When he returned to his home he was relating his experiences in Baltimore, and he was asked how he got along with his sermon. "Oh," he said, "I got along fine the first hour, but then a good many began to leave, and after an hour and a half a lot of them were gone, and in 2 hours none of them were left but the kinfolks. You know, those folks up there can't stand sound doctrine."

Mr. President, look over yonder on the other side of the Chamber and see how few are present.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] has just handed me a clipping from a newspaper published in Philadelphia, the Philadelphia Record, of Wednesday, March 13, 1940. The Senator from Alabama, yesterday, made quite a to-do over the fact that there had been no prosecutions under what he called the Hatch Act. Of course I could have told him then of many instances of enforcement of that act, and how it is being enforced in various departments, but the clipping I have in my hand, which, as I said, was handed me by the junior Senator from Kentucky, is a news account of a W. P. A. graft case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I could not hear the last statement the Senator made. Did he use the word "graft"?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; g-r-a-f-t.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, if a grafter was caught the law against grafting would be enforced.

Mr. HATCH. Wait a moment. The Senator is a little too precipitate in his conclusion. The article deals with the extortion trial of two former Pleasantville, N. J., W. P. A. executives, which, yesterday afternoon, went to a jury of nine men and three women. The defendants were charged with levying political assessments in violation of the Hatch Act. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD in full at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of March 13, 1940]

W. P. A. GRAFT CASE GOES TO JURY—SEVEN MEN ON RELIEF TELL OF PAYING MONEY TO HOLD THEIR JOBS

The extortion trial of two former Pleasantville, N. J., W. P. A. executives went to a jury of nine men and three women yesterday afternoon. They also are charged with levying political assessments in violation of the Hatch law.

The men, George F. Dix, who was Atlantic County supervisor, and Thomas McGrath, former superintendent, were denied a directed verdict of acquittal by Federal Circuit Court Judge John R. Biggs in Camden as both sides rested their case.

DENY ASKING FUNDS

In his plea, George Maane, counsel for Dix, said:

"This is the first case of its kind in the United States for 40 years. If these men are guilty of breaking the law by receiving political contributions, then so are many national political leaders, from Postmaster James A. Farley down the line."

Maane said Dix did not accept money for his own use but acted as receiver for the Pleasantville Democratic Club. Both defendants testified they did not ask W. P. A. workers for political donations, but that contributions were made voluntarily.

SEVEN ON RELIEF TESTIFY

Seven men from the work relief rolls were put on the stand by the prosecution to refute that claim. They reported turning over sums ranging from $5 to $10 at a time "to hold their jobs." All were exempt from the 75-hour W. P. A. maximum and were permitted to work 130 hours a month at $1 an hour.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Were they convicted?

Mr. HATCH. The case has gone to the jury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, it has simply gone to the jury.

Mr. HATCH. But the Senator said there has never been a prosecution under that act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think that is a prosecution under the act, if the charge is that of graft in the collection of funds, stealing them.

Mr. HATCH. The charge is a violation of the terms of the particular act. The Senator should not beg the question. Yesterday he made a statement which is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say I do not know about that. The Senator need not get impatient about it, because he has so little evidence to show the enforcement of this law after a year that he calls attention only to one case which has gone to trial, and no verdict. I predict that a mistrial along political lines will result. The Republicans will vote one way and the Democrats will vote the other.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator think that the provision of the law which prohibits the levying of political assessments against workers is a bad one?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator asks me if I approve everything in the original act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator asked me what I approve. Let me finish the answer.

I approve what is in the original Hatch Act, all of it, except that part of section 9 following the first sentence thereof.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator answer one more question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. HATCH. When the amendment to the W. P. A. bill was before the Senate, prohibiting such activities, and assessments against W. P. A. workers, did the Senator vote for it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator asks whether or not such a provision was in the bill?

Mr. HATCH. No; when the amendment was voted on in the Senate, how did the Senator vote?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I voted only once. I do not know what was in it. I followed the leadership of my leader.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I should like to supplement the report made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] by reading a portion of the article which he did not read. The case has gone to the jury, but seven men who were on relief in the State of New Jersey were put on the stand by the prosecution, and they reported turning over sums ranging from $5 to $10 at a time to hold their jobs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Were they Federal employees?

Mr. CHANDLER. They were W. P. A. employees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In Kentucky?

Mr. CHANDLER. In New Jersey.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought the Senator was talking about Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield until I have finished the statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. I will yield for the purpose of reading the statement, but not for discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall read it. Will the Senator permit me to read the statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I read:

Seven men from the work-relief rolls were put on the stand by the prosecution to refute that claim. They reported turning over sums ranging from $5 to $10 at a time to hold their jobs. All were exempt from the 75-hour W. P. A. maximum and were permitted to work 130 hours a month at $1 an hour.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the defendants will be convicted; but the W. P. A. employees certainly had their money taken from them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not know the purpose the Senator has in mind. If he has heard my statements, he has no purpose except to try to bring this newspaper article before the Senate.

I have stated time and again that I agree with everything in the Hatch Act which tends to prevent coercion, intimidation, corruption, and all other pernicious practices. I have made that statement time and time again. Of course, I oppose, and every other Member of the Senate opposes, compulsion such as was practiced in Kentucky, which the Senate committee investigated, both by Federal officials and by State officials. I condemn such a thing wherever it is found, whoever is engaged in it, whatever candidate it may benefit, or whatever party it may be intended to help. I denounce it. I am bitterly opposed to it, and, as I have frequently stated, I will vote for any improvements to the Hatch Act which will tend to prevent corruption, intimidation, coercion, and improper and unfair economic advantage of a superior over the men under him.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The point I am making is that the proponents of the bill do not stop with that splendid program.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. In view of the statement which the Senator has just made, I confidently expect to see his vote cast on the final passage of the bill for the measure which we are now considering.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is nothing in the pending bill along the lines which I have been discussing. The bill does not deal with anybody except persons in administrative positions.

I am sorry the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has left the Chamber. He cannot stand sound doctrine.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has indicated that he would like to address some of the Members on the other side.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They will not remain in the Chamber.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Sheppard
Austin	Frazier	Lodge	Shipstead
Bailey	George	Lundeen	Smathers

Connally	Holt	Reed	White
Danaher	Hughes	Reynolds	Wiley
Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I understand that just before the quorum call the Senator from Alabama said that the Senator from New Mexico had said something and then left the Chamber without listening to the reply. I was not present, and I do not know what the Senator said. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that my remark about his voting for this bill on the final passage was said in the utmost good faith and in the utmost good humor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I took it that way, and what I said was in the same spirit. If the Senator objects to what I said, I hope he will let me withdraw it from the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I do not object to it at all; but I merely want to explain to the Senator that I was called from the floor; that my absence from the Chamber was unavoidable. I have been more or less punctual and constant in my attendance; I expect to remain on the floor, and if the Senator has anything he wants to say to me or about me or about the bill, I shall remain and listen to whatever he may have to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator knows my high regard for him; what I said was facetious and in good humor; but I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it from the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; that is all right, but I still want the Senator to know that there was not any sort of personal resentment or feeling or criticism implied by what I said.

Mr. HATCH. I understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. President, as I recall, when the quorum was called I was reading section 9, subsection (b), on the subject of punishment. I was pointing out that one group was punished one way, and the group now being brought in under the pending bill, the new group, would have a different term, it may be called, of suspension; the punishment applied to them is not for a lifetime. Under the penalty provision of subsection (b), section 9, of the original Hatch Act—

> Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

So no money appropriated by Congress can ever be used again for an offender if he should aspire to hold any other office.

The pending bill, instead of making it a life sentence, reads in this way:

> If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any office or employment—

"Any office"; not the same position. In the original Hatch Act the penalty is confined to the same position or office. Under the pending bill it spreads from one job to another throughout the entire area of the State, as I understand.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that has been changed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How does it read now; I do not wish to be unfair at all.

Mr. HATCH. The language that the Senator was reading was stricken out by the O'Mahoney amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I withdraw the last statement because I am advised by the Senator from New Mexico that the provision with reference to 18 months was stricken out by the O'Mahoney amendment. I was not aware of that.

Mr. President, there is one other phase of the bill, and that is whether or not it applies, in all its aspects, to both primaries and general elections. That is, of course, an important subject, both from the standpoint of constitutional power and from the standpoint of practical application.

Section 2 of the bill is made applicable to elections and nominations. None of the other sections specifically applies to anything but elections. On their face, both the act and the bill make a distinction by using in the alternative the words "nomination or election." That distinction is well known in common practice. When a man talks about being a candidate for the nomination he does not announce as a candidate for an election; he announces as a candidate for the primary or convention of a specified political party. So, in common usage, in common understanding, there is a clear distinction between primaries or nominations and regular general elections.

On page 2 of the pending bill employees are prohibited from using their official authority "for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President," and other specified offices to which the pending bill is applied.

Mr. President, it is clear that the pending bill, bringing within the scope of the law several million employees in the various States, counties, and subdivisions thereof, is not limited in its application to general elections or even to primary elections. It covers caucuses, it covers mass meetings, it covers conventions. So we have an infinitely wider scope of application by this bill to the new group which is being brought under the operation of the Hatch Act. I submit, Mr. President, if there is any distinction to be made, that the law should be more rigid in the case of Federal employees than in the case of municipal, county, or State employees.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Under the original act, section 9, Federal employees are under exactly the same prohibition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not so construe it.

Mr. HATCH. Section 9 contains the identical language as that in the pending bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me read section 2.

Mr. HATCH. Section 2 and section 9 are entirely two different things.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We will see about section 9.

Mr. HATCH. May I say to the Senator it has been so construed and interpreted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator says that section 9 and section 2 are the same on that subject.

Mr. HATCH. No; I did not say that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What does the Senator say?

Mr. HATCH. I said that the pending bill, insofar as it relates to those employees paid in part with Federal funds and prohibiting them from political activity, is identical with the prohibition contained in section 9 against Federal employees. The prohibition is the same as to both classes of employees as to participation in primary activities and those things the Senator has just described. Section 2 of the original act treats with an entirely different subject than either of the things the Senator is now talking about.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But section 9 condemns the activities of persons interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

Mr. HATCH. Now let the Senator read the second sentence.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. It reads:

> No officer or employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. HATCH. That is the same provision that is in the pending bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the word "nomination" is used, probably the effect would be the same.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it has been seriously asserted here—and one who reads some of the Republican newspapers might actually believe—that this is an issue between the spoilsmen and those who stand for purity in elections.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point while I make a statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I, myself, have frequently used the terms "the spoilsman" and "the spoils system."

Mr. BANKHEAD. So have others. I am not quoting the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. No; but I want to make my position clear. I have said over and over again on the floor of the Senate that I am opposed to the spoils system and, in my opinion, this bill is one step toward eliminating the spoils system. I hope later on to have the Senate take other steps, many in number and greater ones, until the final job is accomplished. I do not think this bill will do it.

I have never said—and I am now looking especially at the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]—that Senators could not honestly oppose this bill upon other grounds than a defense of the spoils system. The Senator from Virginia the other day stated that those who oppose the bill had been called spoilsmen. I said to him privately what I want to say publicly—that never, in any words I have ever uttered or any thought I have ever entertained, have I sought to cast any reflection upon the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Alabama, or any other Senator. I realize that men may honestly differ. I know that the Senator from Virginia is not a spoilsman, and I know that the Senator from Alabama is against the spoils system; but I do say that, in my opinion and my judgment, if we can do the thing we are trying to do now, we shall be striking at the spoils system because the use of patronage and the use of employees is one of the means and methods by which political machines are built up and maintained. I do think we are hitting the spoils system a blow. I want to hit the spoils system a blow, and my only regret is that the able Senator from Alabama does not see the matter as I see it, and that he is not standing on the floor of the Senate advocating with his ability, intelligence, and eloquence that which I think is for the well-being of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in a general way, without being entirely specific in my definition—because I am speaking without having heretofore considered the exact language—I understand the term "spoils system" to mean that to the victor belongs the patronage of the successful campaign—the spoils in the matter of selection of employees.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, that is only a part of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the other part?

Mr. HATCH. I have argued that matter a great many times. I have pointed out what it leads to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Corruption is not a part of any spoils system.

Mr. HATCH. I think the doctrine that "To the victor belong the spoils" is the most vicious doctrine that was ever fastened upon the American Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not asserting that doctrine here. I do not know whether Andrew Jackson said it or not.

Mr. HATCH. He did not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have seen it stated that he did not. I have seen it stated on equally good authority that he did. I am asserting that there is nothing in the pending bill which in any way touches the spoils system—not a thing on earth—and if somebody thinks there is any such thing in the bill, I want him to point it out. There is nothing in the bill but the right to discharge, except a prohibition on activity; and what has that to do with the spoils system—innocent political activity by the humble overalled worker?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The political activity of employees directed, dominated, and controlled by the boss is the meat upon which the spoils system feeds, fattens, and grows.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator must know that he has well provided in the present law—and I have commended him for it; I stand here to support it, and to support it anywhere—he has well provided in the present law, and has repeated in this bill, every protection that his great ability and ingenuity could bring to bear, every provision that associates interested in the same line of legislation could suggest to the Senator; and he has given the subject great consideration. He has included in his original law every possible protection, as I said, that he could conceive of to prevent oppression, compulsion, coercion of subordinate employees by their superiors. Are we to presume that the law in that aspect will not be enforced, but, on the other hand, presume that it will be enforced as to the little fellow?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not want to interrupt the Senator further, and I do not think I shall do so any more, because I want to get to a vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I welcome the Senator's interruptions.

Mr. HATCH. But the Senator was saying that all abuses are prohibited by the original law, which I do not think prohibits the thing to which he refers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then why does not the Senator inject it? I am ready to vote for anything that strengthens the present law.

Mr. HATCH. This bill does not go far enough. I am looking directly at the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who on the floor of the Senate last week portrayed a situation in his State which is not covered by either of the measures under discussion, but which makes every honest man almost nauseated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no State government in West Virginia, I assume. There is no power of local government or local self-administration in that State, I assume—no power to remedy outstanding evils existing either now, in the past, or in the future.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, West Virginia has local State government. But, unfortunately, at present, it is under the control of those who created West Virginia's 2-percent clubs and now operate them to the limit of possibility 24 hours a day.

To expect or hope that those who are keeping themselves in power with slush funds extorted from State employees will ever, either by edict or legislation, reform themselves or emancipate their victims would be as preposterous as to expect a pack of hungry wolves to protect a flock of helpless sheep against sudden death.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in sympathy with the local situation of the Senator from West Virginia from his standpoint. He is a great Senator, and I should like very much to see him have domination in the factional fights in his State; but the Senator has not been here to hear my remarks, or he would not be disturbed about what I have said. I have said a dozen times, and I now repeat, since the Senator does me the honor to listen, that if he can conceive of any provision that will tend to correct the evil situation of the big fellows in West Virginia, the men who are administering the law, the men who are abusing their power, the men who are coercing and intimidating State employees—and I know those are the men the Senator from West Virginia wants to reach—I will join hands with him. I hope he will be able to get them in one way or the other. I have no sort of sympathy with that sort of politics. The man I am now talking about is the one who is being imposed on. Do not further impose on him. Remove the clutches from above him, but do not shackle his feet, do not shackle his mouth, do not shackle his power to protest. Under this bill, as I construe it, he cannot even protest against what the high men in power are doing to him in West Virginia. I am trying to protect the same man that the Senator from West Virginia—God bless him—is trying to protect. I know where his heart is.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from West Virginia is not seeking any personal or political domination in West Virginia or elsewhere. He is simply striving to outlaw certain disgraceful, indefensible political practices.

If the able Senator from Alabama wishes to reach those who are higher up, and desires to annihilate the political machines which they are operating for improper purposes let him vote for the substitute which I have offered and which if enacted will deprive the generals of corruption of all political control of their private soldiers, and let him remember that no general without soldiers ever won a battle.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very likely I will vote for it. I have not read it. The Senator has a splendid purpose and if it is better than the purpose of the pending bill I should like to vote for it.

Mr. President, I wish to come now to the amendment I have presented, which prohibits pernicious political practices in the field of voluntary and uncontrolled economic activity. All of us who have had any experience in practical politics know that the greatest evil of free democratic institutions is the power of money, the power of wealth, wealth not needed for the uses of those who have it, surpluses which they use possibly for investment purposes, surpluses which they use for the election of political parties whose doctrines and sentiments and views are in line with the business and economic interests of large contributors.

Mr. President, I challenge any Senator to rise on the floor and say that the excessive use of money in an election is not a pernicious political practice, an evil practice, a practice which should be controlled by Congress if the Congress has the real will to provide for clean politics.

Oh, it is said that a W. P. A. worker who contributes $2 of his wages voluntarily and takes an active part in some sort of a political campaign must get off the pay rolls and stay off, but a man who contributes hundreds of thousands of dollars of money is left free; and for what does he contribute?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Again the senator is misconstruing the terms of the law. There is nothing in the act relating to W. P. A. workers. The prohibition against the W. P. A. workers being solicited for funds is a fine provision, but it was contained in an act passed last year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but the Senator overlooks the provision against a W. P. A. worker, or road worker, or any such laborer who is paid in whole or in part from public funds, taking any active part in politics. Giving money is an activity which is not permitted under the law, and the Senator said contributions to political campaigns were condemned, and were wrong, as I understood him.

Mr. HATCH. Voluntary contributions are condemned?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I made no such statement. I did say that under the other act not only is the solicitation of W. P. A. workers for contributions prohibited, but the receipt of funds from them is prohibited, and I think rightfully so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do too. But why does the Senator want to extend it? Why does he want to say to any person, not the solicitor, not the boss, but to anyone engaged in that sort of work, to anyone who engages in any practice of that sort, that he shall lose his employment with the Government, or with the State, or the county?

Oh, these holy men who want pure, clean politics—I know my friend is idealistic; but look over on the other side. "Clean politics," we hear, and the bill now pending, we are told, is in the interest of clean politics. There is more politics in the pending bill, more pure party and personal politics, than in any bill which has been before the Congress since I have been a Member of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senate adopts the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, will he vote for the Hatch bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I will not vote for a bill which would result in the Federal Government going into the States to interfere with State rights. Of course, the Senator does not seem to recognize that any Member of the Senate, or anyone else, can have fundamental convictions on the subject of local self-government, and the invasion by the Federal Government of the rights and powers of the States. When he gets that in his mind, then he will be in better positicn to vote on the pending bill.

I would feel better about the bill if it contained the amendment I am offering. I would feel that there was at least one provision added to the bill which would do more toward getting a free and untrammelled expression of the will of the people in national elections than any other provision which could be written into the law.

Politics, clean politics, cleanness in politics, is mentioned here on the floor, talked about by the newspapers here and there, without those making the statement ever having read the bill. Clean politics! It may be clean politics, and

I suppose it is, for the Republicans to act upon the bill in the interest of the Republican Party. Who doubts the cause of the unanimous accord on the other side of the Chamber? Is it not the knowledge that the bill will doubtless react to the advantage of the Republican Party? Who doubts that?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I dislike to say this, as a Democrat——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not talking about the Senator; I am talking about the Republicans.

Mr. HATCH. I think that, in justice to the Republicans in the Congress, I should say that the bill which was passed at the last session, containing eight provisions which the Senator has so loudly and eloquently praised, would not be on the statute books today if it had not been for the unified and unanimous support of the Republican minority in the House of Representatives at the last session.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course; they were playing politics, just as the Republicans are playing politics here today, and just as they will play politics again. Why not be frank about this situation? Everyone knows that it is to their political interest, and we usually judge the actions of men in accordance with their political interest when we see a large group with different political thought, with different economic views, a large group of members of the same party, getting together upon a bill of a political nature, when Democrats are divided, more than half, at least, on the other side. I should think the Senator would let the Republicans defend themselves if they have any desire to do so.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am not attempting to defend the Republicans, and I do not expect to defend them. I shall oppose them. I shall be opposing them next week, and the week after, and in the general election I shall be trying to defeat them. But I am attempting to be honest and to accord credit where credit is due, to Republican or Democrat.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course; but I am talking about the motives; I am not talking about the votes.

Mr. HATCH. I do not challenge their motives.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do; if you wish to call it a challenge, I challenge them. I say it is to the interest of the Republican Party to pass the bill, and I say that the Republicans are men of outstanding ability and of political experience, and that they recognize that it is to the advantage of the Republican Party to pass the bill. I have not said that that was the only motive that was actuating them. I have said that that is in their thought. Whether they are conscious of it or not, that is one of the factors which brings them unanimously to the support of the bill.

Why is that true? Possibly a million or more Federal employees have been appointed by the New Deal administration. The Republicans want to eliminate the voluntary action of that large group of American citizens, so that they may not take part in a Presidential or senatorial or congressional election. Naturally, they would like to see them shackled, would like to see them gagged, as so many are Democrats and, forsooth, so very few are Republicans. Then they want to go into the States and practice the same thing. Of course, it does not make any difference in the South, because we have there a one-party system. The pending bill has no real application to the practical politics of the Southern States. But we are concerned about the upstanding patriots of the South, who have gone through the terrors and turmoils of the tragic era of reconstruction, who have been threatened time and time again by Congress, when it was under the control of the Republican Party, with force-bill legislation, with lynching-bill legislation, with various forms of measures which show an utter indifference to the principle of States' rights and local self-government when political influences are strong enough to bring about activity on the subject.

Mr. President, that is history. I hope I am not misstating anything. Consider the States. I shall not specify them; but if there is no politics in the attitude of a number of the Members of the Senate, there are more coincidences than I have witnessed here in many years. Most of us on one side of the question take our stand whether the State administration, with its control of State employees, is favorable to us personally or favorable to our party, or is opposed to us or opposed to our party. Wherever there is control by political machines and political organizations we have the great practical question of their influence bobbing up.

So, Mr. President, I submit to the candor of thinking men who are not deceiving themselves about the subject of whether or not they are waging a fight for purity in elections; I submit to the candid judgment of candid men that the bill will not bring any more purity to elections than is brought about by present laws.

Mr. President, are we to permit the big fellows like Pew, the Du Ponts, and others to continue to make great contributions to political campaigns and to political committees, and with their financial contributions, to flood the country with advertising, to put speakers on national radio chains and local stations without limit, to engage in all the pernicious activities which the use of money in elections can make possible?

Mr. President, much is said about pernicious political activities. Are we in favor of stopping pernicious political activities? If we are, we should desire to stop the excessive use of money in elections. There can be no question about that, for every frank and thoughtful person knows that the use of money in elections is the outstanding evil connected with our elections. We know that many large business interests are great contributors to campaign funds.

We know the individuals and business interests which are the large contributors to campaign funds. They do not contribute great amounts simply because of their love of the party. They do it, Mr. President, as we know, either to defeat some candidate who stands for a program which they regard as hostile or injurious to their financial affairs, or they contribute great amounts of money in order to promote the interest of candidates who, they believe, will exercise their power and their influence, either as President or as Members of Congress, to defeat or to promote legislation in the interest of the accumulation of more and greater fortunes.

Would anyone say that the Du Pont family, as the organizers of the Liberty League, were so interested in pure elections that from the standpoint of patriotism, of party affection, they contributed more than $600,000 in one election to defeat a man who stood as a tribune for the plain people of this country?

Mr. President, is that purity in elections? Is that a pure and desirable practice? I think that is the test in the vote on this question—not the absolute test; I do not say that; but in the main I believe it is the real, genuine test of the sentiment of those in the Senate who favor the abolition or the prevention of such pernicious political practices and activities in the future. This vote will speak volumes. I am curious to read the RECORD when it is all over. I am curious to see how Senators will vote, and to learn who are on the side politically of the great contributors to political parties. It will be very interesting.

Mr. President, I shall not take more time. I recognize that at this hour many Senators are at lunch. Many are not so greatly interested in this discussion of clean politics; they are not so greatly interested in the abolition of pernicious political activities, and, therefore it is difficult to hold them on the floor, particularly so for one who claims no talent as a political orator. I recognize my limitations along that line. But, Mr. President, for the reasons I have tried humbly to state—the right to local self-government, States' rights, the protection of the little fellow against the big fellow, the purification, so far as the withdrawing of corrupting funds from campaigns will accomplish it—I hope the amendment will be adopted, and then I will not be altogether concerned about the Hatch amendment, because we will still have the Hatch law on the statute books. But I am opposed in principle to the inclusion of the employees of cities, counties, and States in any control by the Congress of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. NICHOLS, Mr. EBERHARTER, and Mr. DIRKSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I dislike to discuss a matter which is not germane to the pending legislation, but I regard it as of such great and vital importance to the people of the United States that I take the liberty of expressing my views at this time.

Mr. President, the National Labor Relations Act is once again before the Congress. It stands also before the ultimate bar of public opinion, as an instrument of Government fashioned to serve an overwhelming need—the need for peace and justice throughout industry. That the act has helped to meet this need, both for industry and labor, few fair-minded people will deny. The only question is whether all has been done that can now be done to achieve more completely this vital need of the whole American people.

In any matter so fraught with importance to the general welfare it is fitting carefully to define the issues involved. It is also proper to scrutinize not only the effectiveness of the law being examined but also the conduct of those indicting it and the qualifications of its judges. Whether we have a case involving the simple rights of the most humble citizen in the land or the largest national issues, these are the basic elements in any fair trial. I propose to apply these basic tests of a fair trial to the latest stage in the history of the National Labor Relations Act; namely, the recent investigation of the act and its administration by the House committee established for that purpose, and the controversy arising from the conflicting reports of that committee.

There can be no real issue in this controversy as to whether the National Labor Relations Act is constitutional or whether the Board administering it has lived within its statutory authority. The Supreme Court of the United States, again and again, has decided these issues in favor of the act and in favor of the Board. Nor is there any issue as to the fundamental soundness of the objectives of the act. All parties have stipulated their agreement that the purposes of the act must be preserved and that the act must not be crippled.

The preservation in substance of the economic liberties which the Labor Act made a reality by codifying them in Federal law is recognized by all as essential to the common good. It is important not only to the worker, but also to the employer and to the general public. It is vital to the structure of our Government and the maintenance of our democratic institutions. For if any one thing is made clear by the terrible events in Europe, it is that the suppression of the industrial rights of the average working citizen is a first step toward the establishment of totalitarian government. When Hitler came into power he liquidated the labor unions with the same dispatch that Stalin liquidated the middle-class businessman. In the Fascist and Communist countries of Europe there is no freedom for labor. Every student of affairs knows that when labor regains its birthright in those unhappy countries that moment will mark the beginning of the downfall of dictatorship and the reestablishment of democracy.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WAGNER. Very well; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BURKE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Ashurst	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Austin	Ellender	La Follette	Sheppard
Bailey	Frazier	Lee	Shipstead
Bankhead	George	Lodge	Smathers
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Bilbo	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Capper	Hale	Murray	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Van Nuys
Chandler	Hatch	Norris	Wagner
Chavez	Hayden	Nye	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Herring	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pepper	White
Connally	Holman	Pittman	Wiley
Danaher	Holt	Reed
Davis	Hughes	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. To continue, Mr. President, in splendid contrast, the brave countries of Europe which are now fighting at the outposts of democracy, find our excitement about the Labor Act a little puzzling, because they have long recognized and put into practice every right which the Labor Act embodies. One thing is certain: We cannot in our own land retain and expand our most cherished traditions unless we have workers who are free, just as we have a system of business enterprise which is free.

With this agreement on broad principles, the chief issues involving the National Labor Relations Act consist of two main questions of fact: First, is the act achieving its objective of diminishing the causes of labor disputes? And second, is the act achieving its objective of assuring the industrial liberty of the American worker? These two questions of fact may be examined separately, but they are not separable in the sense that in a free land industrial liberty must be the price of industrial peace.

The question of whether the National Labor Relations Act is diminishing labor disputes cannot be decided by general arguments. It can be measured only on the slide rule of economic statistics. From time to time, before this body and elsewhere, I have cited careful studies conclusively proving that the Labor Act has promoted peace between workers and employers, notwithstanding that membership in labor organizations has almost tripled in the past few years. I challenge anyone to produce an impartial and statistically sound study showing the contrary since the Supreme Court made the Labor Act workable by holding it constitutional.

Rather than burden the Senate with repetition, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks some statistics indicating the pacific trend of industrial relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. The very latest report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that in January of this year, fewer working days were lost through strikes than in any month since February 1933.

The question as to whether the National Labor Relations Act has enlarged the liberties of those who work for a living cannot be statistically determined. Freedom exists in the minds and hearts of men, and not solely in their pocketbooks. I assume that those who live by their labor are the best judges of their own feelings. I have never heard any accredited or respected leader of American labor urge the repeal or emasculation of the Labor Relations Act. Their suggestions have been limited to matters of detail. Without pretending to be a prophet, I do not believe that any of the accredited leaders of American labor will fail to stand with their two tested friends on the Smith committee, or will fail to denounce the Smith amendments as a long step backward.

Mr. President, I have said that in the case of the Labor Act we should consider also the conduct of those who are indicting it. I am first to acknowledge the rectitude of intention and the ripeness of judgment of many who are proposing changes in the law. I am first to admit that changes will be made as experience proves their need. But this cannot blind anyone to the fact that never in recent history has any legislation been subjected to such an incessant barrage by those opposed to its fundamental guaranties. This minority have tried to use the courts, and would even use Congress if they could, to defeat the law and regain their ascendancy. The presence of such formidable foes is no reason why we should not reexamine the law and change it if need be. But the nature of this opposition is a vitally important reason why we should be on our guard in every move we make.

Now as to the qualifications of those who are judging the Labor Act. I do not propose to say anything intimating the slightest reflection upon the ability or sincerity of any member of the Smith committee. They are all earnest public officials, pursuing their duty as they see it. But it is only fair to recall to the public that none of the three members of the committee who filed the majority proposals assumed leadership in the hard struggle for the original Labor Act, and that the chairman of the committee strongly opposed it. I accept without reservation the statement of those three members that they now wholly favor the objectives of the original law and are seeking only to perfect it. But in all fairness, I want to ask this question: Are those who were several years late in seeing the imperative necessity for the original act better qualified to define and chart a national labor policy than those who had the early vision to see the need for the act and the courage to lead in the fight for it?

Based on more than 30 years' experience as a legislator, I am willing to set it down as a first principle that, while all great social legislation needs to be perfected over the years, no great social legislation has ever been genuinely perfected except by its true friends.

Public confidence in the wisdom of the proposed amendments will be further shaken by the fact that the original resolution for the investigation, introduced by Representative SMITH on June 22, 1939, was steeped in prevalent misconceptions about the Labor Act. The resolution stated in its preamble that there had been "an alarming increase in strikes and labor disputes generally." In fact, quite the contrary has been the case since the Labor Act was declared constitutional. The preamble also said that the act "necessarily requires amendments and corrections," thus prejudging the very facts the resolution was introduced to investigate. Finally, the preamble charged that the act had been administered—and this is exceedingly interesting—under a construction of interstate commerce including "business in nowise engaged in interstate commerce, so as to enlarge its jurisdiction to cover matters of minor and local character, never at any time anticipated or intended by Congress." If this charge be true, it constitutes one of the severest indictments ever directed against the Supreme Court of the United States and the validity of its 22 decisions sustaining the Labor Board under the law.

Above all, the Labor Act affects the whole public, and justice to the whole public requires that all proposals to change the law should be based upon complete consideration of the problems involved. I am perfectly ready to say that the Smith committee brought forward evidence about the conduct of some members of the staff of the National Labor Relations Board which is highly undesirable. These wrongs should, of course, be remedied. But such difficulties in personnel administration provide no foundation for the sweeping proposals in the Smith amendments. In fact, it seems impossible to reconcile the drastic character of the Smith amendments at this time with the desire of the committee to use an additional $50,000 to double the length of its hearings. If the committee has completed the job, the extension of its hearings will merely impair the effectiveness of the Labor Board, agitate the public mind, and make it harder for industry and labor to settle down to peaceful and workable industrial relations. If the committee has only half finished its job, its drastic proposals are premature and insufficiently considered.

I shall now turn to a specific examination of a few of the amendments proposed by Representative SMITH and two of his associates. I shall deal only with the most important and do not wish to imply approval of any that I do not discuss. Upon careful examination, I am convinced that these amendments, whatever their intent, would seriously obstruct and impair collective bargaining through freely chosen representatives. They would turn back the clock and restore labor and industry to the role of traditional antagonists with no recourse but to battle.

One amendment would limit back-pay awards to 6 months. This would make the wrongfully discharged worker bear the burden of the inevitable delays of legal process. It would encourage dilatory tactics by employers with greater economic staying power. The Railway Labor Act provides no such limitation. By arbitrarily limiting the remedy, no matter how great the wrong, this provision violates the fundamental conception that the law "delights to do justice, and not by halves."

Another amendment provides a 6 months' statute of limitation for the filing of charges. Far from accomplishing its alleged purpose, this amendment would cause employees in self-protection to file charges on the slightest provocation, thus discouraging the friendly adjustment of difficulties without governmental intervention. It is repugnant to me that a man of property should have 20 years to protect his holdings by recourse to the law, while the wronged worker would be denied the right to regain his job after 6 months. No other law of which I am aware contains such a discriminatory provision against the workers of our country.

Still another amendment would deny reinstatement to an employee who engaged in any "willful" act of "violence," regardless of provocation and regardless of its triviality. Everyone will agree with the ruling of the Supreme Court in the Fansteel case that an employer may discharge employees who engage in sit-down strikes or other serious acts of violence or property damage. While the courts continue to function and the Labor Board is bound by their decisions, we have every assurance that violence will receive the treatment that violence deserves. But I cannot believe that, as a matter of inflexible Federal law, a man should lose all right to earn his bread because of a minor scuffle on the picket line, which may well have already been punished under local law. No one would suggest that an employer lose his corporate franchise for a similar trivial act. In the abstract, this proposal is one-sided and unfair, and in its practical application it would make the Labor Board a glorified police court and clog its machinery with thousands of petty recriminations.

Of greater general interest is the proposal that nothing in the act "shall be construed or interpreted to prohibit any expressions of opinion with respect to any matter which may be of interest to employees or the general public, provided that such expressions of opinion are not accompanied by acts of coercion, intimidation, discrimination, or threats thereof."

No one can disagree with the statement of Representative SMITH that "obviously no law of Congress can interfere with the freedom of speech or of press guaranteed in the Bill of Rights." But this is the rule today; and under this rule not a single provision of the Labor Act or order of the Labor Board has ever been held by the courts to infringe these fundamental rights. If the amendment were nothing but an affirmation of the Constitution, manifestly it would be superfluous. The National Labor Relations Act, like the Railway Labor Act, does not interfere with "the normal relations and innocent communications which are a part of all friendly intercourse, albeit between employer and employee." That is the statement of Chief Justice Hughes, in Texas and N. O. Ry. Co. against Railway Clerks, decided in 1930.

The obvious effect of this amendment is not to uphold the Constitution, but rather to overrule decisions of the Supreme Court, and thus allow unfair practices which the court has repeatedly held there is no constitutional right to enjoy. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court, the Bill of Rights does not authorize laboring men to make or publish statements tending to restrain an employer's interstate trade, even through methods of peaceful persuasion. By the same token, the courts have recognized the power of the spoken word when used by the employer to interfere with the freedom of his workers, where the superior economic position of the employer makes his words sound like the law. By the so-called free-speech amendment, the substantial justice embodied in many Supreme Court decisions would be undone, and the way would be opened for the return of the company-sponsored, company-dominated union.

A very recent illustration is System Federation, No. 40 (affiliated with A. F. of L.) v. Virginian Railway Co. (300 U. S. 515), decided under the Railway Labor Act of 1934. One of the important issues in the case was the legality of a statement circulated by Sasser, the railroad superintendent, setting forth alleged facts why the employees should remain loyal to the association—company union—and not join the A. F. of L. unions. The statement said in part:

> The chief object of the American Federation of Labor is eventually to bring about the closed shop in industry. * * * If the employees of the company desire to affiliate with the national organization [A. F. of L.] they are free to do so. * * * The management therefore hope that each man for himself will, before acting, give careful thought to the subject of representation.

Judge Way, in the United States District Court, said of this statement:

> I hardly think that anyone can read with an open mind the Sasser statement without fairly concluding that it was printed and circulated to "use the authority and power" of the railway "to induce action" by the members of the craft "in derogation of what the statute calls self-organization." That it probably and naturally had the intended effect on many of those to whom it was delivered is no more than a reasonable inference to be drawn from the situation and power of the author over those to whom it was addressed. It is likewise clear that similar acts will be continued in the future to defeat or seriously interfere with self-organization and representation unless prohibited.

On appeal, Senior Circuit Judge Parker affirmed the ruling below. He said:

> It is a violation of the terms, as well as of the spirit of the act, for the employer to address arguments to the employee couched in such terms, or presented in such manner, as to lead the employee to fear that he may suffer from the action of the employer if he does not follow the wishes of the latter in making his choice of representatives. Collective bargaining would be a delusion and a snare if the employer were permitted to exert pressure of any sort upon the employee with respect to a matter of this kind.
> It is not necessary to decide here whether the Sasser statement, standing alone, would be sufficient to convict the railway of attempting to interfere with and unduly influence its employees in their choice of representatives, as we think that the other evidence, when considered in connection with that statement, is sufficient to support the finding of the trial judge in that regard. There can be no question, therefore, but that * * * the portion of the decree enjoining the railway from interfering with the employees in the choice of representatives should be affirmed.

When the case came to the United States Supreme Court, Justice Stone wrote for the unanimous bench:

> Petitioner does not challenge that part of the decree which enjoins any interference by it with the free choice of representatives by its employees, and the fostering, in the circumstances of this case, of the company union. That contention is not open to it in view of our decision in the Railway Clerks case, supra, and of the unambiguous language of section 2, third and fourth, of the act, as amended.

Another leading case is Texas & New Orleans R. R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Railway Clerks (281 U. S. 548), also decided under the Railway Labor Act. The railroad argued before the Supreme Court that mere suggestions or advice by officers and agents of the carrier to its employees with respect to their organization or selection of representatives was not unlawful, and urged that the order of the lower court violated the First Amendment. The principal "verbal act" involved in the case was listed by Chief Justice Hughes among the activities of the carrier and its agents constituting "an actual interference with the liberty of the clerical employees in the selection of their representatives," namely, the "soliciting of authorizations and memberships on behalf of the association (company union)." He overruled the constitutional objection on this and other grounds by saying for the unanimous Court:

> As the carriers subject to the act have no constitutional right to interfere with the freedom of the employees in making their selections (of representatives), they cannot complain of the statute on constitutional grounds.

These and other cases I could cite show that an employer's statement or expression of opinion to his employees under certain circumstances—the manner in which the statement is made, the background of prior dealings, or other factors—indicates clearly that the employer is using his economic power to interfere with or coerce the employees in their selection of representatives. But there is nothing in the Labor Act today which prevents, nor could there be anything within our constitutional guaranties to prevent, the employer from expressing a mere opinion, so long as it is expressed under such circumstances that it does not in fact constitute interference, restraint, or coercion.

The final substantive amendment which I desire specifically to emphasize is the proposed new definition of the crucial terms "collective bargaining" and "bargain collectively." These would be defined—> to include the requirement that an employer or his representatives meet and confer with his employees or their representatives, listen to their complaints, discuss differences, and make every reasonable effort to compose such differences, but shall not be construed as compelling or coercing either party to reach an agreement or to submit counterproposals.

This proposal, by limiting the scope of the definition to "complaints" or "differences," would tend to exclude negotiation concerning basic "rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment." By eliminating any obligation to make counterproposals, it would destroy the ruler by which a court or a board could measure the good faith of the bargainer. By raising doubts about the obligation to try in good faith to reach an agreement, and to embody the terms of mutual agreement in writing, it would empty the collective-bargaining process of any serious content. In a recent case, where a detailed agreement was reached containing so many conditions and provisions that no man could be expected to remember all of them, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that the employer's refusal to put that agreement in writing was an unfair labor practice, because he was not bargaining in good faith. That construction of the law appeals to the good sense of all of us. Nothing should be written into the law to reverse or cast doubt upon the soundness of that decision.

These substantive changes, damaging though they would be, are transcended in significance by the proposed changes in procedure. Affecting the operation of the act in every single case, the procedural proposals are like a dagger in the heart of the administrative process.

The National Labor Relations Board is not a court. It cannot "prosecute" or "punish" anyone. It is an agency patterned after the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and many other quasi-judicial bodies. Its function is to investigate, to make findings of fact, and to issue orders to cease and desist, and to take appropriate remedial action to restore the status quo. All of these orders must be approved by the courts before they become effective. I cannot emphasize that too much, for it still seems not to be clear in the minds of many persons that no final order made by the Labor Board is effective unless the court approves the order and authorizes its enforcement.

Thus, the Labor Board procedure is backed by half a century of experience indicating the need for administrative agencies in our complex industrial system. More specifically, experience under section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act had proved the complete inadequacy of dealing with employer-employee problems solely through recourse to prosecuting attorneys and the judicial process.

At three vital points the proposed amendments would take us back to the very difficulties from which Congress sought to escape by adopting the administrative device.

First, the amendments require that the rules of evidence in Federal district courts shall be applied in proceedings before the Board "so far as practicable." This amendment would not add to the substantial safeguards of either employers or employees, because under the present law the courts will not approve orders based on mere hearsay, rumor, or suspicion, or without a basis in evidence having "rational probative force." That is the statement of Chief Justice Hughes in Consolidated Edison Co. against National Labor Relations Board. I repeat, no order of the Board will be sustained by the courts unless it is supported by substantial evidence, and by substantial evidence the courts mean proof having rational probative force. The only result of the amendment would be to introduce a new and novel standard into the corpus of administrative law. It would thus promote endless wrangling by counsel and burden everyone with the cost and time of new litigation on purely technical points, the very difficulties we want to escape.

The only people who would be helped would be those desirous of delaying the law, plus a fraction of the legal profession, and, of course, a few law-review commentators.

The second violent departure from the traditional principles of administrative law is the proposal that the Board's findings of fact must be reversed if it "appears to the satisfaction of the circuit court" that they are "clearly erroneous." Stated in simple language, this would require the reviewing court to weigh the evidence in each instance and substitute its judgment on the facts for that of the Board.

This proposal, whenever and wherever it has reared its head, has been almost universally condemned by the most astute and impartial students of American law. If there is a difference of opinion, it is that half the experts think this proposal would paralyze administrative agencies, and the other half think it would overload and paralyze the courts.

The third of the fundamental procedural changes vests in a newly created Administrator, appointed by the President and acting independently of the Labor Board, every function of the present Board except the actual decision of cases and the conduct of elections. Such a dismemberment of functions and division of responsibility would defeat the just expectation of industry and labor that there be prompt and effective administration of the national labor policy.

Under the present procedure, the Labor Board has been successful in adjusting 93 percent of its cases in conformity with the policy of the act, without formal proceedings, complaints, or hearings. This procedure has obvious advantages to the employee, to employers, and to the public. Under the proposed changes, an aggrieved employee or labor organization would file a charge with the Administrator through regional offices under his control. A prosecuting Administrator, however, could not possibly achieve satisfactory results in so large a proportion of cases. Furthermore, his issuance of complaints would not be tempered by the Board's judgment as to the law and as to the probability of enforcement by the courts. There would be nothing to prevent the Administrator from adjusting cases on a basis entirely different from the principles laid down in the Board's decisions, or from refusing arbitrarily to issue a complaint in a case clearly within the Board's province. The division of responsibility and confusion of policy reach farcical heights in the proposal that the Administrator, not the Board, should direct and control litigation in the courts for enforcement of orders issued by the Board.

The election procedure which would be required under these amendments is obviously unsound. The Administrator would have no connection with the election machinery. Application for elections would be made to the Board; the Board would set a date for hearings; the Board would make findings, conduct elections, and issue certifications. Yet the amendments make no provision for regional offices under control of the Board, to which petitions for elections might be brought. Unless all election petitions were to be filed and acted upon in Washington—an utterly impossible procedure—it would be necessary to duplicate to a very substantial extent the regional machinery which the amendments transfer to the Administrator in handling unfair labor practice cases. Some duplication would be necessary in any event, because trial examiners connected with the Board must have field offices for trial of cases and preparation of their reports.

When the separation proposal is thus analyzed, it is difficult to understand how it could operate except to impede our progress toward democracy and peace in American industry. I call special attention to the fact that the Administrator's sweeping powers are proposed to be vested in an official in the executive branch of the Government, and hence removable at will, under applicable decisions of the Supreme Court. The most fundamental rights of labor would thus be subject to the shifting currents of national politics, and the very purpose of establishing a quasi-judicial agency would be defeated.

While workers and employers would be subjected to the delays and frustration of this confusing, inefficient, and obstructive administrative arrangement, investors under the Securities and Exchange Act, shippers under the Interstate Commerce Act, and businessmen under the Federal Trade Commission Act, would continue to enjoy the advantages of an administrative procedure similar to that in the present Labor Act.

The Civil Aeronautics Act, sometimes referred to as a precedent for separating the functions of quasi-judicial agencies, is, upon examination, a precedent against any such separation. The Administrator under that law is established "in the Authority," and he is directed "to cooperate with the Authority in the administration and enforcement of the act." Beyond that, the Administrator and the Authority are concerned with wholly different aspects of the law. The Administrator exercises executive powers with respect to the development of civil aeronautics and air commerce in the United States and abroad. The Authority exercises all the quasi-judicial functions under the law. The Administrator is not the "prosecutor" of complaints before the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The quasi-judicial procedure for complaint, hearing, issuance of orders, and judicial review under the Civil Aeronautics Act is comparable to that under the Labor Act.

I believe that our system of law need not fear these destructive "separation" proposals so long as we take guidance from a recent opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in which he said:

> To a large degree modern administrative tribunals have been a response to the felt need of governmental supervision over economic enterprise. * * * Perhaps the most striking characteristic of this movement has been the investiture of administrative agencies with power far exceeding and different from the conventional judicial modes for adjusting conflicting claims. * * * These differences in origin and function preclude wholesale transplantation of the rules of procedure, trial, and review, which have evolved from the history and experience of courts. * * * To assimilate the relation of these administrative bodies and the courts to the relationship between lower and upper courts is to disregard the origin and purposes of the movement for administrative regulation and at the same time to disregard the traditional scope, however far reaching, of the judicial process. Unless these vital differentiations between the functions of judicial and administrative tribunals are observed, courts will stray outside their province and read the laws of Congress through the distorting lenses of inapplicable legal doctrine.

In what I have said, I do not wish to imply that the administrative procedure under the Labor Act cannot be improved. The Attorney General, at the suggestion of the President, has established a Committee on Administrative Law, composed of distinguished judges, law teachers, and members of the bar. The committee is now engaged in an extensive examination of the procedure of the Labor Board and other administrative agencies. I await with interest its findings and its suggestions, confident that they will be constructive, and in furtherance of sound policy and improved procedure. Congress should not discriminate by making radical changes in the administrative procedure of the Labor Act, until the report of the Attorney General's committee is available to guide our steps.

Finally, I am against the proposal to abolish the present Board and to establish a new Board of three members, although I will say that I would willingly vote for an amendment to add two members to the Board. One may disagree with the present Board's decisions in isolated cases. The Smith investigation has undoubtedly disclosed defects in administration by the Board and bias and misdirected zeal on the part of some employees. But this is no justification for "ripper" legislation.

As a matter of fact, no other administrative agency has equaled the Labor Board's record of approval by the courts. Let me cite some figures for comparison. In the first 15 years of the Federal Trade Commission, with 22 matters coming before the Supreme Court, the Commission's contention was upheld in 5 cases, modified in 1 case, and wholly reversed in 16 cases. In the first 15 years of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commission's contention was upheld by the Supreme Court in 1 case, modified in 1 case, and wholly reversed in 10 cases. In contrast, in the 24 cases decided by the Supreme Court involving the Labor Act, the Labor Board's position was fully upheld in 19 cases, modified in 3 cases, and wholly reversed in only 2 cases. In more than 100 final orders taken to the courts, the Labor Board was held to have exceeded its jurisdiction in only 1 case.

The Labor Board has encountered extraordinary problems in breaking new ground in a highly controversial field, problems intensified by the infamous Liberty League campaign, the flood of injunction suits, and the split in the labor movement. Nonetheless, the Labor Act has been firmly established in American industrial life. Thousands of new labor agreements have been made. Over a million workers have cast ballots in peaceful Labor Board elections. Industrial strife has declined, and an increasing proportion of workers are taking their organization problems to the Board rather than fight them out on the picket line.

Dr. Leiserson, the newest member of the Board, and a recognized authority on industrial relations, said in his testimony before the Smith committee:

> Some of the departments of the Board's work have developed effective administrative organizations with experienced and capable executives. Other departments have this still to achieve, and there are places where a change in personnel would bring improvement.

I agree with him on that point. There should be some changes in personnel.

> But full accomplishment in these respects is a matter of time, experience, and financial resources with which to carry on the work.
> There is room for much improvement in the administrative methods of the Board, but the act cannot be made to work altogether efficiently until the opposition to it, and the attempts to weaken it by revisions, have ceased.

Mr. President, in closing let me say that I am still completely open-minded about the Labor Act. I am still ready to support amendments proposed by others if they appear to me sound at this time. As I have previously said, I am prepared to vote for an amendment which will increase the membership of the Board by two, because the present Board's burden of work has continued to be so great that undesirable delays have undoubtedly occurred. I am constantly striving to advance suggestions of my own which I believe will lead to a still better national labor policy. The latest evidence of this is my bill to expand the mediation functions of the Federal Government. But conscientious study of the Smith amendments forces me inescapably to these conclusions about them:

First. The Smith investigation has not adduced any substantial facts to refute the overwhelming weight of the evidence that the Labor Act has promoted industrial peace and preserved industrial freedom. In consequence, even the bitterest foes of collective bargaining are even more fearful than before of attacking openly the fundamental soundness of the Labor Act.

Second. The business community has a vested interest in stable industrial relations, and therefore has a vested interest in a sound national labor policy. The Labor Act is more helpful to businessmen today than when it was enacted, for day by day the courts have clarified its meaning, and day by day public understanding has increased its voluntary acceptance. Radical and inconsiderate tampering with the Labor Act will produce grave uncertainty until the courts get through interpreting the new law, and uncertainty is the bane of business progress.

Third. The Smith amendments, whatever their intent, in their full sweep would more than repeal the Labor Act; they would make it a delusive remedy for the worker and a concrete weapon for the oppression of labor.

Fourth. The substantive proposals for change would not only remove the provisions designed to redress labor's economic inequality, but, moreover, would place upon labor's right to seek legal redress unique limitations never applied to any other groups.

Fifth. The procedural provisions for change would provide a feast for a few lawyers, an insuperable problem for the courts, an insurmountable obstacle to any efficient administration of the law, a blessing to those anxious to disobey the law, and a merry-go-round for the employers and workers affected by the law.

Sixth. The defects in administration revealed by the Smith investigation should, of course, be corrected. This is almost entirely a matter of personnel administration, and can be accomplished only by close administrative attention and further experience. These difficulties would be multiplied by the proposed amendments.

Seventh. It is already evident that the Smith amendments, however sincere in inception, are providing a strategic rallying point for the enemies of the Labor Act. Some people may be for the Smith amendments and sincerely believe that they are for the Labor Act too, but no one who is against the Labor Act can fail to be for the Smith amendments.

Eighth. The Labor Act and all who believe in it are now faced by a new threat, as menacing as any which they overcame in the past. The friends of industrial democracy must again rally promptly to repel this latest danger. Because I have confidence in America, I have confidence that they will do so.

Mr. President, in many parts of the world, the liberties that we hold dearer than life, the freedom of economic opportunity, and the civil equality that we cherish, are all thrown into the discard. Certainly this is no time for America to follow the leadership of the despots. Certainly this is the time for America to preserve democracy in every quarter of our national life. That is why it is simply incomprehensible to me that anyone should now set up a shout for regression, that anyone should now be willing to take away any of the simple rights of freemen that the workers of America have won. Never will I lend an ear to such counsel. We must stand firm and press forward toward the enlargement of all our liberties, because therein lie the safety, the security, and the happiness of the American people.

STRIKES IN JANUARY 1940 (BASED ON PRELIMINARY ESTIMATES)

The number of strikes and workers involved were higher in January 1940 than in December 1939, but fewer man-days were lost than in any month since February 1933. The estimate for January is 110 strikes, 21,000 workers involved, and 200,000 man-days idle. As compared with December 1939, the number of strikes increased 4.8 percent, the number of workers involved increased 61.5 percent, and the man-days idle decreased 42 percent.

Strike activity was much lower in January 1940 than in January 1939, the number of strikes being 44.4 percent less, the number of workers involved 58.8 percent fewer; the man-days idle declined by 61.3 percent.

[1] The number of workers involved in strikes between 1916 and 1926 is known for only a portion of the total. However, the missing information is for the smaller disputes and it is believed that the total here given is fairly accurate.

TEXT OF LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, BY SENATOR ROBERT F. WAGNER, OF NEW YORK, PRINTED IN ISSUE OF SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1939, REPLYING TO CHARGES OF NEW YORK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE THAT WAGNER ACT HAS INCREASED INDUSTRIAL STRIFE

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE:

Widespread publicity has been given to a report adopted on November 2 by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, which purports to furnish "convincing evidence that the Wagner Act not only has failed in its avowed objective of diminishing the causes of labor disputes but has been a strong incentive in increasing labor controversies." Since I have frequently cited official statistics to the contrary, in the press and before congressional committees, I hastened to examine the Chamber's report and check it against all the available data. I am grateful for this opportunity to present my views on this important national issue.

I

It is essential first to restate clearly the broad objectives of the act, against which its success or failure must necessarily be measured. The act was never intended or designed to eliminate all strikes or lockouts, or to displace the numerous Federal, State, and local laws directed against restraints of trade, improper picketing, or violence by either party in the course of labor disputes. Instead of dealing with the effect after labor strife has run its wasteful course, the act seeks to diminish certain underlying causes of that strife. Instead of imposing upon employers and employees wages, hours, rates of production, and grievance procedure established by Government fiat, it looks to the freely chosen representatives of employers and employees to thrash out their own difficulties and make their own bargain at the council table. Instead of adopting the policy of suppression of management and labor characterizing the totalitarian states, it builds upon the framework of the American system.

As the Supreme Court of the United States has held, freedom of choice in the selection of representatives must be safeguarded if such a voluntary plan is to accomplish its purpose. Since it cannot seriously be maintained that employees have impaired the Nation-wide organization of employers in corporations, trade associations, or chambers of commerce, no legislation was necessary to protect that right of employers. But the record, unfortunately, shows that bitter industrial strife frequently arose because no election machinery was available to enable workers to select their representatives in case of dispute, and because employers interfered with the industrial liberties of employees. In the words of a recent publication of the Brookings Institution:

"Prior to the 1930's, employers wishing to prevent unions of workers from gaining sufficient strength to establish collective bargaining were able to resort to methods which sometimes rendered empty or meaningless this general and long-conceded right. * * * The employer could refuse to meet in conference with representatives of the workers or to discuss the issues at stake; he could discharge, demote, or discipline workers in his employ who were active in promoting the cause of a union; he could persuade, advise, or threaten employees with various possible consequences in order to induce them either not to join a union or to give up already-held membership therein; he could establish as one of the conditions for obtaining or retaining employment, the signing or acceptance of 'yellow-dog' contracts; he could carry on espionage work concerning the activities and plans of his employees and of union members or agents; and he could establish, finance, and aid in other ways organizations confined to his own employees as an alternative to the much less congenial 'outside' union.

"In an effort to give meaning to the declared right of labor to organize, the National Labor Relations Act defines violations of that right in terms of a series of 'unfair labor practices' and creates legal machinery to prevent the commission of these defined violations" (Government and Economic Life, 1939).

The procedure of the Labor Act had been established in our governmental system since the pioneer Interstate Commerce Act of 1887. Its underlying policy had been successfully applied by the Federal Government to minimize industrial conflicts during the World War and is at the basis of the highly effective Railway Labor Act. So carefully had the Labor Act been framed to protect the fundamental rights of employers and employees that in 18 successive decisions by the Supreme Court not a line of the act has been held unconstitutional.

The burden of the chamber's report is that a policy so well established in our law and our practices, and so deeply rooted in our democratic traditions, has proved a failure in actual operation. This conclusion is unfounded. Authoritative and indisputable data show the contrary ever since the act has been given a fair chance to exert its pacific influence.

II

The chamber's "factual survey" may conveniently be considered under four heads: First, the incidence of all industrial strife; second, the incidence of strife which the act was directly designed to minimize; third, the volume of cases filed with the Labor Board; and fourth, the extension of the practice of collective bargaining.

1. The chamber's report finds that in the 3-year period following the passage of the act (1936–38), the incidence of all industrial strife was greater than in the 3-year period preceding its passage (1932–34). The arithmetic is correct, but the intended inference that the act has been ineffective is entirely without foundation.

Logic and common sense tell us that because two facts concur there is not necessarily a causal connection between them. It might just as well be said that the Labor Act is responsible for the zooming profits of 1937, when 185 industrial companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange earned more than in 1929, or for the current business upturn, with industrial production exceeding the 1929 average. It is obviously necessary to go beneath any statistical assertion to appreciate what the figures mean and how they were derived.

In this case it must be recognized that the tempo of business activity—as shown by national income produced—was 50 percent higher in the period 1936–38 than in 1932–34. Since the incidence of labor strife normally follows the business cycle, as the chamber's report concedes, it is not surprising that more industrial strife occurred in the former than in the latter period. What is more surprising is the comparatively minor increase in aggregate working time lost—less than 10 percent. But even if other factors intervened to disturb this normal tendency, the chamber's analysis will be rejected by a fair-minded public because of its studied failure to distinguish between the date of the act's passage and the date when it began effective operation.

It is a notorious fact that the Labor Act, though placed upon the statute books on July 5, 1935, was virtually a dead letter until its constitutionality was upheld by the Supreme Court in April 1937. Its effectiveness during this entire 18-month period was undermined by pseudo-legal opinions that it was unconstitutional, widely circulated by the Liberty League, the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Metal Trades Association, and similar groups; by a barrage of injunction suits in the district courts, and by the widespread practice of industrial espionage. Because the law of the land was ineffective precisely where its intervention was most needed, labor had no recourse but to vindicate on the picket line the fundamental rights which the law guaranteed. Labor strife, of course, multiplied. The first Supreme Court decisions upholding the act against every constitutional attack were handed down in April 1937, at the peak of this unprecedented strike wave. After an inevitable but remarkably brief period of adjustment, the strike wave subsided. In the late months of 1937, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, fewer workers were idle and less time was lost through strikes than in the same months of the preceding year. In 1938, the first full year of the act's operation under the Supreme Court's mandate, there were only about half as many strikes, one-third as many workers involved, and one-third as much working time lost through strikes as in the preceding year.

This record for 1938 is remarkable not merely in relation to 1937, an exceptional year, but in relation to the entire strike trend of recent times. The proportion of workers involved in strikes to the total gainfully employed was lower than in any year since 1932, and substantially below the average for the last 60 years. Fewer workers were on strike than in any year since 1932. The average working time lost per striker was lower than in any year since 1927—an indication of the short duration of the strikes that did occur. Less aggregate working time was lost through strikes than in any year since 1931. Sit-down strikes fell off sharply after April 1937, and have now virtually disappeared from the American scene.

This peaceful trend has continued to date. The number of strikes in the first 6 months of this year was about 20 percent lower than in the same period of 1938 and 60 percent lower than in 1937. The time lost in strikes was relatively high, however, due to the unusually severe bituminous-coal industry stoppage.

In brief, since the law actually became effective there has been a very substantial decline in the incidence of industrial strife. This decline is all the more significant because it has occurred in a period of unprecedented organizational activity and has run counter to the upswing of the business cycle which began in the middle of 1938. The tempo of business activity in the year 1938 as a whole was higher, except for 1937, than in any year since 1929, and is currently estimated at about the 1937 level.

2. Let us turn now to the statistics on labor disputes which the Labor Act was directly designed to minimize.

The act is limited, of course, to labor problems directly affecting interstate commerce. As the chamber's report properly notes, only 67 percent of the strikes in 1937 and 60 percent of those in 1938 occurred in industries fully subject to the jurisdiction of the act. But the chamber's report fails to record the even more significant fact that the decline in the incidence of labor strife in those industries during 1938 was substantially greater than in industries partially or wholly outside the act's jurisdiction.

Another limitation emphasized at the outset is that the act is directly concerned only with issues of representation, union recognition, discrimination, and the like. The supposed increase in strife over these issues, alleged in the chamber's report, is vitiated by the same objections as its conclusion concerning strikes as a whole. Here again the official statistics show a very substantial decline once the act went into effective operation. During 1938 fewer workers were involved in "organization" strikes, as classified by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and less working time was lost in such strikes, than in any year since 1932.

The peaceful trend is clearly shown by a careful break-down of the figures for the first 6 months of 1939, furnished by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Of the aggregate working time lost, 17 percent resulted from strikes over wages and hours and 57 percent from strikes for the closed shop—an unusually high figure attributable to the bituminous-coal stoppage. Neither of these issues is within the purview of the act. Less than 15 percent of the total working time lost is properly attributable to strikes over issues which could have been resolved by resort to the peaceful procedure provided by the law.

3. The volume of cases filed with the Board furnishes the clearest indication that the strike weapon is giving way to the orderly processes of law. From January 1936 through March 1937 there were more strikes called each month than cases filed with the Labor Board. But since the first Supreme Court decisions in April 1937 the number of new cases filed each month has averaged three times the number of strikes. The increasing tendency of workers to take their cases to the Labor Board instead of going on strike is clearly evident. In 1936 the ratio of workers involved in Board cases to workers involved in "organization" strikes, as classified by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, was 5 to 4. In 1937 the average monthly ratio increased to 2 to 1. In 1938 and the first half of 1939 the ratio rose to 6 to 1. That is to say, six workers are currently involved in cases voluntarily submitted to peaceful adjudication for everyone who is involved in an "organization" strike.

To date almost 24,000 cases have been handled under the act, involving over 5,500,000 workers. Most of these cases were filed after April 1937. Four out of every five cases filed have been closed. About 95 percent of the cases disposed of have been closed by dismissal, withdrawal, or by agreement of the parties, all without even holding a hearing.

The chamber's report impliedly criticizes the act because of the large number of cases filed under it and the proportion of cases dismissed as unfounded. I am unable to understand how these facts can be made a basis for criticism. They seem rather to demonstrate that more and more, labor is substituting legal process for the picket line and that the Labor Board, in administering the act, has taken pains to eliminate unfounded charges with a minimum of inconvenience and expense. Such charges would be just as likely to flare into industrial strife as grievances that are well-founded.

The trend of cases handled under the act reflects the broad trend toward greater industrial peace. In the first place, the number of cases filed in the year ending June 30, 1939, was one-third lower than in the preceding year, notwithstanding a continued increase in union membership. This would indicate a diminution in the Labor Board's activities with the increasing recognition of the principles of the law throughout the country. In the second place, since April 1937 the great majority of the Board's decision have been concerned with elections or certifications of representatives rather than with charges of unfair labor practices. To date almost 8,000 representation petitions have been received, involving over 2,500,000 workers, including 25 petitions filed by employers, as provided by the new regulations in force since June of this year. Twice as many workers were involved in representation cases filed with the Board in the last 6 months than in cases of unfair labor practices. Almost 1,000,000 workers have voted in elections conducted under the law. The fact that 90 percent of eligible workers have actually registered their choice in these elections is an interesting commentary on the degree of industrial democracy which is being achieved.

4. The chamber's report makes no mention of the phenomenal development of peaceful collective bargaining in recent years under the influence of the Labor Act. According to a very recent study of labor agreements by the National Industrial Conference Board:

"Five years ago only a small proportion of companies in the United States operated under formal agreements with labor organizations. A growth of membership in labor unions from around three and one-half millions 5 years ago to an estimated eight millions has brought about a marked increase in the extent of collective bargaining."

Since 1937 thousands of new labor agreements have been negotiated, especially in the steel, metal-fabricating, rubber, electrical equipment, automobile, petroleum, and communications industries.

The principles of the National Labor Relations Act are an indispensable foundation for this vital phase of economic democracy in America. But successful operation under these agreements depends on patience, mutual confidence, and a responsible appraisal of mutual problems by the parties themselves. These qualities cannot be legislated into existence—they must develop with experience and the exercise of responsibility. The marked tendency toward more stable relations between parties new to the ways of collective bargaining is evidenced by another statement in the above-mentioned report of the National Industrial Conference Board:

"A noteworthy difference observed in the 1939 group of contracts, as compared to earlier ones, is in the matter of duration of agreements. A majority of those included in the 1937 survey ran for a definite period, usually a year, perhaps reflecting the management's expectation that collective bargaining would be temporary and its unwillingness to commit itself too far into the future. The prevailing practice in present contracts is to make the duration indefinite. * * *

"In general, recent union agreements seem to indicate a more serious acceptance of collective bargaining than former ones. The character and working of the various provisions give the impression of an attempt to construct practical and workable agreements to cover situations that arise in day-to-day plant operation rather than of contracts entered into under duress and couched in such vague terms as to make misunderstanding inevitable and amicable administration difficult."

Our own industrial history over the past 50 years demonstrates, and the splendid report of the President's Commission on Industrial Relations in Great Britain confirms, that the key to industrial peace lies in such collective bargaining relationships between freely chosen representatives. Their fullest development presents a continuing challenge to the industrial statesmanship of labor and management.

The clear indication from these facts is that the Labor Act is functioning well as an instrument for industrial peace. We should not permit our judgment of the over-all picture to be obscured by discussion or criticism of isolated cases or issues under the act, or by the conduct of employers or employees in some particular labor dispute. Indeed it becomes increasingly clear that many labor disputes being laid at the door of the Labor Act arise out of the substantive terms of employment and are not within its purview at all. Those strikes can be controlled, or prevented, by Government only through compulsory arbitration. Most Americans will agree that such measures, placing the collar of involuntary servitude on both labor and management, are too high a price to pay for industrial peace. Consistently with democratic principles, the public authority can, however, help the parties themselves to minimize and adjust such strikes through the development of voluntary mediation machinery. I have already stated my belief that the time is ripe for a further elaboration of Federal action in that direction, and my intention to offer a suitable plan.

III

Finally, no appraisal of the merit of the National Labor Relations Act is complete without mention of those values which cannot be measured in statistical terms. To increasing millions of wage earners, the act is bringing increasing enjoyment in their daily working lives of freedom of expression, of the press, of assembly, and of ballot. To increasing millions of wage earners, it is guaranteeing a voice and a place in our industrial system which has been too long neglected or denied. The significance of these values must be apparent in the present trend of world events.

In closing may I say that I have always supposed that the Labor Act would be perfected from time to time if the need were shown. But the wisdom of changes in the Labor Act can only be determined upon a clear understanding of its purposes and the actual record of its operation. That is the only sure path of progress. This letter is submitted in an effort to light the way.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT F. WAGNER.

NEW YORK, N. Y., November 15, 1939.

PURCHASE OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIAL

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 230) providing for the purchase of strategic and critical materials was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 230

Joint resolution providing for the purchase of strategic and critical materials

Whereas the United States gold stock of more than $18,000,000,000, and the excess reserves of the Federal Reserve System now totaling more than $5,700,000,000, are still increasing because of a continued gold inflow from abroad at the rate of more than $3,000,000,000 a year; and

Whereas the more than 32,000 vessels and 1,615,000 freight cars which carried the United States exports of commodities in 1939 could not carry away enough American wealth to pay for this country's 1939 imports of bullion; and

Whereas it is certain that the United States cannot without very substantial loss resell to foreigners within any foreseeable period the gold which it has been and is now importing at a cost of $35 an ounce; and

Whereas the Army and Navy Munitions Board finds that numerous critical, strategic, and essential materials necessary for our national defense are obtainable in sufficient quantities only abroad and that their acquisition is necessary for the national defense; and

Whereas of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund set up in 1934, at least $1,800,000,000 never has been used because its employment has been unnecessary for support of the foreign exchange value of the dollar: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any unexpended amounts of the stabilization fund established by section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, the sum of $500,000,000 for the purchase, during a period of 5 years after the date of enactment of this joint resolution, of materials produced in foreign countries, and not produced in adequate quantities by the United States, and determined by the Army and Navy Munitions Board to be strategic and critical materials or materials essential to the common defense or the industrial needs of the United States. All purchases of such materials shall be made under the direction and supervision of the Army and Navy Munitions Board and in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 7, 1939 (Public, No. 117, 76th Cong., and all materials so purchased shall be administered), so far as practicable, in the same manner as materials acquired under the provisions of such act. All materials acquired under the provisions of this joint resolution, except for rotation to prevent deterioration, shall be used only upon the order of the President in time of war, or when he shall find that a national emergency exists.

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to provide for the transportation, maintenance, rotation, and storage within the United States or any of its Territories or possessions of any materials acquired under the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the joint resolution which I have introduced has a twofold purpose: First, to acquire strategic and critical materials in which this country is not self-sufficient, and which the Army and Navy Munitions Board has recommended be acquired; and second, to make use of a small part of the surplus and idle gold this country now holds.

The joint resolution calls for the appropriation out of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund of the sum of $500,000,000 to be spent during the next 5 years in buying such foreign strategic and critical materials as the Army and Navy Munitions Board may designate.

In view of the large gold inflow which this country has been experiencing, the expenditure of $500,000,000 within 5 years, or even immediately, would not imply a complete solution of our pressing gold problem. It would merely be a step in the direction of a sensible solution.

During the first 2 months of 1940 alone, more than $500,000,000 has been paid to foreigners for gold. So long as the gold inflow continues at its present rate, the program called for in the joint resolution would involve no net outflow of gold from this country, but only, and to a very modest degree, a lessened inflow.

But if the current gold inflow, for any reason, should be stopped and reversed—a contingency which at present seems most unlikely—our stock of gold is so large that we could easily afford to build up stock piles of foreign-produced strategic and critical materials several times as large as those envisaged in the joint resolution.

In 1929 this country held only about $4,000,000,000 of gold. After revaluation in 1934 our gold stock was valued at about $7,000,000,000. Since revaluation it has grown to more than $18,000,000,000; and today the excess reserves of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System exceed $5,700,000,000, a situation of great potential danger.

The wisdom of accumulating stock piles of foreign strategic and critical materials rather than gold in excess of any possible monetary need should be self-evident. Foreign countries with a relatively much smaller stock of gold have recognized the wisdom of such a course. In 1938 the British Government introduced the essential commodities reserves bill, and proceeded to acquire such commodities as wheat, whale oil, and sugar. Some 230 commodities were included within the scope of the act. The same year Switzerland passed a law authorizing the federal council to prescribe inventories of stocks of indispensable commodities, to purchase or increase such stocks, and so forth. In 1938 Denmark authorized the use of about 25,000,000 kroner for the purchase of reserve supplies, such as coal, oils, fertilizer, airplanes and parts, automobile parts, and so forth.

The eminent Swedish economist, Prof. Gustav Cassel, recently wrote:

In the case of Sweden I have advocated an exchange of unnecessarily large reserves of gold for storable commodities. To a certain extent this line has been followed up and considerable supplies of foreign materials have been accumulated. At the same time, however, gold has poured into the country, and the present gold reserve of the Riksbank is very much greater than it was when the policy of storing was started.

For the United States, with her unparalleled natural resources and her wide possibilities of securing necessary supplies from abroad, the problem of storing is of less importance. Still, it would doubtless have been very much better to import large quantities of desirable materials, and even to accumulate large stocks of them, than to import quite useless quantities of gold—not to speak of silver. (Banking, November 1939.)

Indicative of the possibilities of "swapping gold for valuable commodities" is an item published in the Engineering and Mining Journal for February 1940 regarding the Dutch Government's willingness and anxiousness to sell tin, a strategic commodity of which we have to import our entire consumption. The Engineering and Mining Journal reported:

The presence in Washington of one of the official Netherland delegates on the International Tin Committee has renewed official interest in the plans for procuring tin from the Dutch Government. It is believed that the Dutch would be happy to furnish any wanted quantity of that metal "at a price below market." Although no official negotiations appear to be under way, it is believed that the United States could buy this tin with gold and that the gold would not need to leave its burial place in Fort Knox, Ky. The Dutch want gold credits for machinery very much, and would probably be willing to spend all of the money in the United States for such equipment.

In March 1939 the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America adopted a resolution which, after declaring that "the principle of accumulating precautionary stocks of critical and strategic minerals is sound," resolved:

That the Government of the United States of America would be wise in acquiring and preserving for national defense ample stocks of those critical and strategic minerals and metals. * * *

The Army and Navy Munitions Board has published a list of 17 strategic and 20 critical materials, as well as 35 essential materials, which are neither strategic nor critical. These materials it has defined as follows:

Strategic materials: Strategic materials are those essential to the national defense for the supply of which in war dependence must be placed in whole or in part on sources outside the continental limits of the United States, and for which strict conservation and distribution control measures will be necessary.

Critical materials: Critical materials are those materials essential to the national defense the procurement problems of which in war, while difficult, are less serious than those of strategic materials because they can be either domestically produced or obtained in more adequate quantities or have a lesser degree of essentiality, and for which some degree of conservation and distribution control will be necessary.

Materials neither strategic nor critical: In this classification are included those materials, essential to the national defense, for which no procurement problems in war are anticipated, but whose status is such as to require constant surveillance because future developments may necessitate reclassification as strategic or critical.

In February 1939 the staffs of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines issued a report upon certain deficient strategic minerals, in which they stated:

This report discusses the situation of the United States with respect to seven of the minor metals that are so essential in modern industrial activity that to do without them would require a drastic reorganization in present practices.

These metals are manganese, chromium, mercury, tungsten, nickel, tin, and antimony. All of them are essential in peace and critical in war. In none of them is the United States self-sufficient. This situation is illustrated by the following table, which shows the percentage of the Nation's peacetime requirements produced from domestic mines during a recent 5-year period:

	Percent
Manganese	5–6
Chromium	1
Mercury	40
Tungsten	50
Nickel	.5
Tin	.2
Antimony	10

These facts indicate a situation that requires the earnest attention of those upon whom falls responsibility for the national safety in any emergency that would cut us off from foreign sources of supply.

The possible domestic sources and their character, the past production, with forecasts of future production for a limited period under certain assumed conditions, and the national uses and requirements are briefly discussed in the following pages.

There is already on the statutes a 1939 act, Public, No. 117, which made a modest beginning in the accumulation of strategic and critical materials. Under the 1940 Budget only about $10,000,000 was appropriated for this purpose. It is not my object to interfere in any way with the operation of Public, No. 117. The amount of materials being accumulated under that law is far below the amount which the Army and Navy Munitions Board regards as necessary for the national defense.

My objects are to give the Army and Navy Munitions Board greater authority in the acquisition of these vital materials, and at the same time to make a beginning in addressing ourselves to the pressing gold problem posed by our willingness to buy any or all the world's gold at $35 an ounce.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to direct a question to the Senator from Delaware. What does the Senator wish to have done in relation to the joint resolution? Does he wish to have it referred to some committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 230) was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I trust that my ears have heard aright all that was said and all that was read in regard to the strategic-materials joint resolution which has been introduced. I trust, too, that everyone will understand that the author of the strategic-materials bill is extremely happy to see that in the course of only 2 months a glorious conversion has come to certain Members of this body.

I call attention to the fact that when the author of the strategic-materials bill obtained the floor to present that bill, a Member of the Senate rushed over from the other side and said, "How much does the bill propose to appropriate?" I said, in as polite a way as I knew how to say it, that it provides for the purchase of $100,000,000 worth of strategic materials during the course of the next 4 years. With a slur and a wave of the hand, with utter contempt for the bill which was being offered, came the words, "Oh, a mere bagatelle. Go ahead and spend anything you want."

Mr. President, in the midst of the discussion of that bill the Senator offered an amendment reducing the amount of the appropriation called for in the bill from $25,000,000 a year to $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 a year. That amendment was adopted by this body. The bill went to conference, and when the conference report was made the chairman of the Senate conferees was chided time and time again because he did not fight for the Senate provision.

I say it is extremely gratifying to realize that in the course of a few months—and I am aware, of course, that many things have happened in those few months—some men have "seen the light" and realize that the proper way to build up this country at any time is in a manner that is consistent with the growth and the needs of the country in relation to all factors which may face it. But, Mr. President, is it not the irony of ironies that a proposal calling for an expenditure of $500,000,000 should come so quickly after so much ridicule was made of a request for $25,000,000 a year, and should come from practically the same source? Where is the "bagatelle" now, Mr. President? Who is there to stand up and talk about "a mere bagatelle," about throwing away the people's money on a proposition of this kind, which is honestly presented and should be honestly supported because, heaven knows, we need the development of these materials.

I rejoice with the Senator from Delaware in the realization of this need, and I assure him that I am in complete harmony with his objectives so far as the stock piles are concerned, and so far as making this country independent in regard to strategic materials is concerned.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in pursuance of the subject of national defense, which has just been approached here by my distinguished friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and pursued by the distinguished junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], I wish at this time to call the attention of the Members of this body to a joint resolution which I introduced in the Senate the other day, which would authorize and request the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with Great Britain for the transfer of British island possessions in the North Atlantic and in the Caribbean as far southward as Trinidad, and including British Honduras, which adjoins Guatemala and Mexico.

I am very happy to be able to state that the resolution was forwarded by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate to the State Department for their comment or criticism, and, I may add, that I am in high hope that, certainly within the month, the committee of the Senate will have received some comments from the State Department relative to my ideas as expressed in the joint resolution, for I believe that the American people are interested now in anything that will add greater protection to our coastal lines and particularly to the locks of the Panama Canal.

In this connection I wish to state, initially, that I am informed that several months ago—I believe it was last November—a committee was inaugurated for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the American people the war debts of Great Britain. The head of that committee, I believe, is the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN]. In reference to the committee, I have here before me some letters from executives who are heartily in accord with the movement, and I should like to ask that they be printed in the RECORD as part and portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall not take time to read the letters, because I want to take as little time this afternoon as possible, since we are all extremely anxious to arrive at the voting hour on the Hatch bill; at least I am, because I do not want any of my farmer friends in North Carolina to hear that I have held up a vote on another all-important bill, the agricultural appropriation bill. So if it is held up they cannot blame me. Otherwise I should take several hours on this subject, and on another one which I shall approach in a moment.

The first letter I desire printed, as part of my remarks, is dated February 28, 1940, and is from the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, a Member of the United States Congress from the Twelfth District of Massachusetts.

The letter referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1940.

Mr. PRESCOTT DENNETT,
Executive Editor, Columbia Press Service,
Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DENNETT: I am in receipt of your letter of February 2, with enclosures, which I have read with interest. I am in complete agreement with the objectives of your committee, as stated in your communication, in relation to the payment of the debts due our country from foreign nations. These debts should be paid, and proper means available should be utilized in an effort to collect the same.

I appreciate your invitation to serve as one of the vice presidents of the committee, but due to the tremendous amount of work confronting me, I am unable to accept. However, I want you to know that I appreciate your invitation.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. MCCORMACK.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Another is from the Governor of North Dakota, in which he evidences his sympathy for the movement, dated February 23, 1940.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Bismarck, February 23, 1940.

Mr. PRESCOTT DENNETT,
Executive Editor, Columbia Press Service,
Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DENNETT: I have read with great interest yours of the 12th with reference to the Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee, including the press releases.

No one can question the laudable aims of your committee because of the beneficial effects which the agitation for the collection of war debts is bound to awaken; nevertheless, I do not feel that it is advisable for me to accept your very courteous invitation to serve as North Dakota vice chairman at this time.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN MOSES, Governor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Here is another from a publisher in New York dated February 1, 1940.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE GAELIC AMERICAN,
New York, N. Y., February 1, 1940.

Mr. LINN A. E. GALE,
The Secretary, Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee,
Suite 425–426, Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Owing to unforeseen circumstances, I had not been able to reply to your letter asking me to become a member of Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee.

I thank you for your letter. I am happy to do my share in the patriotic work, and I give you my permission to have my name included as a humble member of the committee, to which I pledge my wholehearted support.

Very sincerely,

MICHAEL O'REILLY, Editor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. There is another from the chief executive of the State of Nevada, written from the capital of the State, Carson City. As it is brief, I will read it; it is addressed to Mr. Prescott Dennett, of the Bond Building, Washington, D. C., is dated February 23, 1940, and reads as follows:

STATE OF NEVADA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Carson City, February 23, 1940.

Mr. PRESCOTT DENNETT,
Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DENNETT: I have your letter of February 12, in which you invite me to serve as Nevada vice chairman of the Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee.

I am very sympathetic to this cause, as I think they should pay, and I shall be very pleased to accept the appointment. I am very busy and probably would not be able to do any active work in connection with this committee, but will give my moral support to the best of my ability.

Very truly yours,

E. P. CARVILLE, Governor.

I also have before me a printed statement which appears to have been written by Mr. George S. Parker, of Salem, Mass., a manufacturer, entitled "Short Changing Us on War Debts." It is a very appropriate article relative to the subject matter, and I ask that it be published in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SHORT-CHANGING US ON WAR DEBTS

(By George S. Parker, Salem, Mass., manufacturer)

As you know, a seductive effort is now and will be persistently in progress in Washington to short-change us on the British debt. Some international bankers—who sense money in new foreign participations; some of the pronounced Anglophiles—who, like Artemus Ward, are ready to sacrifice all of their wives' relations in the cause; and what Boake Carter calls the little branches of 10 Downing Street—like Charles Dickens' Mr. Barkis, "are willin'." The balance of the 130,000,000 United States citizens are not willing.

The best possible way not to collect a debt is not to do or say anything about it. It adds much to the comfortable forgetfulness and aplomb of the nonpayee.

But now our repentent opportunists from overseas (for reasons we are rather good at guessing) want to make another trade—another settlement.

By the way, how many trades do we have to make to make one?

We cut the British debt in halves (the half we have cut off our children and grandchildren will have to pay).

We added a million square miles to their property holdings by entering a European row.

We were, you remember, too virtuous to suggest we share in the "swag." We received neither spoils, compliments, nor gratitude.

Seriously, who has the right to transfer foreign-debt payments from a wealthy and powerful empire to the shoulders of our own people? Some one must pay—either the British debtor or the American public. Is it not time for Uncle Sam to politely but firmly demand an honest settlement and accept nothing else?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, relative to the subject matter, someone who is interested in it handed me a clipping which I note comes from the pages of the Washington Evening Star of the issue of Thursday, March 7, 1940, entitled:

Strategic value seen for United States in Atlantic islands.
Possession would give vast aid to defense, says Major Eliot.

The article is by Maj. George Fielding Eliot. The article has particular reference to the acquisition of the islands in the Caribbean, Bermuda, and British Honduras. It appears to be a reprint of a copyrighted article which appeared in the columns of the New York Tribune of New York City. I read the article with a great deal of interest, and I observed that Major Eliot goes further than I would at this time, since he suggests possibly the acquisition of French and British possessions about half way, I should say, viewing it as I do now, between Venezuela and the lower part of Brazil. The British, as we know, have some possessions there, and likewise the French. He has made suggestion of those possessions and, according to my recollection of the article, he also takes into consideration the Falkland Islands and he makes mention likewise, I think, of Lower California. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of March 7, 1940]

STRATEGIC VALUE SEEN FOR UNITED STATES IN ATLANTIC ISLANDS—POSSESSION WOULD GIVE VAST AID TO DEFENSE, SAYS MAJOR ELIOT

(By Maj. George Fielding Eliot)

Recently I had occasion to comment on the extension of the area of our military interest in the region immediately adjacent to the Panama Canal forced upon us by the increase in the range, speed, and destructive power of modern weapons.

For similar, though not identical, reasons there is apparent a quickening of interest in the islands of the Atlantic. Several proposals have been made in congressional circles for the acquisition of some of the British and French islands in this hemisphere; it may, therefore, be an appropriate moment to examine in some detail the strategic considerations which should affect our attitude toward these island positions.

If we were, now or at some future time, to seek for military purposes the acquisition of any of these islands or the possession, by leasehold or otherwise, of bases therein, our reasons would include one or more of the following:

1. To extend the radius of action of our naval or air forces into areas in which they cannot efficiently operate from existing bases.
2. To deny to a possible enemy positions which might otherwise be occupied and used as bases against us.
3. To provide harbors of refuge for our ocean and coastwise shipping and aircraft and points of support for patrol forces and convoy escorts.

DEFENSE RESTS ON PUERTO RICO

From the naval viewpoint, our basic position in the Atlantic Ocean is the Caribbean Sea, an enclosed maritime area which covers the Panama Canal, and into which our fleet, moving from its normal station in the Pacific, might be expected to debouch if its presence in the Atlantic were required. The defense of the eastward part of the Caribbean will rest on our new base at Puerto Rico when it is completed.

The principal entrance from the Atlantic to the Caribbean is the Windward Passage, between Cuba and Haiti, through which passes the bulk of our intercoastal traffic en route between Panama and East coast ports. This waterway is controlled by our base, held on lease from Cuba, at Guantanamo Bay, but in the seaward direction the approaches to the Windward Passage are commanded by the British Archipelago of the Bahama Islands, which also covers the approaches to the Strait of Florida, the only direct route from the Atlantic to the Gulf of Mexico. This archipelago has many anchorages which might be used by submarines or seaplane carriers; in any Atlantic war it would prove certainly a nuisance, and possibly a danger, unless we were able to control it.

Outward from the Caribbean our fleet can operate either to the north or the south. If operating to the north it will have the support of our Atlantic coast home bases. If, however, it were required to operate in the South Atlantic its radius of action would be much more circumscribed. It is necessary to remember that a European naval force possessing an advance base on the western bulge of Africa or in the vicinity of the Cape Verde Islands would be approximately 1,000 miles nearer to the chief ports on the east coast of South America than we are at Puerto Rico, our easternmost base. Hence, we certainly have a considerable degree of interest in any change in the political or military tenure of any point on the African coast in the area indicated, or the adjacent islands.

GOOD SYSTEM IN PACIFIC

In the Pacific we have a very good island outpost system, which serves both offensive and defensive purposes. In the Atlantic our coast might be so protected and the radius of action of our forces materially extended if we held positions at Newfoundland and Bermuda, by which, in conjunction with Puerto Rico, an adequate seaward patrol could be maintained. Newfoundland especially would enable us to observe with less anxiety any change in the political status of Denmark, since from Newfoundland we could, more easily than we can now, impose our veto on any attempt by Germany or some other power to take over Iceland and Greenland. A naval and air base on Newfoundland, provided it had an ice-free harbor, would indeed be an admirable covering point for the whole vital Northeastern section of the United States.

It is possible to exaggerate the danger of Bermuda as a potential base for attack on our coast. The island at present has no great resources of its own, nor is it strongly fortified. Its relation to us is not dissimilar to that of Guam to Japan. We could not tolerate an enemy there and we certainly could prevent any enemy from establishing himself there, or from staying long if he did manage to arrive.

If Bermuda were to be heavily fortified so as to be capable of prolonged resistance aircraft operating thence might indeed do us serious damage; but it is hardly to be contemplated that we should stand idly by during the 2 or 3 years that would be necessary to convert Bermuda into a fortress of the first class. Southward from Puerto Rico our first point of interest is in the vicinity of Trinidad. This location would enable us to control the one main shipping lane into the Caribbean which we do not now directly dominate, that from the Panama Canal to the east coast of South America, which passes just north of Trinidad. Such a base would also advance us several hundred miles closer to the east coast ports of South America than we now are at Puerto Rico, though it would still not wholly overcome the advantage which would be possessed by a European force based in West Africa.

INTERESTED IN BRAZIL'S HARBORS

A position on the coast of French Guiana would advance us still farther, but in case of actual operations in the South Atlantic it is probable that we should have to make some arrangements for the use of Brazilian harbors, the only really satisfactory solution to the problem. Hence, our interest in Brazilian harbor defense evidenced by the presence of our coast artillery mission in Brazil and our sale to that country of 90 long-range 6-inch guns—hardly suitable weapons for Brazilian conditions, but admirable for harbor defense purposes.

The positions mentioned—Newfoundland, Bermuda, the Bahama Islands, Trinidad and vicinity, and French Guiana—are the points of chief military interest to us among the Atlantic and West Indian possessions of Great Britain and France. However, we would be compelled in self-defense to prevent any forcible transfer of any European possession in this hemisphere. The Danish and Dutch possessions must be borne particularly in mind in this respect. We would assuredly use force if necessary to prevent their occupation by Germany, nor would we be likely to allow Great Britain to take them over as a "protective" measure.

In writing the above I have confined myself purely to military and strategical considerations. The political difficulties which we would encounter in any move to acquire these positions are certainly very great, but one wonders whether, in view of the precarious situation of the world, we ought not, in our own present and future interest, to make a genuine effort to overcome these difficulties and adjust our military position in this hemisphere. Remember that bases mean ships and aircraft; that is to say, the more well-located bases we have, the greater our forces can cover and the less the total force required. It is a matter well worth careful and considered attention.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In addition to that, Mr. President, I have here some clippings from American newspapers. Here is one from the Baltimore Sun, of Baltimore, Md., of March 5, 1940, in reference to my proposal. Here is an editorial from a newspaper—I do not know the name of the newspaper, as the clipping was handed to me by someone interested in the matter, without the name being attached. I have also a lengthy editorial from the Chicago Tribune of March 6, an editorial from the Boone, Iowa, News Republican of March 5, and one from the Courier Times of Newcastle, Ind. I will number them and ask that they be published in the RECORD consecutively as numbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[From the Baltimore Morning Sun of March 5, 1940]

ASKS LAND SEIZURE FOR BRITISH DEBT—REYNOLDS WANTS UNITED STATES TO TAKE WEST INDIAN AND CENTRAL AMERICAN AREA—CONGRESS ALSO TO GET PLAN TO NEGOTIATE FOR FRENCH TERRITORY

(By Paul W. Ward)

WASHINGTON, March 4.—A proposal that the United States take over British Honduras in Central America and all the British islands off the coast of America, including Bermuda, was put formally before the Senate today in a resolution introduced by Senator REYNOLDS (Democrat, North Carolina).

An identical resolution was introduced simultaneously in the House by Representative RANDOLPH (Democrat, West Virginia).

The joint resolution proposes that the British possessions be taken over by the United States in part payment on Britain's World War debt, which now amounts, Senator REYNOLDS said, to $5,574,430,793.82.

EYE ON FRENCH LAND ALSO

The Senator also announced that he and RANDOLPH would introduce later in the week a joint resolution empowering and requesting the President to institute negotiations with France for the taking over by the United States of French islands off the Atlantic coast in part payment of France's war debt.

Senator REYNOLDS said that both proposals were being advanced "for defense purposes only." The British possessions in the West Indies, for example, he said, would make excellent naval and air bases to insure the protection of the Panama Canal.

Denying that what he proposed was an act unfriendly to Great Britain and France, he said it was, instead, "an act of charity" and a way of assisting the Allies in their present war-born difficulties. He argued that in providing a means for France and Britain to reduce their debts without further outlay of cash the United States would be supplying a helpful and friendly service.

WAR BURDEN CITED

He reminded the Senate that Britain's World War debt to the United States was no inconsiderable burden to be carrying at the outset of a new war.

Of that debt, he said, $1,206,430,793 represents interest accumulated and unpaid. The last token payment made on this debt, he added, was $7,500,000 against interest accumulated and past due. This last token payment was made December 15, 1933. The "first absolute default" on Britain's debt occurred, according to the State Department, June 15, 1934.

Listing the British possessions in the Western Hemisphere that he would like to see the United States take over as part payment on the British debt, Senator REYNOLDS mentioned Bimini, which lies, he said, 50 miles from Florida and derives a large part of its income from American tourists.

NASSAU NAMED NEXT

Next, he named the island of Nassau, 150 miles off the Atlantic coast, and Jamaica, which lies to the south of Cuba.

Then, dipping to the south of the Virgin Islands, he named the Windward and Leeward Islands belonging to Britain. The chain so named, he said, would form a protective ring from Florida to Port of Spain, Trinidad.

Finally, he mentioned British Honduras, which is in Central America next to Guatemala and Nicaragua, and Bermuda, which lies 535 miles out in the Atlantic opposite North Carolina.

The total area of the British possessions he would like to see the United States take over, he said, is approximately 20,000 square miles.

FACTS ABOUT JAMAICA

Jamaica, the largest and most valuable of the British West Indies, lies 90 miles south of Cuba, is about the size of Connecticut, has a population of 1,138,558, and includes as a political entity the Turks, Caicos, and Cayman Islands.

Bermuda, which has been a British possession since 1609, is a group of 360 small islands with a total area of 19 square miles and a population of 30,951. It derives its chief income from American tourist trade and finds it so enriching that it does not need to levy taxes on real estate, incomes, or inheritances.

The other British island possessions in American waters are the Barbados, easternmost of the Windward group, with an area of 166 square miles and a population of 190,000; Trinidad, southernmost of the British West Indies, with an area of 1,862 square miles and a population of 387,000; Tobago, lying near Trinidad, with a population of 25,358 and an area of 114 square miles; the Bahama Islands, including Nassau, with an area of 4,404 square miles and a population of 66,908; Grenada, the Grenadines, St. Vincent, and St. Lucia, in the Windward group, with a combined population and area of 516 square miles and 186,000 persons, and Antigua, Barbuda, Redonda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, Dominica, Montserrat, Sombrero, and the British Virgin Islands, in the Leeward group.

WHAT POSSESSIONS PRODUCE

These last have a combined area and population of 727 square miles and 142,600 persons.

Almost all these British possessions produce coffee, bananas, ginger, cocoa, tobacco, sugar, cotton, and spices. Trinidad produces asphalt and oil, its great asphalt lake being the principal source of the asphalt used in the United States.

Senator REYNOLDS, referring to the resolution he plans to introduce later in the week with reference to French possessions in this hemisphere, referred specifically to only two islands and he could not at the moment recall their names. He located them, however, as lying near Newfoundland.

LAND FRANCE OWNS

The French possessions in that area are a group of rocky, barren islands known as St. Pierre and Miquelon. They lie at the mouth of Fortune Bay, have an area of 93 square miles and boast a population of 4,695, mostly fishermen.

The other French possessions in this hemisphere are Guadalupe and Martinique, in the Windward Islands, and French Guiana, on the north coast of South America between Dutch Guiana and Brazil. They bring the total area of French possessions in this hemisphere to 65,419 square miles and their total population to 592,650.

MR. ROOSEVELT IN THE CARIBBEAN

Mr. Roosevelt is home again from his 15-day midwinter cruise, having fished the Caribbean and inspected the defenses in the Canal Zone. His inspections convinced him that the Canal needs more protection and that it should have a longer range. He would include parts of Central and South America in the defense zone. He also wants a spare set of locks for the Canal at an estimated cost of $277,000,000.

In Washington the House Appropriations Committee has refused to grant the request for this sum, holding that it isn't an urgent need and that preliminary work is required before building appropriations are made. The committee was willing to give money for plans and specifications for a new set of locks, allowing $850,000 for this purpose. When the plans are drawn Congress will be willing to examine them but is unwilling to set aside a sum for the whole undertaking until it had been studied. In asking for money, Mr. Roosevelt is nearly always a man in a hurry.

If Mr. Roosevelt's study of national defense in southern waters brought him to the conclusion that a longer range was required, logic, then, will lead him on to the other consistent conclusion that national defense requires the possession of the islands occupied by the British and the French on the Atlantic side, and also possession of the Galapagos on the Pacific. The problems of transfer are different on the two sides and, indeed, simpler on the Atlantic.

When Mr. Hull has trouble with the British blockade and censorship of mails in the nearby British island of Bermuda, he is stumbling into more than a question of the interpretation of international law. He is confronted by the weighty influence of sea power with a station off the American coast. He and Mr. Roosevelt are learning the military importance of that particular island, because the American clippers carrying mail for Europe have been making it a port of call and have had their mails removed.

Mr. Hull may not know precisely what to say when he is told that America at war in 1917 and 1918 laid down a rule of censorship of mails from neutral ports and declined to acknowledge the inviolability of sacks which might contain material useful to the enemy. What a nation does in war often arises to embarrass it when it is on the other side of the fence. But Bermuda is pointing a finger at America to reemphasize the potential military value of the French and British American possessions lying within the zone of American defense.

Even if the question of ownership be lightly dismissed with the foolish assertion that the present owners are friendly, this bit of heedlessness and disregard of possible consequences is attended by no guaranty that the ownership will remain as now. We are told by our interventionists that one of our dangers is a Nazi victory, which would sweep Great Britain away as a sea power and open the Americas to aggression by governments hostile in ideas and vigorous in their expansion. Mr. Roosevelt himself endorses that view.

If a peace treaty did to Britain and France what Versailles did to republican Germany, Mr. Hitler's flag would be raised on all the British and French possessions on this side of the water. There are hints in Washington that if such a thing impended we'd have to do something about it. That is, we'd have to use force to prevent such a transfer. We'd have to say that these possessions were not spoils of war. We'd have to try at the possible cost of a war then to do what we are so foolish as not to undertake peaceably now.

If Mr. Roosevelt's cruise and his study of defenses have led him to doubt the wisdom of doing nothing to acquire possessions of military value, then he has spent his time on the Tuscaloosa to better national advantage than came from any of the other fishing expeditions. If he has landed this idea, he has really got something.

[From the Chicago Tribune of March 6, 1940]

DO WE GET THESE ISLANDS?

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, North Carolina Democrat, has introduced a resolution authorizing and requesting the President to enter into negotiations with Great Britain for the acquisition of British islands and possessions in American waters. In speaking of his resolution, Senator REYNOLDS said that Bermuda, the Bahamas, the Barbados, and Trinidad are potential air and naval bases for the defense of the Canal. He said at a later date he would introduce another resolution authorizing and requesting similar negotiations for the acquisition of French possessions.

Mr. Roosevelt has just returned from a cruise to the Canal Zone, where he professed himself much concerned for the safety of communications and proposed that large appropriations be made immediately for additional reserve locks. He also said that the defense of American waters must take a longer range. The present war should give all the necessary arguments for that view. Our Government makes a new profession of its understanding of it and is developing a base at Puerto Rico. Bermuda is giving us an illustration of the value of military possessions in our waters.

Senator REYNOLDS' resolution is in line with a policy as old as the Republic itself. Even when Presidents have been reluctant to take the steps which have rounded out the domain of the United States and to pursue the course which has gradually eliminated European interests and influences on the continent and in its waters, they have nevertheless found themselves serving the destiny of natural and prudent expansion. The status of the American Republic would be incalculably different from what it is if the country had not been bold enough to accept its opportunities as they were presented. We might have been confined to the area east of the Mississippi if there had not been men who were determined to go to the Pacific. We might have lost Hawaii to some more enterprising nation and would have lost the security this outpost gives to the Pacific coast.

By war and purchase we have restricted the play of European influences in our natural domain and are infinitely the safer because we have done so. In the Monroe Doctrine we recognized the dangers of allowing foreign imperialisms to gain a new foothold here. If there is anything enduring in our foreign policy it is stated in this doctrine. If we can be as successful in keeping out of Europe as we have been in removing Europe from this hemisphere, our peace will be on a protected base.

For the first time in the long record of imperial expansion and acquisition we hear of sovereignty as something too proud to permit the transfer of possessions. Imperial history reveals change of ownership with nearly every war, and many of the transfers were as compensations and rewards—to pay off an ally or to collect from an enemy. After the other World War there were no scruples in the disposition of the German colonies. Is honor to be satisfied only by violent appropriation? Are the peaceable methods of barter dishonorable? And is it still further dishonorable for a debtor to pay in territory when he cannot pay in money?

Americans do not think of these foreign possessions as valuable in resources or as trade assets. Most of them might prove, as some other possessions have proved, to be liabilities. We haven't made the best job of it in Puerto Rico or in the Virgin Islands, and may be glad that we are not responsible for Cuba. The British have a headache in Jamaica, which is not one of their colonial successes at the present time. When Americans propose to liquidate British and French holdings they are not grasping for new sources of wealth or for anything that would be beneficial to their national economy. They are asking for the rectification of a military situation and when they address these proposals to Great Britain and France they do so with arguments which can be understood in Paris and London as nowhere else in the world.

When the British and French look at their own maps and see how they are sitting astride the trade routes, they can understand without any elaborate arguments from Senator REYNOLDS or anybody else why America puts forth its claim to these fragments of their old American domain which have remained where they once conquered. The military uses of such posts can never be completely defined. The potentialities are conditioned by the future. The person who underrates an island base in his own waters is more foolish than prophetic. In this year of great world uncertainty, when the Americas are trying to keep the war out of their own seas, our Government should be alert to the fact that outposts of warlike nations are badly placed off our shores if America is to safeguard its own peace.

[From the Boone (Iowa) News-Republican of March 5, 1940]

ISLANDS INSTEAD OF CASH

What was at first considered more of a fanciful proposal than a practical means of getting a little back on certain bad debts has now become a subject for Senate resolutions. We refer to the plan whereby the United States would be ceded British and French islands in the Caribbean in part payment of outstanding World War debts. Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, plans to introduce several resolutions authorizing the President to start negotiations with the nations concerned.

For several years this idea has been brought up ever so often for consideration. It was a pet of the late Senator J. Ham Lewis, of Illinois. The British and French have taken sufficient notice of the proposal to say that they would never consider handing their West Indian possessions over to Uncle Sam.

They might change their minds, however. Now that they are involved in another large-scale European war, they have plenty to do without looking out for remote insular possessions. Then, too, they may want some more money from the United States before long. Under the Johnson Act they are prevented from getting any. Ceding the Caribbean islands, Bermuda, some of the Bahamas, and certain other islands to the United States would make a neat dent in the amounts outstanding on the books against France and England.

Those islands are of vital importance to the United States in national defense. They would be of far greater value to us than they could ever be to their present owners. For that reason, the United States would probably be pretty generous in financial arrangements.

In the case of Bermuda, it would give the American airplanes an American landing place on the trans-Atlantic route. It will be remembered that in the late argument over censorship of the mails at Bermuda, there were those in Washington who shouted "seize Bermuda." That was nonsense, of course, but it shows that Bermuda would be welcomed as a possession.

The United States has never wanted a wide-flung empire. We are letting go of the Philippines as fast as we can. But these islands within a few hundred miles of our shores are a different matter. We need them.

[From the New Castle (Ind.) Courier-Times of March 6, 1940]

As a result of the flare-up with Great Britain over the seizure of American mail, Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, wants to buy Bermuda. He has introduced a bill for the purchase of Bermuda in partial payment of Britain's debt to us from the last war. In the meanwhile the trans-Atlantic plane service has dropped Bermuda as a port of call and the huge ships now fly directly to the Azores, thus avoiding the British censorship. Of course, there is some merit to Senator REYNOLDS' position. Bermuda is in American waters and is a potential military base. But it doesn't take much guessing to forecast the result of the deal. Britain isn't selling any real estate right now, especially any that is so fortunately located as a stepping stone between Europe and America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I am anything but desirous of consuming the time of the Senate when I and all other Senators, of course, are very anxious to arrive at a vote on the Hatch bill, because the farmers of America realize that we ought to vote on the Hatch bill and then consider and pass the measure in which they are particularly interested. So, in order that my farmer friends in North Carolina may never get the idea that I am holding up a vote on that bill, I am going to limit my argument to the very important subject which I shall now approach.

A few nights ago I was looking over the New York Sun and my eyes fell upon a heading that interested me tremendously, in view of the fact that we are all greatly interested in the unemployment problem which is largely attributable to the alien influx. The New York Sun of the issue of Thursday, March 7, 1940, contains a story which is headlined:

Some 43,252 aliens on city relief without work.
Report shows many who are barred from W. P. A. are employable.
Mayor urges change in law.
Says citizens are compelled to take jobs while foreigners can remain at home.

It is very interesting to note that the story goes on to relate that some 43,252 aliens of the city of New York alone do not have to work for a living; they are supported by the taxpayers of America.

They stay at home, do no work, and get relief—that is what I call a refugee heaven—while Americans, if they get any relief, have to go out and work for it with pick and shovel and the sweat of their brows.

I see that the presiding officer is so thoroughly interested in this subject that I am going to presume to read portions of this article. The headline is:

FORTY-THREE THOUSAND, TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY-TWO ALIENS ON CITY RELIEF WITHOUT WORK—REPORT SHOWS MANY WHO ARE BARRED FROM W. P. A. ARE EMPLOYABLE—MAYOR URGES CHANGE IN LAW—SAYS CITIZENS ARE COMPELLED TO TAKE JOBS WHILE FOREIGNERS CAN REMAIN AT HOME

The city of New York is supporting on home relief 43,252 aliens—

That is appalling, to my mind, particularly in view of the fact that the other day I noticed in the headlines of a newspaper here that the First Lady of our Land complained that the Home for the Aged at Blue Plains was a disgrace to civilization. Then I read a report by some of the Representatives in the other body of Congress who very vividly described the deplorable conditions which exist here in the Capital of our country. Of course, we can hardly pick up any issue of any newspaper anywhere without finding in it stories of persons committing suicide because of being despondent about securing work, and mothers offering to sell or to give away their children because they cannot provide them with milk, and thousands upon thousands of American refugees hastening to warm climates, such as the States of California and Florida, because it is impossible to live elsewhere and provide for themselves heat in the form of firewood or coal; and here we find that almost within a stone's throw of the Capital of the country 43,000 aliens are living on relief, having their shelter provided for them and their clothing given them, and food with which to sustain themselves.

I say again, as many American publishers are now beginning to say, although they thought it before, that it is high time we were giving a little of our attention and a little of our sympathy to the American people, rather than giving so much of our sympathy, time, attention, and money to people abroad.

The article goes on to say:

The city of New York is supporting on home relief 43,252 aliens, many of whom are able to work. But under the governmental rules, none of them may take W. P. A. positions and work for their allowances. They must receive their city home-relief checks each month in idleness at home.

The situation, made public today for the first time by William Hodson, commissioner of welfare, evoked this comment from Mayor LaGuardia:

"Congress, in the desire to give preference to citizens, excluded aliens from W. P. A. If work relief were the only method of relief, the congressional provision would have been carried out. The result is that a citizen is compelled to take W. P. A. work of any kind, while aliens simply remain on home relief without taking work."

He urged a change in the law.

WANTS WORK FOR RELIEF

The mayor seeks, by amending the State law, "to put aliens who are on home relief * * * to work." A change in the law, he said, would "equalize the situation and would require all who are able to do some work to do it and we could have a check and control over those who are entirely out of work and claiming relief."

The revelation of the number of aliens supported in idleness by the city came to light with the publication of an occupational inventory of the city's home-relief population by Commissioner Hodson. The inventory showed that of the 192,368 persons 16 years of age or older who are on the relief rolls, 122,567 are ineligible for W. P. A. enrollment for various reasons, although 39,191 of them are able-bodied persons. Lack of citizenship is the principal reason for this ineligibility.

The moving of these alien cases off the home-relief rolls of the city and onto the Federal pay roll would make room for more of the home-bred needy and would certainly reduce relief costs, now at their peak, the report stated.

REPORTED 34,910 COULD WORK

According to Mr. Hodson's report, of those actually or presumptively eligible for employment on the W. P. A., 34,910 are eligible without limitation, 12,324 are capable of light labor only on the advice of physicians, 6,745 are eligible but with physical handicaps, and 15,813 are eligible but employability doubtful.

Should these 69,792 cases be moved over to W. P. A. and their cases closed on home relief, one-third of the city's monthly relief burden would be closed and room on the rolls provided for other needy. Few of the employables, however, are skilled, the majority falling into unskilled classifications. Only 1,752 of the men classified had as much as a common labor background. As many as 8,226 had never had a job.

When we come to the discussion in this body of the alien situation, it is a debatable question how many aliens there are in the United States. Nobody knows, and it appears to me that nobody wants to know; nobody cares. Why that state of mind should exist is beyond my comprehension, because I should think all of us would be extremely anxious to know how many aliens there are in the country, in order that we might definitely ascertain how many Americans are being deprived of work by aliens who are in this country either legally or illegally. The respective States are becoming so thoroughly disgusted with Congress—the States realizing, I presume, that Congress never is going to do anything about the matter—that they have simply had to take the situation in their own hands, and endeavor to make laws of their own.

Now, let us see about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should very much like to know how many aliens there are in the country. Will the Senator tell us?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank my distinguished colleague immensely for that inquiry. For years I have been endeavoring to ascertain how many aliens there are in the United States, and I knew that I never should be able to obtain an answer to my inquiry until such time as we in this body and those in the other House of Congress enact a law providing for a mandatory registration of aliens in the United States, in order that we may definitely ascertain the number, not only for ourselves but for the American people.

I claim that there are about 5,000,000 aliens in the United States. Recently I observed in the columns of the Chicago Tribune an article purporting to be a statement by Representative DIES, the chairman of the special committee in the House, to the effect that there are 7,000,000 aliens in the United States. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization recently released, according to my recollection, a statement to the effect that there are only about 3,826,000 aliens in the United States; but, of course, he had in mind only the aliens who came here legally. I claim that there are in this country a million or more aliens who came here illegally. Therefore, I say there are 5,000,000 aliens in the United States. Representative DIES says there are 7,000,000 here. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization of the Department of Labor asserts that there are only 3,826,000 aliens who are here legally. We should all like to know how many there are. The American people are entitled to know how many aliens they are supporting with their money. The American workmen, millions of whom are out of work today, are entitled to know how many million aliens are working in the places they ought to be occupying; but we shall never know, Senators, until we provide for a mandatory registration of aliens.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that at the last session of Congress I introduced a bill, which is still on the calendar, which had for its purpose ascertaining the very matter which the Senator is discussing at this time. It was my thought then that during the time that the census is being taken this year the census takers might obtain that information. I was unable to secure sufficient support to bring about the passage of the bill. The bill is still on the calendar. I hope to see it passed at this time with proper amendments which may make it possible for such a census to be taken as will elicit this information.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I recall with appreciation every fact that the Senator has stated. I am 100 percent in favor of his proposal. I had high hopes that his bill could be passed, although it was not as drastic as the one I introduced about 2 years ago. I have had pending before the Senate Committee on Immigration a bill which would bring about the mandatory registration and fingerprinting of all aliens in the United States. I never have been able to get the bill reported upon; and when the able junior Senator from my sister State of Tennessee introduced his proposal, I thought surely then we might expect some relief for the American taxpayers and for the American workmen, and information for the American people. But, as the Senator has stated, he has not been able to obtain any support for his bill; and, Mr. President, that is not understandable so far as I am concerned. When it comes to doing something for the American people, deriving information for them, making jobs for them, displacing foreigners so that American workmen may take their places, I cannot understand why it is that we never want to do anything for the American people; but when it comes to helping the Finns, when it comes to helping the Poles, when it comes to helping the Chinese, when it comes to helping this race and that race, we all run headlong as fast as we can go to help them; and what do we do about it?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Just let me finish this statement. I am thinking now about the Finns. My beloved friend the Senator from Michigan has just asked recognition. Here we are rushing headlong and hell-bent into helping the Finns, when I say we ought to have been helping the people of the United States—the people of Tennessee, North Carolina, Kentucky, Delaware, Michigan, Georgia, and all the other States; and what do we get out of it? I picked up the morning newspaper and I noticed that the Russians and the Finns have signed an armistice. There will be no more war; and what do we get out of it? We get a kick in the pants because the newspapers all state that Finland is sore and disgusted with the United States. In that case help had been rendered to Finland first by giving her a $10,000,000 loan, and then by this body voting another $20,000,000; but the Finns are mad because we did not give them more help, and because what we did give them did not arrive in time.

By sticking our nose in the business over there, what did we do? We made enemies of the Finns, who once were friendly. I have always said, if you want to make an enemy of somebody, lend him money. That will make an enemy out of a friend. At the same time we made Russia more angry with us.

Every time we stick our noses over there we get ourselves into the fix of a fellow about whom I heard once. While walking along a dusty highway, he met a man on the road.

They got into a fight and the other fellow pulled out a knife and cut off the nose of the first man. His nose fell in the dusty highway, and he was in such a hurry to put it back on that he picked it up and put it on upside down, and thereafter every time he sneezed he blew his hat off, and every time it rained he nearly choked to death. [Laughter.] So it is that every time we stick our nose into someone else's business we get into a hell of a fix.

I now gladly yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the Finnish question, because I am certain that if I did I would be accused of filibustering. I wanted to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he would object to my addressing a question to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, and asking him whether he has arranged a filibuster this afternoon, because the first speaker of the afternoon was the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who spoke for an hour and a half, the next was the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who spoke for an hour, and now the Senator from North Carolina, who has spoken for half an hour, and I think perhaps will take considerably more time. The Senators mentioned are all supporters of the Hatch bill. Are they engaged in a filibuster to prevent the consideration of that measure?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to say to my distinguished friend from Michigan that I am ready to vote for the Hatch bill, at this very moment, and I hope we can get to a vote this afternoon, because the farmers are waiting to hear the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. They want some money, and I am for giving them some money. Everyone else has had some.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the farmer is accustomed by now to waiting until every other matter has been disposed of before his bill is considered. It is nothing new to him, and when, in the pleasure of the Senate, its Members are ready to consider the farm bill, they will find me in the farmer's accustomed seat, at the very end of the line, hoping and praying that at some time the discussion will end, or that the pending business may be laid aside to enable us to proceed with the very important agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And the Senator will find me right behind him, because I am right behind the farmer. [Laughter.] We are all behind the farmer. I am behind the farmer year in and year out.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad the Senator has decided to fall behind the farmers. When the Senator had an opportunity Monday to vote with the farmers to consider the farm bill the Senator voted "nay," and no amount of lip service and votes will avail the farmer anything if we delay the bill until the enemies of the Senate committee amendments have had an opportunity to dig a trap somewhere else in which to bury those amendments.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I voted to delay the farm bill until we voted on the pending bill. I am ready to vote on the Hatch bill right now; I want to vote for it, so as to show my farmer friends in North Carolina that I am not delaying this matter, and thereby delaying the farm bill. I am for the farmer year in and year out. I do not have to be for him especially this year, because I am not a candidate; but I am going to stay right with the farmers all the time, as I have always done.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to know that the Senator is for the farmers, and I hope that in the event the pending business shall not be disposed of within a reasonable time, and I feel constrained to make another effort to have the agricultural appropriation bill considered, the Senator will vote with the farmer as well as be for the farmer.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I certainly will. I have always voted for the farmer. I am going to vote for the bill of the Senator from Georgia. I am going to follow him, because I know his heart is with the farmer, and I know that so long as I follow the Senator from Georgia I cannot go wrong.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate the compliment of the Senator——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I mean that.

Mr. RUSSELL. And I wish he had felt that way on Monday, when the effort was made to bring up the farmer's bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am willing to vote on the Hatch bill right now. I am sorry so much time has been taken up.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am about to conclude. I was talking about aliens.

Mr. PEPPER. Just one short question, and that is all I will have to ask. I merely want to get an expression from the Senator from North Carolina as to who he thought were perhaps most injurious and detrimental to the country, those who are thwarting the legitimate aspirations of the farmers, or the aliens. Against which class does the Senator's ire most highly rise?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I know of no subject before the American people of any more importance than the question of aliens in this country. The Senator no doubt was not in the Chamber a moment ago when I brought to the attention of the Senate a clipping from the New York Sun of March 7, in which Mayor LaGuardia was reported as having stated that 43,252 aliens were living on relief in the city of New York alone. They are not working people, are just living on relief. I think the American people are vitally interested in knowing how many aliens they shall continue to feed, where they come from, when they came, why they are here, whose jobs they are taking, and so forth. I have no apology to make to this body for speaking about the millions of aliens who are in this country, who have the jobs of Americans, and who are eating up the money of the taxpayers. I have no apology to make. I am anxious for the day to come when we can go on record in this body as to where we stand on that subject, as to whether we are for the aliens or are for American citizens. I am praying for that day to come.

Now I shall conclude by asking that there be printed in the RECORD an article which I hold in my hand in reference to the alien question entitled "Immigration to United States Shows Rapid Growth." The article appeared in the American Vindicator, a magazine published monthly at Washington, D. C., in its issue of March 1940.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the American Vindicator for March 1940]

IMMIGRATION TO UNITED STATES SHOWS RAPID GROWTH

Immigration Commissioner James L. Houghteling has reported that 82,998 immigrants were legally admitted to the United States last year, the largest number since 1931.

"The prevention of illegal entry into the United States has continued as a major problem of the immigration and naturalization service," he said.

INCREASE FROM EUROPE

Houghteling noted "the phenomenon of a steady increase in immigration from central Europe since the German annexation of Austria in March 1939." The report covered the fiscal year ended last June 30.

The number of immigrants from central Europe increased from 27,762 in 1937 to 62,402 in 1939. More than half of those—33,515—were from Germany and annexed Austria.

Italy supplied 6,570 immigrants to the United States; Poland sent 3,072; Czechoslovakia, 2,896; England, 2,739; Hungary, 1,348; France, 1,907; Ireland, 1,101; Switzerland, 1,237; Yugoslavia, 1,090; the Netherlands, 1,259. No other country in Europe sent more than 1,000.

TWO THOUSAND ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-TWO FROM ASIA

There were 2,162 immigrants from Asia. Palestine sent 1,066; China, 642; Japan, 102; Syria, 207; and there were 145 from other Asiatic countries. Canada supplied 10,070 immigrants; Mexico, 2,649; and the West Indies, 2,231. There were 915 immigrants from South America.

The records showed 185,333 nonimmigrants were admitted last year, compared with 184,802 in the previous year.

Some 51,363,952 persons crossed the United States borders between Canada and Mexico.

During the year the United States deported 17,792 aliens, compared with 18,553 in the previous fiscal year. Of that number, 1,662 were classed as criminals. For 1,085 persons it was the second time they had been deported.

CHECK PLEASE

"Now let's check up on this immigration business," said a full-blooded American who believes in America for Americans.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, the following countries sent to the United States immigrants (legally entered) under the quota, 23,219:

Italy	6,570
Poland	3,072
Czechoslovakia	2,896
England	2,739
Hungary	1,348
France	1,907
Ireland	1,101
Switzerland	1,237
Yugoslavia	1,090
Holland	1,259
Total	23,219

From Germany and annexed Austria there came 33,515. This shows that 10,286 more immigrants came into the United States from Germany than from the combined 10 countries enumerated above. "Why? Who are they and why do we permit them to flood our shores and take American jobs from American workers?" inquired our full-blooded American. He continued: "Commissioner Houghteling of the Immigration Division of the Labor Department tells us that last year 82,998 quota immigrants came to the United States and that in addition there came 185,333 nonquota immigrants. This makes a total of 268,331. More than a quarter of a million foreigners.

"But that isn't all. How many came illegally? That's the real question. And, another real question is: How many of the more than fifty-one million who crossed the Canadian and Mexican borders remained here—how many skipped ship as Harry Bridges did when he entered? How many are smuggled in here from Cuba, Nassau, Bimini, Bermuda, and other nearby places?

"Thousands upon thousands of aliens enter our ports on the Atlantic and Pacific annually by way of tourist and student visas. They enter legally. How many remain illegally? Now, there's a question for you.

"There is no way of checking up on those who remain here illegally. There is no way of arriving at the grand total who slip into our country in violation of our immigration laws. There is no way of determining now how many aliens (noncitizens) there are in our country because we don't have a law requiring the mandatory registration and fingerprinting of aliens here. Why not? Ask your Senator or your Congressman. He's supposed to safeguard your interests, the interests of his constituents, the American people. He's supposed to preserve American jobs for American citizens. Is he doing it? It's up to you to check up on him. Will you do it?"

Every other civilized nation upon the face of the earth keeps close track upon their aliens by way of registration and fingerprinting systems. Why can't we of the United States have such a law? Have we become alien-minded or is it that we just don't give a damn?

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] as modified.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Ashurst	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Austin	Ellender	La Follette	Sheppard
Bailey	Frazier	Lee	Shipstead
Bankhead	George	Lodge	Smathers
Barbour	Gerry	Lundeen	Smith
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Bilbo	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Capper	Hale	Murray	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Van Nuys
Chandler	Hatch	Norris	Wagner
Chavez	Hayden	Nye	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Herring	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Pepper	White
Connally	Holman	Pittman	Wiley
Danaher	Holt	Reed
Davis	Hughes	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], as modified, to be inserted at the end of the committee amendment on page 7, after line 18.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment has been modified. I ask unanimous consent that it may be stated so Senators will know what they are voting on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. (a) Excessive financial aid to any candidate for an elective Federal office is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(b) Excessive financial aid to any political committee or political organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the election of any candidate or political party nominees for a Federal office, or any committee engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the success of any national political party is a pernicious political activity and is hereby declared to be illegal.

(c) Presidential electors and the President of the United States for the purpose of this Act are declared to be elective officers.

(d) Any amount expended, contributed, furnished, or advanced by one person, directly or indirectly, in violation of this section in excess of $1,000 is hereby declared to be excessive financial aid.

(e) Any person who directly or indirectly contributes more than $1,000 during any calendar year or for use in any one campaign or election, in violation of the provisions of this section, is guilty of pernicious political activity, and on conviction, shall be fined not less than $5,000 and also sentenced to the penitentiary for not exceeding 5 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] who is necessarily absent from the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] who is unavoidably absent, but I am advised that he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Missouri, is unavoidably detained from the Senate on official business. If present he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are detained in Government departments.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is attending a meeting of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and is therefore necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY]. If present the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from Illinois would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays, 45, as follows:

YEAS—36

So Mr. BANKHEAD's amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. MINTON obtained the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent, while the Republican Members of the Senate are all present, to have read to them an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune entitled "Strengthening the Hatch law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune]

STRENGTHENING THE HATCH LAW

In the welter of angry discussion in the Senate over amendment of the Hatch law, Senator TYDINGS, of Maryland, has interposed a sensible suggestion. Senator HATCH, as we know, would extend his law, which now prohibits political activity on the part of Federal employees, to forbid it also to all State employees paid in whole or in part from Federal funds. Though the proposal has President Roosevelt's endorsement and the backing of Senator BARKLEY, majority leader, it has split the Democratic ranks in the Senate wide open, with the opposition resorting to a filibuster. In the circumstances Senator TYDINGS counsels recommitment, with a definite understanding that the bill be returned to the Senate containing careful definitions of "pernicious political practices." As at present constituted, he points out, the bill deals with persons and not practices.

Mr. TYDINGS is not one to quarrel with the objectives of the Hatch bill or its extension. He was one of the most prominent of the President's targets in the attempted "purge" of 2 years ago, and had occasion then to complain bitterly of the use of Federal patronage in the campaign against him. But he does recognize the main weakness of the law as it stands and as its author would amend it, which is its failure carefully to specify the activities under its ban.

We are talking now of that section of the law which says that "no officer (with certain exceptions) or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns." The vagueness of this wording obviously invites a host of conflicting constructions which endanger enforcement, and the larger the army to which the law is made to apply the greater the danger grows. An appreciable fraction of the population is encompassed in adding to the rank and file of the Federal bureaucracy that of our State bureaucracies spending Federal money. Any attempt to deprive all these citizens of a reasonable degree of participation in political campaigns will, one fears, fall afoul of such resistance and evasion that the law, like the Volstead Act, will become more honored in the breach than the observance. Hence, in behalf of the object it would accomplish—that very essential one of preventing the engulfment of our Government by a self-perpetuating horde of officeholders—it should limit and define its prohibitions. Senator TYDINGS, we think, speaks as one of its wiser friends.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, we are now in the seventh or eighth day of debate on the so-called purity-in-politics bill. Everybody now knows, after this extensive debate, that the bill is misnamed. It is not at all an act for purity in politics. It is an act for coercion in politics. That is the way it would operate.

On the other side of the aisle are 21, 22, or 23 "rubber stamps." On every amendment which is offered to the bill they stand up and cast "rubber stamp" votes. As long as I have been in the Senate I have never seen the Democratic Party vote 100 percent on anything.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the Senator from Indiana is a bit harsh on those on the other side with reference to the last amendment, which limited campaign contributions to $1,000, which amendment I supported. I understand that all those on the other side are potential candidates for the Presidency. The amendment to which I refer would have limited any one contribution to a Presidential campaign to $1,000. Self-preservation or ambition might have had something to do with it.

Mr. MINTON. I think perhaps the Senator is correct. At least practical politics might have entered into it. I am now talking about their purity, however. I am not talking about their practical side. They will be practical enough if we become pure. All we have to do is to become pure, and they will be practical in November.

So, Mr. President, when we try to put the bill in such shape that it will reach someone who is really impure, someone who is really practicing pernicious politics, we cannot get a vote on the Republican side—not one. The Republicans stand up, under the astute leadership of the brilliant statesman from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and vote 100 percent against any kind of an amendment which would make the bill really a bill against impure politics.

Mr. President, the Senate has just voted down, with 100 percent Republican votes, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which was aimed at pernicious political practices. It was aimed at the money bags in politics. It was aimed at Ernest Weir, the big boodle-bag man of the Republican Party, who is now going about under the slogan which the Republicans made famous in 1920: "Get the Money, Boys." They got it. They got plenty of it; and after the Chicago convention they delivered in a big way. Some of that money even found its way to the Republican Party itself. Of the boodle money in the Harding administration in 1920, $100,000 wound up in the pockets of the Republican Party itself in a deal which sold out the Government's property. One hundred thousand dollars of it went down into the pockets of the Republican campaign committee. And yet when we try to stop $100,000 contributions, can we get any help across the aisle? No. We have 20 or 21 "rubber stamp" votes against an effort really to destroy pernicious politics in this country. We cannot even persuade them to outlaw $1,000 contributions, let alone $100,000 contributions. That is what we have been trying to do. Amendment after amendment has been offered to put some decency and purity into the bill, so that it will really hurt; but we cannot induce our Republican friends to go along with us.

Oh, no; they want to purify the little fellows. They want to purify the 2-percent fellows, like me. I am the product of a 2-percent club and they are the product of a $100,000 club—a Pew campaign contribution. Pew! Pew! That will be their cry in the next campaign. It will reek to heaven with its malodorous fumes. Pew and his millions, Annenberg and his millions. Pew! The more we name it the worse it smells. The Republicans will be out with the boodle bag, getting hundreds of thousands of dollars. Republican Senators sit on the other side of the aisle protecting that kind of pernicious political activity.

Let me read an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of today entitled "Purity at the Spigot, Graft at the Bunghole":

For its own self-respect, the United States Senate should kill the Hatch "Purity in Politics" Act.

By a 53–31 vote the Senate refused to extend that legislation to place the same ban on huge political "contributions" of G. O. P. millionaires that is placed on the two-bit contributions of Federal employees or party workers.

To put it another way, the Senate is in the position of declaring it a corrupt practice to ask a Government clerk for $2 but not a corrupt practice to ask an industrial tycoon for $200,000.

Most honest citizens will not be able to draw any such fine distinctions. At the same time, they will understand the solidity of the Republican Senators in upholding the domination of their party by "big money." Indeed, the Record predicted the G. O. P. Senators would vote as they did.

Who would ever have thought that they would do it 100 percent? "Rubber stamps!" I have never seen such "rubber stamping" since I have been in the Senate. I am supposed to be a "rubber stamp." I am supposed to be a 100-percent new dealer; but they are 100 percent Hatch Act, and everybody knows why. They will not accept anything that will extend the act to anybody except the little fellows.

Continuing with the editorial:

But we confess our astonishment to see lined up with them such Senators as—

I do not like to read these good names, so I shall skip them. There are some very good names here, but I shall skip them.

Such political bundling between reactionary Republicanism and liberal idealism strikes a new low in senatorial naïveté. Even Little Red Riding Hood noticed that there was something phony about her grandmother's teeth.

The net result of Monday's work can only be to drive a deeper wedge into the Democratic Party and into liberalism.

Merely because I happen to be on the opposite from my leader does not mean that he and I are not going to be together when the Hatch Act is out of the way. I am coming back; the prodigal son is coming back, and is going to bring his own calf with him. There will not be any split in the Democratic ranks simply because we happen to disagree a little about the Hatch Act. We will be fighting together on those things in which the New Deal is really interested.

The editorial continues:

Nor will the Republicans—and who will blame them?—fail to make the most next fall of the principle that it is a crime to ask an officeholder to help his party, but perfectly O. K. to sell political favors to vested interests.

* * * * * * *

Let's be realistic about politics.

The democratic form of government necessitates political campaigning. Political campaigns must be financed. The real issue behind the Hatch bill is, how they are to be financed.

That is the real issue behind the amendments we have been trying to put on the Hatch Act. I know my good friend from New Mexico does not think that his bill would keep employees from contributing anything toward political campaign funds, but would merely prevent them from taking any active part in politics. What could be a more active part than to contribute hard-earned money toward the candidacy of somebody? The Senator says that is the construction that has been put on by the Civil Service Commission. That is all right; perhaps he is correct about that; perhaps they have said that; perhaps that is their construction; but that does not necessarily bind anybody else and it does not necessarily bind the Civil Service Commission. They may change their mind the next day. So we have tried to outlaw some of the things we consider to be pernicious and not simply to ban the little fellows because they make a paltry contribution to a political campaign fund.

Both political parties have long made a practice of soliciting campaign contributions from public employees and party workers. Both have resorted to banquets, convention book sales, and other devices.

The Democratic Party has relied almost wholly upon these methods of financing.

That is a matter of necessity. We are poor folks; we have not got any Ernest Weirs to know where to take the boodle bag. We do not know where to go to get the "money boys," except to the little fellows who happen to hold a job under our party and who are willing to invest a little in the party in which they believe, in the hope, perhaps, that they might be rewarded with a little, piddling job by that party. That is the only place we have to go. What good would it do to appoint somebody like Ernest Weir to go out with the big boodle bag? That would not do any good; he would not know where to go, and he would not get any money in it. But the Republicans know where to go.

The Republican Party, however, has financed most of its campaigns by inviting campaign contributions from big business, with the understanding that the favor would be returned by appropriate legislation.

We know how they did that in the last administration. We know how Mr. Mellon paid off with tax reductions for big campaign contributions. I read them into the RECORD just a few months ago. I can remember some of those big contributions—$10,000, $25,000 contributions—and in return for those ten- and twenty-five-thousand-dollar contributions they got from $250,000 up to $8,000,000 in tax refunds from the Republican administration. That was the way the business was carried out. A fellow from Kentucky, Bob Lucas, as I recall his name, was at the headquarters when the money came in and contributions were made, and after the election they made him Commissioner of Internal Revenue to see that the pay-off was made; and it was. I read the names and amounts into the RECORD. That is how pure the Republicans are. That is how they take care of their political house.

The Hawley-Smoot tariff is one of the most notorious pay-offs in American history, rewarding as it did the contributors to Hoover's campaign.

Senators are here today who were here when the Hawley-Smoot bill was passed. I was not here. They know whether there was any pay-off. I would not know about that.

"Purity in politics?" Is it forgotten that in 1929 an officer of the Connecticut Manufacturers' Association was found acting as secretary to Senator Hiram Bingham and, as such, sitting in on the confidential discussions by Senate committees on the Hawley-Smoot bill?

That kind of purity smelled to high heaven at the time. It still does.

If there must be a choice between small-time political methods of financing and the wholesale barter of congressional favors—give us the former.

It is far healthier for democracy that the rank and file pay for party campaigns than it is to have them paid for by fat cats who, after election, are handed carte blanche to dig into the pockets of the American people.

If macing is wrong, it is wrong for millionaires as well as jobholders.

I am going to offer a little amendment after awhile that will take care of that. I am going to give the Senate a chance after awhile to amend the act which condemns using official authority to influence or control elections by offering an amendment that would make it unlawful for an employer of labor or a lender of money at interest to use his position as an employer of labor or as a lender of money for political purposes. Let us see how much purity we can get on that amendment. If there are those in this country who are pernicious in politics, they are the bankers, the "note shavers," and the money lenders.

To pass the Hatch Act as it stands—condemning the latter and condoning the former—will be a disgrace. That's why we say: Kill the Hatch Act entirely.

Purity at the spigot can't cover up graft at the bunghole.

So we have no hope from across the aisle. On vote after vote we have seen the ranks of Republicanism stand in solid phalanx with their shields locked together, "rubber stamping" every amendment that has been offered to the act. So, being a "rubber stamp" myself [laughter], I have long since given up any hope from the "rubber stamps" across the aisle. We will never get anything out of them to make the Hatch Act a real act against impurities in politics. But I do appeal to my Democratic friends, who, after all, are in the same boat with me. We want to do something against impure activities in politics; we want to do something against pernicious activities in politics. And so I beg them to go along with us, because, I say to you, my fellow Democrats, whenever you look across the aisle and see the Republicans toe the mark 100 percent for a proposition as political as is this, it is not any good for the Democratic Party. Whatever is good for them is no good for us. [Laughter.]

I know the Democratic Party can be destroyed by this kind of legislation; I know it can destroy all kinds of political organizations the Democrats have which are built up upon the little people who work in the ranks and are proud of their democracy, proud of their party, and are willing to give service to the country, and then, on their own time, go out and work for the Democratic Party. I know you can destroy that kind of organization; but, Senators, hear me, while you can destroy that kind of an organization, you are not going to destroy political organizations. You can destroy that kind of an organization, but you will get another organization in its place, and whenever the time comes when you destroy that kind of an organization, in my judgment, the kind of an organization which will take its place will be one that Pew and Annenberg and Weir and the Du Ponts can pay for out of their own big money bags. They have the money, the wherewithal with which to build an organization; they can go out and subsidize; they can go out and buy; they can go out and pay for a political organization from precinct to precinct; and it would be but small change in their pockets.

That is what you are going to get. Destroy these organizations, destroy these willing workers, if you please; say to these people who want to go out voluntarily and work for their party and take a part in the democratic process that they are pernicious; drive them back home; muzzle them; do not let them say anything; do not let them take any part; do not let them contribute.

Mr. McKELLAR. Jail them.

Mr. MINTON. Yes, in some instances, jail them; and take their jobs away from them, as section 9 of the original Hatch Act provides. If you take their jobs away from them, they never can get other jobs under the Federal Government as long as they live unless Congress changes its law.

Yes; that is what you may do. You may destroy them. These big fellows will take their places. They will come in with an organization. The Pews and the Annenbergs and the Weirs and the money bags of the country will set up an organization. They will make their contributions; and do you think they will be doing it for charity? Not at all. They will be expecting their quid pro quo, and they will get it. They have never yet failed to get it, and they have not any intention of failing now.

So I say to you, Senators, that you are doing what I have stated when you are shooting at the little fellows, when you are muzzling the little fellows, when you are taking their jobs away from them, when you are blacklisting them. I again call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the fact that they are blacklisted under the amendment to the present act that is pending. More than that, I call his attention to section 9, paragraph (b), of the original Hatch Act, which provides that if a man commits a political offense he has to be immediately discharged, and then he can never hold another job under the Federal Government or any position the salary of which is paid from appropriations made by the Congress of the United States.

Ah, yes; you may destroy these men, you may destroy this organization; but, mark my words, you are not going to get anything purer in its place, because you will get just what I have indicated, and what the editorial in the Philadelphia Record has indicated—graft at the bunghole.

Mr. HATCH. At the spigot.

Mr. MINTON. No, no; it is purity at the spigot. The Senator is at the spigot with his act; but the graft is at the bunghole where everybody is supposed to be feeding. You are going to fill up the butt with graft, you are going to pour it in, and then we poor, simple-minded people will be met with the Hatch Act at the spigot. We are going to get pure at the spigot while they are polluting the big butt at the bunghole.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, just one word.

I agree with much that my friend from Indiana has said about graft and campaign contributions. Many times I have expressed on the floor of the Senate my views on the subject, and my willingness to cooperate and work out well worth while legislation dealing with it, just as strong legislation as it is possible for the Congress to enact; but I did not rise to say that just now, Mr. President. I rose because of the remark of the Senator from Indiana that if Congress should enact this legislation, which would merely prohibit political activity on the part of certain employees in the States, the great Democratic Party would be destroyed by it.

As he said those words I looked back at the Democratic Party and at its history—at a party that survived the Civil War; at a party that survived reconstruction days; at a party that survived defeat after defeat, standing on principle rather than surrender principle for temporary gain or advantage—and I say, Mr. President, that party is not going to be destroyed if every bit of patronage and every jobholder is taken out of politics.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield the floor.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has misunderstood, at least in part, what I was trying to say. I was trying to say that these organizations may be destroyed. I did not say the Democratic Party necessarily will be destroyed. I said the organizations that are built upon the little workers may be destroyed by the kind of legislation the Senator from New Mexico is sponsoring. You may do that sort of thing if you want to. You may penalize the little fellows. You may take them entirely out of the political picture, as the Senator from New Mexico wants to do; but what I am trying to say to the Senator from New Mexico is that that will not necessarily bring about purity. You are getting rid of one kind of organization. That is what the Senator wants to get rid of. He makes no bones about that. I am sure the Senator wants to destroy that kind of organization. I am sure that is the purpose of his bill. I am sure he will not stand upon the floor of the Senate and tell us that that is not the purpose of his bill. I have understood all along that he wanted to destroy that kind of organization; but I am simply saying to my friend from New Mexico that when he has destroyed that kind of organization he is going to get another organization in its place. In my humble opinion, when the time comes that the persons who have gone out and carried the water and hewed the wood for the party throughout the years cannot be given little jobs when the party is successful and looks to them to carry on work for the party out of gratitude or out of enthusiasm for the work that is being done by the party, when that kind of organization is destroyed, it is necessary to have somebody to do these political chores. They will not be done if they are not paid for in some way. Somebody who has the wherewithal to pay for it is going to get those chores done; and that fellow will not be found in the ranks of the Democratic Party, because we are poor people. That fellow will be found in the ranks of the Republican Party, which knows how to get the money.

So what I am trying to say to the Senator is that the organization which the Senator from New Mexico wants to destroy, and which some of us want to save, may be destroyed; but when that is done we shall get in its place something else that is worse.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by deleting the following words in lines 21 and 22 on page 4:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

This raises a point, if I may suggest it to Senators, which I believe has not been presented to the Senate in connection with this bill.

The Miller amendment included the words to which I have addressed this amendment, but it also included certain language in section 9 of the original Hatch Act. In that language the Federal Government was dealing with its own employees. I am willing to concede that the Federal Government has a larger authority in dealing with its own employees than it has a right to impose upon the conduct and the activity of employees of the sovereign States of the country who may perchance receive some Federal contribution in performing certain functions which have a Federal as well as a State significance.

Mr. President, I am not trying to take the time of the Senate, and I shall not consume more than a few minutes. I desire to point out, first, that the amendment I have proposed does not in any sense of the word diminish in any respect any prohibition that the original Hatch Act carries, nor does the amendment propose to diminsh in any way the effect of the pending bill except as it may circumscribe the activities of the individual employee. The amendment I have proposed does not say that any employer in any State agency may coerce the employee. I do not approve of that. The amendment is not directed at that. If adopted, my amendment to the committee amendment would leave section 12 to contain this prohibition:

> No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

That language would remain in section 12 as it is now written in the pending bill, but the amendment would strike out the provision by which the Federal Government would attempt to curtail the activity of the individual employee of a State agency who might on his own account, without interference from anybody, without coercion from anybody, without influence from anybody above him, desire upon his own initiative to participate in a political campaign.

Mr. President, I want to make two points: First, I propose that amendment as what I call a liberal in political philosophy. We have some violent differences in opinion on this floor as to what constitutes liberalism. Some of us think liberalism contemplates the maintenance of the integrity of the sovereignty of the several States, and some of the most illustrious men in this Nation in this Chamber vigorously and very eloquently contend for that philosophy. There are others who think liberalism means the further extension of the Federal power—furnishing Federal aid in trying to improve certain conditions which they think would not be improved without the assistance of the Federal Government. They think that is liberalism, and they think that is a desirable governmental policy.

I happen to belong to the latter category. I want to see Federal aid for public education, because I know that many of the States, because of having a small per capita wealth, are incapable of giving their children the educational advantages they should have. In fact, a great many of our States—and mine sometimes is one of them—are somewhat in the same category as the community I heard about which was too poor even to furnish songbooks to its own congregations in the several churches. So the patent-medicine companies would print the songbooks for them; but they reserved the right to interpolate certain language in the songs. In one case I heard about, the song ran something like this, as they printed it:

> Hark! the herald angels sing,
> (Beecham's pills are just the thing;)
> Peace on earth, and mercy mild—
> (Two for an adult, and one for child.)

[Laughter.]

Some of our communities have almost those disabilities. But if the Federal Government, as the price of its contribution, is to tell every school teacher how he or she must go to the polls, what he may say in the county courthouse, what he may say on the street, and prescribe the minutiae of his conduct, I do not know whether I am in favor of the extension of the Federal Government's power in that case or not.

In the cases where the Federal Government extends its power for economic purposes, it generally does so in response to a demand from the people themselves; but there is no demand from the people themselves for this legislation. On the contrary, I am inclined to believe that the people of this country are opposed to this sort of legislation when they actually know what its provisions are.

I do desire to present the very clear-cut question of whether or not we wish to continue to expand the Federal power in an extreme case, and therefore tend to create disrespect for Federal authority—certainly knowing that such a law as is proposed is going to be violated—whether we are going to accelerate an increasing tendency on the part of the Federal Government to put a hobble on every State activity. If that is to be the precedent established by the bill, it is going to do a great deal more harm in the long run than good, because the people are already getting a little bit dissatisfied with the lengths to which we have gone in taking over jurisdiction which it is not necessary for the Federal Government to take over.

Mr. President, the other thing I wanted to mention was that it leaves a discretion to the Civil Service Commission which is completely an unbridled discretion. I say, in the second place, that I am opposed to that provision of the bill, and I think that in the course I am following is also the liberal philosophy which I entertain.

In a few days we will have another bill coming to the floor of the Senate, the so-called Logan bill. That bill will propose that there be created a board of appeals in every administrative agency, and that the right of judicial review be conferred with respect to every administrative decision. The American Bar Association is sponsoring that bill. They think it will provide a legislative curb upon administrative activities. They think it will make their decisions more responsible; that it will restrain them against administrative abuses.

On the contrary, I think that a bill like that would interfere with the proper functioning of the administrative agencies, which were created to serve some good purposes; created to meet some demand which the people of the country were making upon the Federal Government to aid them when they did not have adequate means of aid at hand.

If we pass the pending bill, if we confer unlimited discretion upon the Civil Service Commission, let them define the offense, let them prescribe what abuses are objectionable, let them determine how much money may be withheld, let them determine the degree to which punishment should be inflicted, whether or not there has been a violation of law, without appeal to anybody, without the right of review in anybody except in the very limited way the Danaher amendment provides—in that event we will set a precedent which will certainly stand in the way of those of us who desire to argue against the Logan bill when it comes before us for consideration.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Danaher amendment is by far the broadest provision for appeal that has ever been included in a measure like the one before us, I think the Senator will agree. The Senator has continually stated that the Civil Service Commission has the power to determine the amount, to fix the extent of the punishment, and all those things. Unquestionably he must have forgotten the O'Mahoney amendment, which fixes definitely the amount, and leaves no discretion whatever in the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. PEPPER. But the Civil Service Commission does determine whether there is a violation or not, and what is participation in a political campaign. In other words, an administrative agency determines all the elements of the crime. So far as I know, we have not gone that far in other cases.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator does not mean that what he is talking about is made a crime.

Mr. PEPPER. The proposed law is in the nature of a penal statute.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator said "crime."

Mr. PEPPER. I did say a crime, because the pending bill is in the nature of a penal statute, and it would be a penal statute because it would take a man's job away from him and bar him from employment in the Federal service for a given number of years. As a matter of fact, in the original Hatch law, he was barred forever from the job from which he might be discharged.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The right of a citizen to aspire to office, or to be appointed to office, is one of the most priceless possessions of a citizen, is it not?

Mr. PEPPER. I thought the sacrifices and the philosophy of our forefathers so indicated, I will say to the able Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean to say that the present Hatch law, the one on the books, prohibits a man who comes under its provisions from ever holding a Federal office in the future?

Mr. PEPPER. Subdivision (b) of section 9 of the original Hatch law reads as follows:

> Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

That is the language to which I referred. At least he is certainly barred from a particular category of offices forever, no matter how much he may repent in his later years.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, if the Senate were included within the bill, and we should violate a little bit, we could not get back to the Senate?

Mr. PEPPER. That is exactly correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am opposed to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I realize that when a trend or tendency is running, it is like the flood tide, there is nothing one can do, generally, to stop it. I think reformers have many times hurt their causes by the excessive zeal with which they have pursued them. I could cite many tragic instances in which reform excesses have retarded ultimate progress.

I am not opposed to civil-service requirements for Federal employees, and I am glad to notice that there has been a tremendous increase in the number of jobs put under the civil service and the merit system under this Democratic administration.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I merely wanted to inform the Senator from Florida that I have in mind offering an amendment to the bill which will put all the officers and employees of the United States affected by the bill under civil service, from the date the President signs, if he ever signs—which God forbid—the bill which is now before us, so that from that minute forward every Federal employee affected by the bill would be under the civil service.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, that seems to me to be the logical and the reasonable approach to the subject. If we desire a Federal civil service patterned after the English system, which is seemingly working so satisfactorily, that is a permissible approach to the problem. Sometimes when I am vexed and harassed by seekers after employment which I am not able to give, I pray that there might be civil-service requirements for every Federal position. I realize that we are inevitably coming to that time, and I will rather welcome the day. But this is starting at the wrong end; it is putting the cart before the horse. Instead of taking people and putting them in political positions by political methods of selection, and then penalizing them for participating in politics, it seems to me those who would wisely seek to meet this problem would apply the merit system to such employment, and then all would expect that the people would be dissociated from political management and political activity, no one would be surprised with those restrictions, and it would not violate the cardinal principles which are involved in the law.

I wish it were possible for the proponents of the pending measure to be satisfied with the very real progress they have already made, through the enactment of the original Hatch Act, curbing coercion of employees of the Federal Government, purifying the relief rolls, and limiting the right of employees of the Federal Government even to participate in political campaigns.

I am sorry indeed that the able Senator from New Mexico has seen fit to go yet further, not to be satisfied with prohibiting State officials from coercing their employees, but to be desirous of putting a muzzle upon the employees themselves, to restrain them against going out and taking even a mild part in an absolutely local political campaign. A man might have a brother running for a county office, working for a State agency which received some Federal funds, and if he went out on Saturday afternoon and campaigned for him a little bit, he would be breaching a Federal law, and subjecting his State, perhaps, to a deprivation of Federal funds.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has made a very exhaustive study of the bill, and I should like to ask him a hypothetical question.

Suppose in the distribution of Federal funds for these farm-to-market roads some of the money has been allocated to a county in which there are commissioners' courts—they call them commissioners in my State, and they call them supervisors, I think, in other States—and suppose in the campaign for reelection of the county judge a charge was made with respect to the handling of county affairs, in which the commissioners have a part, under this legislation would the commissioner be allowed to go out and support the county judge or would he be prohibited from doing so?

Mr. PEPPER. He would be prohibited from doing so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Even though his own administration of the county affairs were under assault?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; that is my opinion.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator does not mean that.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; the Senator from Florida means that or he would not have said it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thought probably the exemption of an elective officer would exclude the commissioner.

Mr. HATCH. They are excluded specifically.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should they be excluded?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I misunderstood the question. I did not understand that the person was an elective officer. I apologize.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator is not asking about the elective officer. He is asking about the clerk.

Mr. PEPPER. I first thought so, but believe now the able Senator was asking about someone who was elected.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am speaking about an elective officer. He would be allowed to go out and take part then and defend his administration, but a stenographer for the county judge, working in his office, some poor little girl, would not be allowed to go out and advocate the reelection of her chief.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is exactly right. Let me clarify my point.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. On the statement as made by the Senator from Texas I simply must disagree with the Senator from Florida, and say in my opinion that the answer of the Senator from Florida is entirely wrong.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator from New Mexico, Was not an amendment adopted cutting out the exemption of elective officers carried in the measure?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. PEPPER. Cutting out only appointive officers? If it was elective officers about whom the Senator from New Mexico was speaking, the bill would not be applicable, and I was in error. But take the case the Senator from Texas spoke of—of the stenographer who was an employee of the judge, and who campaigned for the election of the county judge for whom she was working—she would be guilty of violating the law, and the penalty of dismissal would be inflicted upon her or the Federal funds available to the county would be diminished.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to what will be the ramifications of this bill if it is enacted into law. I do not think any of us realize the extent to which it goes. I have before me the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for fiscal year ended June 30, 1939. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the table in this report entitled:

Net expenditures for Federal aid to States, individuals, etc. (exclusive of funds allocated for recovery and relief), fiscal years 1920, 1938, and 1939, and amounts appropriated for 1940, by appropriations.

I wish to call the Senate's attention to the extent to which these appropriations go. I do not think any of us realize how far they go, and the number of voters who will be affected by a bill of this kind.

Colleges for agriculture and mechanic arts, $2,550,000.

Further endowment of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts, $2,480,000.

Cooperative vocational education in agriculture; cooperative vocational education in trades and industries; cooperative vocational education, teachers, and so forth—those three activities—$20,885,000. Most of that goes to salaries of employees, every one of whom will be affected by the bill.

Cooperative vocational education in home economics, $52,068.

Cooperative vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry, $1,845,000.

Civilian Conservation Corps—all of them young men, all of whom are voters now, or will be in a year or two, every one of whom will be touched by this act—$295,000,000 for 1940.

Mr. PEPPER. And about how many employees? Has the Senator the number?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not have the number of employees. Grants to States for public-health works, $9,500,000. To promote the education of the blind, $115,000. Grants to States under social security, $45,000,000. Payments to States, United States Employment Service, $3,480,000. Grants to States under Social Security Act, $358,500,000. Or a total of $739,407,068, which is nearly as much as the whole cost of the Government when I came to Congress.

Then again the Federal-aid highway system, $125,000,000. Federal-aid secondary or feeder roads, $25,000,000. Elimination of grade crossings, $40,000,000. Public-lands highways, $1,000,000. All of which comprise a total of $191,000,000 more.

Senators will find page after page of such figures. I shall not go through all of them in the Senator's speech, but Senators will find page after page of these enormous sums, one for $6,000,000, one for $18,000,000, one for $1,000,000, another for $2,000,000, another for $200,000; conservation and use of agricultural land resources, $429,000,000, or a total of $458,000,000 in the Department of Agriculture.

In the Department of the Interior, $3,626,000.

And so it is with respect to other departments.

Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further I desire to place in the RECORD the amount that the Federal Government appropriates to various activities in the States, aggregating not millions of dollars, not hundreds of millions of dollars, but more than a billion dollars, most of which goes to employees in the States, every one of whom will be affected by this measure knowingly or unknowingly. It may take them some time to find out that they come under this bill.

I wish to place in the RECORD at this point pages 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, and 525 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the State of the Finances for the Fiscal Year Ended June 30, 1939, giving these facts. I pass the book over to the Senator from Florida to show him what an enormous number of people will be affected by the pending measure. They are spoken of occasionally as "people on relief," or people who might work for one department or for another. But the measure will perhaps affect most of our people in time, and we should be exceedingly careful how we affect persons who are working for the Government and receiving money from the Government.

Mr. President, I ask that the pages of the report to which I referred be placed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Expenditures by States under allotments from emergency appropriations are included or shown under columns 10, 19, 20, 21, 25, 26, and 27 of the following table, with accompanying explanatory footnotes.

[1] In addition to the amounts appropriated for the service of the fiscal year 1940, as shown in this column there are under many of the titles unexpended balances of appropriations provided for previous fiscal years which are available for expenditure during 1940 to meet outstanding obligations incurred in such previous years.
[2] Indefinite (special account) appropriation based on certain receipts—estimated amount for 1940.
[3] Transferred from the Department of the Interior to Federal Security Agency pursuant to the Reorganization Act of Apr. 3, 1939.
[4] Transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior pursuant to the Reorganization Act of Apr. 3, 1939.
[5] Included in $20,885,000.
[6] Transferred from the Treasury Department to the Federal Security Agency, pursuant to the Reorganization Act of Apr. 3, 1939.
[7] Transferred from the Labor Department to the Federal Security Agency, pursuant to the Reorganization Act of Apr. 3, 1939.
[8] Unused balances of amounts appropriated for the fiscal year 1938 for establishing and maintaining public-employment offices also available.
[9] Transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Federal Works Agency, pursuant to the Reorganization Act of Apr. 3, 1939.
[10] Provided for under following item.
[11] Additional items pertaining to Social Security Act for fiscal years 1938–40 are shown under public-health and employment service.
[12] Transferred from War Department to Veterans' Administration by Executive Order of July 21, 1931. Included in appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Veterans' Administration," beginning with the fiscal year 1934. The Veterans Administration reports expenditures of $698,948.90 during the fiscal year 1939 and an allocation of $1,149,301.12 to cover estimated expenditures during the fiscal year 1940.
[13] For additional expenditures for Federal-aid highways and related projects, from funds under Emergency Relief and National Industrial Recovery appropriations, see columns 5 and 19.
[14] See following item for 1940 account.
[15] Includes $2,115.71 appropriated for the fiscal year 1939 by Third Deficiency Act, 1939, Aug. 9, 1939 (53 Stat. 1313).
[16] Transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior pursuant to the Reorganization Act of Apr. 3, 1939.
[17] Only the more important appropriations are shown.

NOTE.—The expenditures shown in this table include in some cases administrative expenses. Data for the fiscal years 1921–30 are shown in the annual report for 1930, pp. 617–622, and for the fiscal years 1931–37, in corresponding tables in the annual reports for those years.

TABLE 61.—Expenditures made by the Government as direct payments to States, etc., under cooperative arrangements and expenditures within States which provided relief and other aid during the fiscal year 1939 [1]

[The records of the Treasury Department except in the cases mentioned in notes at end of this statement, do not show the amounts disbursed or allotted to the several States and Territories under the respective appropriations shown in this statement, such matters being under the control of the department or establishment of the Government that administers the activities covered by the appropriations. The Department, however, for general information has compiled from its records so far as available, and in other cases from figures furnished by the departments and establishments concerned, the following statement, exhibiting by States and Territories the amounts paid to each under the appropriations for Federal aid to States shown under classes I and II in the preceding statement (table 60). Any discrepancies between this and the preceding table are due to unavoidable differences in the bases upon which these figures have been compiled. The amounts in this table, derived from the accounts of various departments and establishments, are not on the same accounting bases, and are consequently not strictly comparable]

[2] Column 3 includes $1,135,748.97 payments from the national forests fund; $31,466.22 payments to school funds, national forest fund; $15,087.60 payments from receipts under Migratory Bird Conservation Act; $1,793,317.99 forest fire cooperation; and $90,360.58 cooperative distribution of forest planting stock.

[3] Column 5 includes $96,417.34 cooperative construction of rural post roads (regular); $117,623,331.60 Federal-aid highway system (regular); $16,142,638.15 Federal-aid secondary or feeder roads (regular).

[4] Column 8 includes $1,523.99, 5 percent funds to States (lands); $430,582.13 payment to States from receipts under Grazing Act of June 28, 1934, public lands; $44,597.12 potash deposits, royalties and rentals; $50,000 proceeds of sales of Coos Bay wagon road grant lands and timber; $110,291.04 payments to counties, Oregon and California grant lands (special fund); $43,700.97 payments to counties in lieu of taxes on Oregon and California grant lands, 25% fund (special fund).

[5] Columns 10, 22, 26, and 27 represent expenditures from allocations under the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 and supplemental acts. Column 19 represents expenditures under the same acts of $30,133,943.10.

[6] Column 15 includes $305,710,568.64, Social Security Board; $8,239,657.40, Department of Labor; $7,985,345.65, Treasury Department, Public Health Service.

[7] Columns 20 and 25 represent expenditures under the several relief acts. Columns 18 and 19 include allocations under the National Industrial Recovery Act of $3,282.30 and $1,894,723.77, respectively.

NOTE.—This statement does not include appropriations made by Congress for direct relief or loans to States on account of floods, hurricanes, fires, drought, etc.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. Last Friday afternoon the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] addressed the Assembly of the State of Virginia at Richmond, and apropos the matter to which the Senator from Tennessee has just been referring, an article published in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, says this, speaking of Senator GLASS:

He swung next to the charge that Congress is trying to dictate as to the qualifications of State officeholders.

Quoting Senator GLASS, the article says:

It is a miserable invasion of States' rights. The Federal Government is trying to usurp the powers of the States. I hope you stand up for your State's rights.

I always feel happy when I am in the presence of the senior Senator from Virginia. I feel that I am in good company when I am voting with him, as I am upon this proposition. The speech I refer to is a very fine one, one which I think contains the gospel which has been so often preached by the senior Senator from Virginia, and I ask unanimous consent that the account of his remarks before the Virginia Assembly, contained in the Richmond Times-Dispatch of March 9, be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Florida to say just one more word?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I endorse all that the Senator from Michigan has said about our distinguished statesman, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to which I referred just a few moments ago.

Mr. President, after examining the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, if we shall then pass the pending bill I wonder who is going to be free to vote at all. Where are we going to find voters in the next election? The great body of the people is connected directly or indirectly with these appropriations.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to express my very great thanks to the able Senator from Tennessee for this very valuable contribution he has made. The magnitude of the reach of this bill will not be appreciated until, if it occurs, the unhappy event of its passage shall already have shocked the people of this country.

I want to thank the Senator from Michigan also.

I very frequently disagree with the able senior Senator from Virginia. I realize that it is my ignorance and his wisdom that produces that disagreement. But I imagine that one of the reasons that the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] opposes many measures which come before this body is because he has seen the creeping extent of the Federal power until he knows not where it will stop, and he fears what may be its inevitable consequence upon our system of dual sovereignty in this country.

I am sure it is not because he opposes good or because he wants to retard progress. As I stated with respect to the pending measure, it is not because we want to encourage pernicious political activity; but when the State and Federal Governments join hands in an enterprise, we do not want one partner in the enterprise to try to dictate all the terms of the conduct of the partnership. That is what the bill, if passed, would mean.

The bill contemplates an entire change in the philosophy of Federal contributions. I thought that Federal contributions were for the purpose of equalizing the abilities of the several States to perform certain public services. I thought that Federal contributions were based upon the Federal Government recognizing that it has a share of the responsibility for the construction of highways or for carrying on this or that enterprise. I did not know that the Federal Government usurped the prerogative of dictating the minutiae of the manner in which the activity must be carried on. I thought the Federal Government was a partner in the enterprise, contributing part of the money and rendering part of the assistance. But this bill would have us say to the State our relation is not a partnership but "We are the master and you are the slave. You must do it our way, even in minute detail. You must restrict every activity of your employees, not ours, to standards which we approve, whether you approve them or not." If that is not transgressing upon sovereignty, if that is not breaking down the rights of the States, I do not know what it is.

What alternative do we leave the States? To say, "We will not take the funds." But in this day and time to deprive States of such funds means that they are to be severely penalized. They are to be discriminated against as members of the family of States. It is as though a parent put a proscription upon the conduct of his son before he might share in the patrimony of his father. It is a discrimination we have no right to make except upon a legitimate basis.

I have looked into the provisions of the social-security law. That is the only example which has been cited in the debate in which we have provided that those who are not under civil service or under the merit system shall have their political conduct in local affairs proscribed. That was done by administrative regulation, and not by the law of Congress. Section 2, subparagraph (a), subdivision No. 5, of the original act provides that a State plan to be approved by the Social Security Board must—

Provide such methods of administration as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan.

Before the State could have its plan approved by the Social Security Board it had to meet that standard; but there was no language in the law such as the language found in this bill. In the new law, which was passed by the previous Congress, the language is as follows:

Provide such methods of administration, including, after January 1, 1940, methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, except that the Board shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods as are found by the Board to be necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan.

There was no such language in that law as that which my amendment proposes to strike out of this bill, namely, that:

No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

The proscription of political activity was put in by the Social Security Board, an administrative agency, on its own initiative, without any suggestion or instruction whatever from the Congress or the Executive to that effect.

We now see an instance in which we first authorized the promulgation of rules and regulations by the Social Security Board, as was formerly done by the Civil Service Commission. We now go another step in the process of creeping governmental paralysis which so afflicts those in legislative office. We now go further and for the first time in American history, so far as I know, provide in the language of the bill itself—not in the administrative regulations—that an employee of a State agency, who may be competent to do his job, who may be filling the duties of his office honorably and well, who may be a man or woman of good character and good standing in his community and State, may not go to the courthouse or to the street corner to engage in political conversation or activity on behalf of a member of his own family who is a candidate for an office in his own precinct if the agency for which he or she works receives any Federal funds whatever, no matter how much of a duty the Federal Government may owe to help the State agency.

This is the most monstrous effort to extend the Federal power, the most outrageous attempt to impose the Federal will upon every beneficiary of the Federal bounty, which to my knowledge has ever been proposed in the American Congress; and it is done under the pretense of clean politics.

Mr. President, if we do this, and the creeping paralysis continues to proceed, where in the name of heaven shall we go tomorrow, next week, or next year? It seems to me that there is a sphere in which the State governments may properly operate, in which they have their own orbits, as it were; and there is a proper orbit for the Federal authority. There are times when it is difficult to reconcile the two. There are times when it is desirable that there should be an intimacy of relation between the two, or perhaps they should be in partnership in an enterprise.

No partnership destroys the entity of the partners, Mr. President. A partnership preserves the sovereignty of the individual partners in every respect, because they deal as equals and not one an inferior of the other. They are colleagues and comrades in the same cause; and one is not the minion and the other the master.

So this bill would change the whole philosophy of Federal contributions. It would provide that when the Federal Government makes a contribution and the State accepts it it bows its head to every whim, every exercise of caprice, and every gesture of arbitrary action which a Federal Government may desire to impose or suffer the penalty of discrimination in receiving its share of the public money, which it partially contributes.

The proponents of the bill, especially Senators on the other side of the Chamber, are always saying that we on this side are trying to regulate the people's conduct, that we are trying to tell the people how to act, how to use their property, and how to exercise their authority in whatever sphere they may move and have their being.

What about this case? In this case they on the Republican side are the ones who are seeking to regulate. Usually I am on the regulating side and the Members on the other side of the aisle are on the nonregulating side. They are against it. I refer to the Senators whom the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] so aptly described as "rubber stamps." He and I are usually the victims of that castigation, and perhaps many times with propriety. In this case at least we deserve to be free from the obloquy of that term, whatever it may be, and yield precedence and honor to the distinguished Senators on the other side of the aisle who are trying to impose the shackles of the Federal power upon the liberties of the American citizens.

Is there anything in Mr. Glenn Frank's report about the Hatch bill? I thought Republicans believed in liberty. I thought they believed in the freedom of the citizen, unrestrained, untrammeled, and unhampered. I thought those rugged individualists on the other side of the Chamber believed that man almost rises above mortality, and has the right of the Gods to soar in glorious immunity from any kind of restraint, from edifice to edifice, or from peak to peak, or cloud to cloud. They pretend to believe in that kind of freedom for the American citizen. They pretend to believe in doing away with Rooseveltian restrictions and the choking hand of the Federal power. Yet, when a question of political advantage to them is presented they try to regulate someone else's conduct.

We are trying to regulate the stock exchanges. We are trying to regulate the big utilities companies. We are trying to regulate those whose wealth and power extend across State lines. We are trying to regulate those who, by reason of their wealth and financial position, possess an economic power greater than that possessed by any Governor in America. The proponents of this bill say that we are bad in doing that. But they would regulate with the strong arm of the Federal Government the little, timid, hesitant, embarrassed school teacher in a rural district of America, who receives less than $500 a year salary, if she dares to say to her friends that she hopes they will vote for her brother to be superintendent of public instruction or a member of the school board in her county.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has made reference to those whose wealth extends across State lines. I do not agree with the Senator's views on the original Hatch Act or the pending legislation, which I am supporting, but I cannot refrain from expressing my disappointment that the Senator from New Mexico—whose plume I have followed in all of these battles—did not accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] or some modification of that amendment. Certainly the unrestricted use of money in political campaigns is the most corrupting influence to which the electorate of the United States is subjected.

The Senator's reference to those whose influence extends across State lines reminded me of happenings in my State in the year 1936, in which it happened that I was a candidate for reelection as a Member of this body. In that year citizens of great wealth in other sections suddenly manifested a great interest in the political affairs of the State of Georgia. A gentleman named Mr. Du Pont, a gentleman named Mr. Raskob, and their associates sent a considerable sum of money into the State of Georgia to mold political sentiment in that State. A committee of the Senate uncovered $42,000 of that money. That much was admitted. I felt some of the impact of that expenditure in my campaign for reelection in that year.

If we are going to proceed with this sort of legislation, I hope we shall not allow our perspective to be blurred by the bitterness which this debate apparently has engendered, and vote against a proposition of the kind submitted by the Senator from Alabama, which would have extended the restrictive power of the Federal Government to the possessors of great wealth. In many instances these men leave their own States and go to other States in which they have no direct political interest in an effort to influence politics and affect elections. They either hope to start a wave of political sentiment which will be felt in their own States or expect the power of the purse to dominate all of the political life of the Nation.

If the consideration of this bill is to proceed, I hope the Senator from New Mexico and those who have been most closely associated with him will permit some amendment to be made to the bill which will at least place some restriction on the unlimited use of wealth in political campaigns. Since the issue has been raised here, we should not proceed with this legislation, as I see the matter, without at least condemning and attempting to restrict practices through which those with vast sums of money have sought to corrupt the electorate of States of which they were not even residents.

I hope we shall be able to view this matter calmly if another amendment is offered restricting the use of money in political campaigns, in order that we may deter those who seek to spend unlimited amounts of money to debauch elections. I do not think this legislation would be complete without some provision of that sort, and I hope the Senator from New Mexico will work out something along that line, and offer it as an amendment to this bill, in order to show that we are willing to attempt to utilize the restrictive power of the Federal Government to protect the ballot, whether the offender be rich or poor, ward heeler or millionaire. Exempt no evildoer. Let us proceed without fear or favor to strike down the most pernicious of all pernicious political activities.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator, along the lines of the interpolation of the Senator from Georgia, that probably all of us have seen the picture which has been exhibited here lately, Gone With the Wind, to which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] very eloquently referred yesterday, which vividly recalls the days of the carpetbagger in our section, supported by the bayonet and the saber. Does the Senator from Georgia mean to say that we now have a form of carpetbaggers from Delaware who go down and control or seek to control elections in Georgia, which would be permitted under this bill, and yet a citizen of Georgia, because he happens to be a county school trustee, is denied political activity in the expression of his own opinion, though he is a sovereign voter and a citizen of the State in which that activity is supposedly legitimate, and is opposed by carpetbaggers from Delaware who probably have more influence in certain quarters than the humble citizen who may voice his views and opinions?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not desire to be drawn into a controversy as to the extent to which the pending legislation operates. There seems to be a decided difference of opinion. The Senator from New Mexico, whose views I have accepted, states that the bill does not bind the hands of local trustees. I do not desire to be drawn into that sort of controversy; but I do say that the Senate should not be so blinded by the feeling that has been engendered in this debate that they will refuse even to consider amendments which would tie the hands or close the purses of those who have huge sums of money and do not hesitate to send it out into the four corners of the United States to influence political campaigns.

The bill certainly would not be complete without a condemnation of such practices. Merely because some feeling has been manifested in this debate, we should not take the position that we will not accept any proposition as an amendment to the bill unless it is suggested by my good friend from New Mexico. He has done his part in seeking to elevate the tone of political activities in this country; but certainly others of us here have a responsibility to seek to go further than this legislation goes, and make an earnest effort to keep closed the purses of those who contribute vast sums to influence political campaigns in this country.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I merely want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I appreciate everything he has said, and I fully understand his earnestness and sincerity, and I shall be most happy to work out adequate legislation along the lines he is discussing. It happens that I do not believe the matter of political campaign contributions will be reached or corrected by a mere prohibition. It requires legislation of a very different character than that, in my opinion—legislation on which I am working, and which I hope eventually will be passed. I do not hope to have it passed at this session, because I have already seen what we run into if we start anything in a campaign year; but action along that line is not as far distant as perhaps the Senator may think.

I am confident that the discussions we have had on this bill and on the bill last year—the passage of that legislation and the passage of this legislation—will lead on to the enactment of still better and still stronger legislation which will completely correct and cure the things of which the Senator has spoken, and which, without question, should be corrected. I want to help to do it. The Senator has been in charge of numerous bills, and he knows how amendments are sometimes added here and there which may be offered in good faith; but sometimes a bill becomes so weighted down with amendments that it is impossible to secure any legislation at all on the subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no weighting down about a little limitation on the amount of money that may be used when it is proposed to stop pernicious activities in politics by the excessive use of money. I am going to present the amendment tomorrow with some larger amount permissible, and I want another vote on the matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I certainly hope nothing I have said will be taken as a reflection on the zeal, the enthusiasm, or the competence of the Senator from New Mexico in legislation of this kind. I have been amazed at his grasp of all the various ramifications of this legislation, particularly in view of the many charges which have been made as to its scope and effect; but it is impossible for one man to attempt to deal with all matters. I do hope, however, that the Senator will give consideration to these amendments which would penalize the undue use of money in political campaigns. It may not be an auspicious time, but it seems to me the Senator has the votes to handle the bill as he sees fit on the floor of the Senate, and it might be that this would be the best opportunity those of us who would like to place some limitations on the use of money in campaigns would have to see such a measure enacted into law. If we wait until next year, we do not know what will be the complexion of the Congress. I am hopeful and believe there will be a Democratic administration; but an election is coming on, with a possibility, even though remote, of a change in the national administration.

I would like to see some simple amendment adopted which would penalize the excessive use of money in campaigns. I do think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama was perhaps a bit too drastic, but such legislation would have a deterrent effect. We have standing committees to investigate campaign expenditures. As I have said, the so-called Black committee uncovered these contributions in my State, and it was admitted by the donors that the money was contributed for political purposes. If we had had a penal statute at that time against such a practice, those persons could have been prosecuted, and it certainly would have had a very salutary effect on the political life of the country as a whole to send a few of them to jail.

I know how we all feel when amendments are offered by those who are opposed to our bills.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Alabama said he would not vote for the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand. We should all beware of Greeks bearing gifts, and we do not want to weight down this legislation, but I think some reasonable amendment would be helpful.

Mr. HATCH. I will cooperate with Senators if they will come forward on the floor of the Senate—as happened when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] made his first proposal—with an earnest proposition to improve the bill, and will get behind it and support it, and I will go much further than they will, but I am not going to travel the road with a man who says, "You take this, and I will knife your bill in the end."

Mr. RUSSELL. I can appreciate the feelings of the Senator from New Mexico, I know how he feels about the proposed legislation, but it seems to me that we have gotten into the unfortunate position of voting on amendments, not on their merits or demerits, but with regard to the views on the general legislation of the Senator who offers the amendment. If the pending bill is to be finally enacted into law, I regard this as being a most propitious and auspicious time to attempt to place some limitation on campaign expenditures. No political machine, however ruthless, can be more vicious in its effect than selfish interests who seek to control elections with money. Unrestricted use of money in political campaigns constitutes the greatest threat to free elections and, indeed, to our institutions of government.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to me that the suggestion just made overlooks the strategic situation here, that those who favor the bill have an army made up of two groups, and it is sought to take out the means of conducting a campaign which one group has, but you could not expect to hold your army together if you took out the means with which the other group expects to conduct its campaign. I recognize that if, when the Senator from Alabama presented his amendment, it had been made a part of the bill, there would have been a very formidable and a very compact part of the organization which would have lost interest in the bill. They are only interested in striking out the officials of one army. They do not want to take out the ammunition and the munitions with which the other army has to fight. I am anxious, of course, to avoid seeing this great army divided.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator by any chance mean that he fears that the 23 might "skidoo" under such circumstances? [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. I happened to meet a situation like that described by the Senator from Georgia. I once ran for office, and money came into my State from the outside. It came in in a very effective, formidable way. I think that the most crucial and critical thing in American politics is the use of money. I have tried to draft right here at my own desk some means of stopping it. The Senator from New Mexico naturally wants to have his bill passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. In just a second I will be glad to yield. I have the utmost admiration for the intensity of feeling and the devotion which the Senator has toward his bill, but at the same time he has a very practical mind, and I do not think it is fair to ask the Senator to incorporate in his bill things which will drive off part of the army which he must have if he is going to win.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield now?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. The analysis of the situation is correct, and this side of the army has already "skidooed," as the Senator from Florida has said, and if we drive off the other side of the army, where will the Senator from New Mexico be?

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is a very frank statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not wish to delay matters, but any Senators who have ears must certainly have heard the remark going about on the floor of the Senate; I have heard it not once, but a number of times, from some of the leaders of the opposition to the bill, namely, "Let us load it down with any amendment, vote for any amendment which anyone offers." Just a few moments ago a Senator expressed to me an intention to vote for any amendment at all calculated to weaken the bill and then to vote for the bill on final passage.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to make just a brief comment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

I wish to express my particular gratitude to the Senator from Georgia for the suggestion he made. I had an astonishing experience in my State last year. In one of the counties in the State on the west coast, in Manatee County, Fla., a man walked up to me and said, "Senator, I want to tell you something which you probably do not know. I was on the pay roll of the American Association of Manufacturers during your campaign in 1938, to campaign against you, and distribute literature against you in the State of Florida."

That would have been all right under the Hatch law, and if this bill were law as it is proposed today, that would still be all right, but if an employee of the State road department in my State, just because the Federal Government is helping to build roads in my State, because citizens of other States outside of Florida travel on those roads, had gotten out and campaigned for me, then he would have lost his job, or the State of Florida would have been penalized in the matter of appropriations from the Federal Treasury, and that fellow probably never could have gotten his job back. That simply goes to show that the law is not practically conceived. Its purposes are noble, but it is overzealous in its effort to accomplish the purpose the author had in mind. As Mr. Hoover said about prohibition, it would be a noble experiment, and it would succeed about as prohibition succeeded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is the Senator about to conclude?

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to conclude briefly tomorrow, if it would be agreeable to the leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is agreeable to me. The Senator realizes that except for unanimous consent, unless he is recognized first, there will be no priority of recognition tomorrow merely because the Senator has the floor today, but I am sure there will be no trouble about that.

Mr. PEPPER. It is my amendment which is pending.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had hoped that we might bring the bill to a vote today, but of course that is impossible. I express the hope that we can vote on the bill tomorrow. I have not made any request for unanimous consent today because I have been assured by Senators who are opposing the bill that they are not seeking to delay a vote but that they will cooperate to try to bring the consideration of the bill to a conclusion. I certainly hope we may vote on the bill finally tomorrow before we adjourn.

Mr. PEPPER. To indicate to the Senator my own good faith, I will make this statement to the Senator from New Mexico, that if the amendment I have offered, which merely strikes out lines 21 and 22 on page 4, shall be adopted, I will vote for the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that if those lines were stricken out I doubt whether I would vote for the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may resume tomorrow at noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on June 16, 1938, the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] submitted for publication in the appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article entitled "Campaign Contributions."

To that particular article students of the subject under discussion will some day refer for enlightenment upon the subject, and in due course, in the consideration of this measure, it will be discussed.

In volume 83, part 11, of the RECORD, being the appendix, at page 3107 and following pages, there appears a list of the individual contributors to the Democratic campaign book for 1936, as well as the corporations involved in the contributions. That list runs through many pages, and includes hundreds, in fact, thousands of names.

In addition, Mr. President, to that, taking the time of the Senate but a moment further, I send to the desk and ask to be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this time, and without being read, an article from the Washington Herald of this morning, March 13, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of March 13, 1940]

FAVORS SOLD BY NEW DEAL, HAMILTON SAYS—ATTACK ON FARLEY LISTS GIFTS TO DEMOCRATS

A blast at Democratic Boss Jim Farley was fired by Republican Chairman John Hamilton last night in response to Farley's refusal to drop the sale of convention books as a means of raising party funds.

Hamilton said he was not surprised that the Democratic National Committee showed little regard for the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, which prohibits corporations contributing to national political committees. In 1936 the Democratic committee raised $1,246,763 from the sale of convention books to corporations and others, including $379,750 for the sale of the $250 de luxe books autographed by President Roosevelt.

"RED HERRING" CHARGED

The Republican chairman asserted Farley had attempted to "draw a red herring across his smelly convention-book operations" by citing several large contributors to the 1936 Republican campaign.

"The truth of the matter is," he declared, "that the largest single contribution to the 1936 campaign was made to the Democrats by Walter A. Jones, the Pittsburgh oil man. According to the official records, Mr. Jones contributed the sum of $104,500 to the Democratic campaign that year. There was also recorded a loan of $50,000 from Walter A. Jones to the Democratic National Committee in that year."

CONTRIBUTORS LISTED

Hamilton then listed a number of other large contributions to the 1936 Democratic campaign, as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. D. Biddle, Jr., New York, $13,700.
R. W. Bingham, London, England, $15,000.
Curtis Bok, Philadelphia, Pa., $25,000.
R. E. Buck, Fort Worth, Tex., $13,700.
Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Clayton, Lookout Mountain, Tenn., $16,250.
Doris D. Cromwell, Somerville, N. J., $50,000.
Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, Washington, $17,500.
Bert Fish, Deland, Fla., $13,000.
James W. Gerard, New York, $28,000.
F. J. Lewis, Chicago, Ill., $10,000.
Lucius Manning, Chicago, Ill., $25,000.
Arthur Mullen, Omaha, Nebr., $13,200.
Floyd Odlum, Jersey City, N. J., $10,000.
Fred Pabst, Milwaukee, Wis., $10,000.
J. M. Patterson, New York, $24,100.
Lewis S. Rosenthal, Greenwich, Conn., $17,500.
Joseph M. Schenck, New York, $10,000.
Nicholas Schenck, New York, $10,000.
Emil Schwartzhaupt, New York, $11,510.

Clara D. Sevier, Corpus Christi, Tex., $10,000.
B. E. Smith, New York, $10,000.
L. C. Steinhardt, United States Embassy, Sweden, $10,000.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in order that the readers of the CONGESSIONAL RECORD may have some further information along the lines indicated by the Senator from Connecticut, concerning campaign contributions, I want them to turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 15, 1932, and read the remarks of Mr. O'Connor beginning on page 15516, and extending to and including the top of page 15522. There will be found there some very interesting reading about Republican campaign contributions.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, does the Senator from Kentucky seek to have any agreement as to bringing the pending legislation to a conclusion?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not today.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator intend to proceed with this legislation until its final passage by the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my purpose.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to make a brief statement, in view of the misconstruction of my effort to try to secure action on the appropriation bill on Monday last. It seems that it was construed by some persons as an effort on my part to sabotage the Hatch bill. It was not nor was there anything unusual in my request. That is the first time the Senate has refused to lay aside pending business in order to take up for consideration an appropriation bill. I also understood that the majority leader thought it was in a way a reflection on his leadership, and that he had made a statement to that effect to certain Senators.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator has heard that I made any such statement as that, it is without foundation. I had never intimated any such thing, and I never thought of it, because the Senator was within his rights; and I had no such thought at all concerning the Senator's activity in that regard. I think the Senator from Georgia did what he ought to have done; and neither I nor anyone else supporting this legislation thought the Senator from Georgia, by the motion he made, was attempting to sabotage or otherwise cripple the pending legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was not disturbed by that as much as I was by the reports which came to me, and I thought on good authority, that the Senator from Kentucky, in his discussion with other Senators before the vote was taken on my motion, had appealed to them to vote against the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; I made no appeal to anyone. I do not now recall whether I made any statement on the subject on the floor; but, if I did, that is all I said about it. I appreciated then, and I appreciate now, the Senator's attitude on the Hatch bill. I appreciate his earnestness in trying to forward the appropriation bill; and if anyone reported to the Senator that I intimated that he in any way was trying to do anything to interfere with this bill, or in any way questioning my position here, I never entertained such a thought.

Mr. RUSSELL. At least two Members of the Senate evidently misunderstood some statement which the Senator from Kentucky made. I did not hear that the Senator charged the motion on the agricultural appropriation bill was to sabotage the Hatch bill, but that it was a challenge to his leadership.

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot recall or even imagine any statement I made on that subject that any Senator could misconstrue; but if I did say anything from which a Senator could have derived such a construction, I will say it was entirely unfounded. I never entertained such a thought, and I never said or intimated such a thing to anyone.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am happy to hear that statement. Of course the Senator knows that on Thursday of last week I went to the office of the Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, and told him that the committee had concluded the hearings on the agricultural appropriation bill, and discussed with him the time when the Senate could properly proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. At that time the Senator from Kentucky told me that he had promised the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that he might proceed with the reciprocal trade agreements extension on Monday, and that the agricultural appropriation bill could not be considered unless it was agreeable to the Senator from Mississippi. Not only did I enlist the interest of the majority leader, but I sought also to interest the minority leader, the able and distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], in securing the consideration of the appropriation bill; and on several occasions I also discussed the matter with the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator from Mississippi very generously agreed that I might proceed with the appropriation bill on Monday; and the first time I knew there had been any change in the program, and that the pending bill would not be laid aside, was on Monday, shortly before the vote was taken, when I went over and spoke to the Senator from Kentucky; and he told me at that time that he preferred to proceed with the Hatch bill. In accordance with the understanding I had had previously, and in accordance with the statement I had made to a number of Members of the Senate, I then made the motion to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. The full committee would not have reported the bill had we not expected to bring it before the Senate on Monday and the subcommittee would have been spared working unusually long hours.

Mr. President, I have no apologies for making that motion. I still think it would have been proper for the Senate to lay aside the pending business and to consider the appropriation bill. I believe if that course had been followed we would have already passed the appropriation bill and would have been just as far along with this bill as we now are. The delay could not have hurt the Hatch bill, but it may mitigate against the committee amendments to the farm appropriation bill. I am anxious to have that bill considered at the very earliest date the Senate is willing to consider it. However, I think the proprieties require me to keep the majority leader advised as to motions which may be made affecting procedure, and I did not wish anyone to misconstrue the intent of my action because I had conferred with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct. I explained to the Senator when he came to my office about his bill that we had expected to take up the trade-relations bill as soon as it was reported from the committee. That was the understanding in the committee. We had no information that the agricultural bill would be ready to take up by Monday or the latter part of last week. A conference had been held among members of the Finance Committee, and it was unanimously agreed that the trade-relations bill ought to precede the agricultural bill; and when the Senator spoke to me about it I told him that, so far as I was personally concerned, I was committed to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in the matter of program to get up the trade-relations bill. Subsequently things happened which probably none of us anticipated in regard to both bills, as well as the pending bill. It was obvious when the Senate met on Monday that it was not willing to sidetrack this bill for the agricultural bill or any other bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ascertained that as a fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. Before the vote was taken it was perfectly obvious that it would not be done. The Senator was not only acting within his rights but in the performance of his duty as the Senator in charge of the agricultural bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I felt that I was acting in the performance of my duty both to the committee and to the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I so construed the Senator's action, and I now so construe it. Although I voted against his motion, I construed it to be his duty, and he would not have been loyal in the performance of his duty under the instructions of the committee if he had not made the motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate that statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that he can always be depended upon to be on guard whenever agriculture is involved. I will also say to him that I appreciate the support he has given to the Senator from New Mexico in the advocacy of the pending bill. I think no one who knows the Senator from Georgia would say or think that he had voted in this matter, or in any matter, for the purpose of sabotaging any bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was not disturbed about the idea of sabotage of the Hatch bill as much as I was by the report which had come to me of the statements of the Senator from Kentucky with reference to the motion. That report indicated I had not shown respect for his position of leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to assure the Senator that such statements are not correct.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. There has been considerable discussion by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] about the gossip which has been circulating on the floor of the Senate. Has the Senator heard that the immortal 23 on the other side are discussing this possible eventuality? I have heard it asserted that the real purpose of the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who is interested in the consideration of the agricultural bill, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], is to take up the time of the Senate between now and the 1st of April so that there will be no possibility of considering the Tobey resolution before the census starts.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the facetiousness of the statement of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I send to the desk certain amendments to the pending bill and ask that they may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator from Kentucky will yield further, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill, as amended, may be printed and placed upon our desks so that we can see what it is all about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator mean printed with the amendments adopted up to this time?

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Marine Corps.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Alva M. Beers, to be postmaster at Alburtis, Pa.

POSTMASTER, MAGNOLIA, ARK.—GLENN G. MARTEL

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Glenn G. Martel to be postmaster at Magnolia, Ark., which was reported by the committee earlier in the day, but which is not yet on the calendar, be now confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee act favorably?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And there is a report?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The nomination has not reached the calendar, but the Senator asks unanimous consent that it be now confirmed?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTER, WALDOBORO, MAINE—NOMINATION RECOMMITTED

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on page 2 of the calendar, No. 1701, is the nomination of Annie D. Thompson to be postmaster at Waldoboro, Maine. At the request of another Senator I ask that that nomination be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be recommitted to the committee.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the remaining nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, March 14, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN).

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

As the Father hath sent me into the world, even so have I sent you. Teach us, O Lord God, that there is a divine purpose in each life. Do Thou send us forth to the pasture lands of truth and feed our souls upon the hilltops of the spiritual; there show us how to wait in holy silence till Thou hast made Thy will known to us. We pray Thee to inspire us dauntlessly to grasp the higher, the larger, and the completing realities of our Saviour. Amid the clanging discords of men and nations, substitute the Christian unity revealed in our Lord and Master. We thank Thee that Thou art the bread of life, and Thee alone do we seek. We need God manifest in the flesh, God stooping to our lowliness, God strengthening our weakness and lifting us to the high, still places where life is tranquil and sweet and its loveliness is immortal. Through Christ our most merciful Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8641. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—1941

Mr. LUDLOW submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 8068) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein radio addresses by Senator WAGNER, of New York, and Senator DOWNEY, of California, and others on the American Forum of the Air.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH].

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address made by Archbishop Spellman, of New York, and also an editorial in this morning's New York Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES CODE CONGRESSIONAL SERVICE

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, there is presently being issued, by the West Publishing Co., a United States Code Congressional Service, which includes all the public acts being passed during this present session and which will later be classified and incorporated into the United States Code. There are also conveniently listed therein Executive orders and proclamations. The editor in chief of that company which is the official editor of the United States Code, working under the supervision and direction of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, has graciously consented to add to the mailing list Members of the House who may desire to receive this current pamphlet service. Those who desire to be placed on the list should communicate with the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and we shall be very happy to do the necessary.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a distinguished constituent relative to the census taking.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the secretary of the Salinas (Calif.) Chamber of Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

EVERY MAN TO HIS TRADE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, this morning's Times-Herald quotes the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, as saying:

> When Tom Dewey first accepted the role of "clamor boy" for the Republican Party, I remarked that he had tossed his diaper into the ring. As the result of subsequent education in infant's intimate garments, I hereby make a public correction. I shouldn't have said diaper. A diaper has to be pinned up both front and back.

This statement shows how little the proud father of a sometime proud son has learned about pinning on diapers from his recent experience.

As the Secretary by this time should know, if he has—and I assume he has—been performing as a good husband, a diaper should be put on in this manner, if you follow the method used in the "horse and buggy" days:

You first fold the diaper into a triangle in this way; then you spread it smoothly on the bed or crib in this manner; then you place the baby on it, back down, one point of the triangle pointing toward the baby's feet, and laying between its legs. I regret the Secretary is not here so that the instruction might be visual.

Then you take the two points of the diaper, draw them over the baby's hips just below the navel; hold them in your left hand and, with your right hand, pick up in this manner the third point which was down by the baby's knees; draw it up to the other two points and insert your pin—of course, a safety pin—in the diaper, Mr. Secretary, not in the baby—and one pin—not two—is needed.

If you want to do a little fancy pinning and fasten the baby's stockings, then you use two more pins—one over each leg where the diaper, as it comes around the exterior and interior portion of the baby's leg, meets, and there you pin those two edges and the stockings together.

I would not be so explicit, were it not that I hope the Secretary of the Interior will profit by this information. He may even issue a bulletin on it.

I have been told, although I have had no practical experience, that another way is to fold the diaper into a rectangle, pull the lower edge up between the baby's legs and fasten with a pin at the hip on each side.

It is barely possible that Dewey may, before he is through, pin a diaper over the lower part of Secretary Ickes' face and so stop Ickes' picturesque descriptions of other people and their motives.

Perhaps Secretary Ickes should be transferred to the Department of Agriculture. Agriculture frequently uses a large, wide vehicle, with spikes on a roll on the back end, which, at certain seasons of the year, makes frequent trips between the barnyard and the fields.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech given by Senator BRIDGES in Dallas, Tex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS]?

There was no objection.

MANHATTAN-BROOKLYN TUNNEL

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning I was very much surprised and disappointed to find that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had loaned $57,000,000 for the purpose of putting a tunnel under the river from Manhattan to Brooklyn in New York City. This will be a toll tunnel, the charge to be 25 to 50 cents. This tunnel is within half a mile of the Brooklyn Bridge, which is free and serves practically the same territory, and three blocks farther away is the Manhattan Bridge, another free bridge. I cannot see how such a project can possibly pay out. I do not believe the Reconstruction Finance Corporation ought to loan that amount of money in that kind of a situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial concerning the Wheeler-Lea railroad bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF CODE OF LAWS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RELATING TO MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to murder in the first degree, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. NICHOLS, EBERHARTER, and DIRKSEN.

There was no objection.

NEW CODE OF LAWS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8891) authorizing the appointment of a commission to prepare a new Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker on roll call No. 42 and roll call No. 43 I was absent from the Chamber due to a slight illness. I should like to say that had I been present, on the first roll call, I would have voted "nay," and, on the second roll call, I would have voted "yea."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by Hon. CLIFFORD R. HOPE on a Nation-wide radio hook-up last night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

MONEY

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to call the attention of the House to an extension of my remarks appearing in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 1393, on the subject of money. This address is simply the chapter on that subject taken from my book Prosperity Through Employment. I have received many letters from persons all over the country asking me either to print a small book on that subject or give it greater publicity than the sale of the book has done. Among others, Senator Robert L. Owen has for a long time insisted on my doing this, giving it as his opinion that this chapter is the best short statement on this subject ever written. A fair understanding of the subject of money is of primary importance at the present time. It lies at the foundation of recovery. I therefore asked and received the consent of the House to place it in the RECORD, and I respectfully commend it to the attention of my colleagues. I intend shortly to submit a statement on inflation and deflation, to which I shall call attention at that time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain editorials on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep-waterway project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MOVING PICTURE ON THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, in 1939 the United States New York World's Fair Commission, in its Federal Building, showed a moving picture, The History of the United States. We intend to show this picture in 1940 for the Members of the House and the Senate. We have extended an invitation to attend the showing of this picture tomorrow evening at the departmental auditorium, on Constitution Avenue between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets. We trust that all the Members of the House and the Senate will come and bring their wives and see this great picture. It truly is a masterpiece. It was produced at no cost whatever to the World's Fair Commission.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. RABAUT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1764), which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. RICH reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8913) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate run along today until we make a decision as to the termination of the debate, the time to be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8913, with Mr. COSTELLO in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question before he begins his statement?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Last year there was considerable agitation as to whether or not the House Chamber was safe, and a special engineering appropriation was provided to investigate that question. I did not notice anything in the report about the matter and I am wondering if the gentleman is now prepared to give us any information along that particular line.

Mr. RABAUT. I would say to my friend from New York that I have not the data with me here, but there has been an investigation made by the Bureau of Docks, by the Bureau of Standards, and by the Architect of the Capitol, and by some consulting engineers. A committee has been appointed consisting of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and myself, and we thought a little further data on the subject ought to be obtained before submitting something on the matter later this year. It has been impossible to do anything on the roof in the time that has elapsed since the matter was first brought to the attention of Congress because of the fact we had a special session last fall. If anything is to be done about it, the information will be given to the committee sometime between now and the close of the present session.

Mr. Chairman, this is a small appropriation bill as appropriation bills go, but it is the most important bill in the whole category, because it contains provision for all of the tools by which Members are able to perform their legislative duties, to say nothing of the pay and mileage and stationery.

The subcommittee which considers this bill always has a number of particular problems. Everything covered in this bill is close at hand. For many of these things there are 435 managers in the House and 96 in the Senate, which makes it difficult at some times but pleasant most of the time. I want to extend my thanks to the members of the subcommittee who served with me, Mr. FERNANDEZ, Mr. MCANDREWS, Mr. RICH, and Mr. STEFAN, who acted for our colleague, Mr. POWERS, who was engaged in the military hearings. We missed the gentleman from New Jersey, but in Mr. STEFAN we had a capable "pinch hitter" who takes a live interest in all legislative matters and gave us the benefit of his experience and advice. This is the first time the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has been able to sit with the subcommittee, because he has been engaged on other subcommittees. I want to say for him that he cooperated in every way in helping us to write a good bill, and even though he asked every important witness before the committee where the money was coming from, I think he still is seeking an answer. He helped us make these good cuts and I hope he will help us sustain them here. The gentleman is an industrious and conscientious public servant and it was a pleasure to work with him. Need I say anything about the loyal and friendly qualities of JIM MCANDREWS and "Jo" FERNANDEZ? You know their lovable and capable characteristics as well as I do. So you need not wonder why I am proud to be the subchairman of such a group.

In the total expenditures estimated for next fiscal year, 1941—in excess of $8,000,000,000—this bill of around $24,000,000 represents about three-tenths of 1 percent for the legislative branch.

In framing the bill the committee has been actuated by the purposes which have governed the action of the committee at this session to cut wherever possible without injury to the public service. This is largely a maintenance bill with many salaries and expenses that we cannot get along without. It contains very little of new construction, except such as may come under the Architect of the Capitol, so that opportunities to make cuts are somewhat limited.

The Budget estimates which were considered were $25,785,612; the committee has cut these by $1,877,868; this is a decrease of 7.2 percent.

Comparing this cut with a range of from 3 to 10 percent in the estimates on other bills, the committee feels that it has done a good job.

The bill carries a total of $23,907,744.

It is $626,301 over the 1940 appropriations and I will discuss this figure later.

I want to tell you first where we cut the total of $1,877,868 from the estimates.

We cut $158,000 off the item for the repair of the Capitol terraces, and I will also discuss that a little later.

We eliminated $390,000 for paving the plaza and roadways of the Capitol Grounds. This is an item that we cannot much longer put off, but in view of the terrace and roof work and the heavy hauling involved we felt it ought to wait until they were over.

We cut $73,000 from the Senate Office Building estimates, as that is Senate business and we left that for them.

We cut $108,000 from the estimate for elevator replacement in the old office building. By allowing $6,000 for new doors and other devices for these elevators they will be in good condition for a few years and are not so urgent at this time.

We cut $167,000 from the Capitol power plant, denying an item for installation of an ash eliminator and some other improvements that are not essential now.

We eliminated $100,750 in improvements in the old Library Building, including the following: $30,000 for renewal of pneumatic tube system, $10,000 for a sprinkler system for the grounds, $55,750 for cleaning the exterior, and $5,000 for a study of air conditioning.

We eliminated $64,000 for furniture, equipment, and cases for the Library buildings.

We eliminated $90,000 for new greenhouses for the Botanic Garden Nursery at Poplar Point and the removal of some old greenhouses down here near the conservatory. By spending $1,500 these old houses can be made to last a year or two more.

We eliminated $730,730 from Library of Congress estimates, which I will also discuss later.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement, and my attention was challenged by the statement of the gentleman about the entire cost of the House of Representatives being three-tenths percent. The gentleman did not make a complete comparison, but I thought the gentleman had in mind a comparison with other Government expenditures or the total expenditures of the Government.

Mr. RABAUT. I stated that the total estimated cost of running the entire Government this next fiscal year is about $8,000,000,000, and the cost of the legislative branch is about three-tenths percent of that amount.

Mr. DONDERO. That is, as compared with the total Government expenditures?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

I now come to the increase of $626,301 over 1940. We had to make provision for some items in this bill about which we had no discretion and which required substantial increases over 1940. These items which I am about to give are the main increases over 1940:

Increase in Senators' clerk hire, on a 12-month basis in 1941, instead of 6 months for 1940	$179,400
Increase in Members' clerk hire for the same reason	328,500
Increase in telegraph for the House, due to increase in rates by the Federal Communications Commission	30,000
Repair of the terraces of the Capitol	350,000
Paving of the parking lot near the new House Office Building for use of Members and employees	27,849
Improvements in the old House Office Building to provide storage space and elevator repairs	40,000
New cases, stacks, and equipment for the Library Building	78,299
Increase for the Library of Congress	340,791
Increase for the Government Printing Office	180,000
These main increases amount to	1,554,839

They are offset by nonrecurring items totaling around $900,000, leaving a net increase amounting to a little over $600,000.

The two increases for Senators' and Members' clerk hire are automatic. The new act went into effect January 1, 1940, providing for these extra clerks, and the appropriations for 1940, therefore, only had to cover 6 months of this fiscal year. We must provide in this bill for the entire fiscal year 1941, which accounts for the increase of a little over $500,000.

The Federal Communications Commission has increased the Government rate for domestic messages, effective January 1, 1940. Heretofore the rate for the Government has been 40 percent of the commercial rate, and that has been raised to 60 percent. They have the authority to make this change, and we must pay the increased cost.

The repair of the terraces of the main Capitol Building has given the committee a great deal of concern. The estimate was $508,000, which included the provision of a number of office rooms and cutting windows in the exterior of the terrace walls. We have eliminated this feature and confined the item strictly to a repair and reconstruction job. It is an item that has been deferred several times, and we feel, and the Architect of the Capitol feels, that it should not be further put off. The terraces constitute the one-story structure that surrounds the north, west, and south sides of the building. The roof forms a walkway or plaza above the space underneath which houses a few offices, shops, equipment, document storage, and other utilities for the main building. The terraces have an over-all length of 1,460 feet, average 60 feet wide, and comprise a square-foot area of more than 2 acres. They are supported by brick columns, on which rest iron beams supporting a waterproof membrane—or what was waterproof—covered with a 5-inch unreinforced concrete slab. There are some 70 skylights in this walk area, and the plaza is entirely surrounded by a stone balustrade. The waterproofing membrane beneath the concrete is gone and the concrete is sagging and cracked, and the area leaks badly in many places. The vast expanse of concrete, stone, and iron is subject to considerable expansion and contraction due to the exposure of the sun's heat in midsummer, and in many places the balustrade is out of line and at one spot more than 3 inches. There are over 80 breaks in this balustrade, of varying degrees in width, due to this settling and expanding and contracting. After a careful study of the problem, the only solution seems to be to take off the paving and membrane down to the iron supports. There has been so much leakage that there is some uncertainty as to just what condition those beams may be in. They may in some places be badly corroded. It is proposed to replace the membrane with a suitable up-to-date waterproofing material and to lay 3-inch marble blocks on sand and install flashing. All skylights which now are so productive of leaks will be eliminated. No changes are contemplated in architectural design. The only purpose is repair, and the characteristics of this part of this historic building will not be altered.

There are a number of urgent and expensive improvements waiting to be made on the Hill—the roofs for the Senate and House wings, the repaving of the plaza and roadways, and this item.

We feel that the terraces and the roof item should precede the paving as there will be much heavy hauling for the roofs and the terraces and the old paving should endure that load and incidental damage.

The parking lot near the new House Office Building belongs to the Government and is used by Members and their clerks. It is now covered with coarse cinders, is rough, poorly arranged, and not properly drained. It is also dusty and not satisfactory for the purpose. The amount allowed of $27,849 will place the lot in suitable condition with a 3-inch bituminous paving over the area, proper concrete bumpers, drainage, and so forth. It will accommodate 277 cars.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HILL. Have the gentleman and his committee had an opportunity to investigate the conditions in the schoolrooms for the pages? It seems to me we could use some money there to provide better lights and better conditions generally.

Mr. RABAUT. Under this item for repair of the terrace, those rooms will be taken care of and some additional space will be given to the pages' schoolrooms, so they will not be so crowded.

Mr. HILL. I am glad of that.

Mr. RABAUT. I was down there and personally investigated the matter, I will say to the gentleman.

The improvements in the old House Office Building contemplate alterations in the attic to provide 192 storage rooms for Members in that building similar to the storage rooms provided for Members in the new building and to remove a fire hazard that now exists in that space; this will cost $20,000. Another $20,000 will replace the present freight elevator in the southeast corner of the building, which has been there since the building was constructed and has reached the end of its usefulness and safety; this will cost $14,000 of the $20,000. The other $6,000 is to improve the safety devices on two inside elevators on the northwest corner of the old building by putting in modern doors and locking devices so as to make them more safe. These installations can be made use of when these elevators are replaced. They are old elevators, but are in fair condition, due to their limited use.

We have provided some new metal map cases, new stacks, and other equipment for the Library of Congress properly to house and care for the constantly increasing quantity of books and other material. Some of this is to replace wooden cases that constitute fire hazards and are cumbersome and space occupying compared with the new steel cases.

Part of this equipment is to house the storage of catalog cards which are sold by the Library and constitute a profitable business, the revenues amounting to over $300,000 a year. The law division also needs some new stacks to accommodate its growth, and provision is being made for stacks and cases to accommodate some 30,000 volumes of reference books and 40,000 volumes of rare books, 99 percent of which are out of print.

The $180,000 for the Government Printing Office includes $45,000 for the Office of the Superintendent of Documents to cover additional employees and supplies and catalogs to handle the increasing sales and distribution of Government publications. Receipts from sales of Government publications now amount to close to $1,000,000 a year, and every effort is being made by the Public Printer to stimulate this phase of distribution of publications.

I now come to the item which gave the committee more concern and difficulty than any other. I refer to the Library of Congress. The Budget estimates from the Library presented an increase of $1,070,000 and called for 287 new positions.

I want to go back a little and give you a historical background of the institution. Dr. Putnam had been Librarian for 40 years. During the past decade the Library had become very congested due to the constant increase in books and other library material, and there was neither space to house the material properly nor to accommodate employees properly to catalog, classify, and sort it. When the new annex was opened Dr. Putnam submitted his estimates to care for this material and go to work on the arrearages that had accumulated due to the inadequacies of space in the old building. He asked for 200 new positions and about $700,000 increase in money. He was about to retire and a new Librarian was to come in. The committee felt it was only fair, if there was to be a change in administration over there, that the new man should have a chance to look over the plant and personnel and conditions generally and formulate his own policies and conclusions. So Dr. Putnam's increase was eliminated, with a few exceptions, to await the new Librarian's conclusions.

Mr. MacLeish was appointed on October 1, 1939, just 15 days before the estimates for the Library for the fiscal year 1941 were due in the Bureau of the Budget, according to law. He consulted with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. TAYLOR, and wrote me asking that he might be permitted to have more time. Consequently he submitted in the regular Budget the regular estimates in the amount of the 1940 appropriations and then went to work to find out about the Library so he could send in his conclusions in a supplemental estimate when Congress met. He had 3 months to do this.

Mr. MacLeish made a most favorable impression upon the committee by the way he has attacked the problem over there. He has worked prodigiously, going into every phase of the Library work. He has had experts from a number of the outstanding libraries in the country study the institution and advise with him. He has had the help of the Bureau of the Budget and the General Accounting Office in revamping the accounting system and the collection of moneys from various work they perform. He has, to my way of thinking—and I have visited the place quite a number of times—instilled a new spirit in the organization and wants to make the Library really serviceable.

The committee has had the best hearings on the Library this year that it has ever had. We spent 2 days going through the estimates with the Librarian and his aides. We have been over there ourselves.

We feel that something constructive and substantial needs to be done. We did not accede, however, to all of the approach which the Librarian suggested.

He asked for 287 new positions totaling $535,056.

We gave him 130 new positions totaling $211,296.

Of these 130, 10 are now on the roll costing $21,580; 13 are for the building maintenance costing $6,936; and eliminating these there are 107 new people for library work at a total salary of $182,760.

He asked for an increase in the book-purchase fund in the sum of $275,000.

We gave none of that.

He asked for an increase in the lawbook purchase fund in the sum of $15,000.

We gave none of that.

He asked for increase in pay within grades $108,720.

We did not allow that.

He asked for a total increase of $1,071,521.

We cut this by the sum of $730,730.

We gave a total increase of $340,791.

In applying this increase we did so on this basis. The processing of books—that is, cataloging, classifying, and so forth, getting them ready for the shelves—is greatly in arrears and has been for many years. It is getting so bad that the cost of bringing up the arrearage may be more than we want to tackle. The Library takes in some 200,000 new books every year, and yet it has only been able to process about 160,000 to 170,000 of these, the rest accumulating uncataloged. That has been getting progressively worse. To stop this arrearage, just to keep even, the Library asked for 82 people, and we gave 50. We also gave in the other divisions of the Library which have to do with taking in other classes of material—and where 101 were asked—a total of 38 people, and of these there are 8 now on the roll, making a net of 30. In the administrative end of the Library he asked for 16 people, including 2 Assistant Librarians at $6,500 each, an information service, and other help, and we have allowed 7. We eliminated the 2 Assistant Librarians and gave 1 administrative assistant at $5,600 to take charge of this processing work and coordinate the work of cataloging, classifying, labeling, and so forth, to speed up that end of the job and coordinate and bring some order out of the chaos.

For the copyright office and the card index division, both revenue producers, revenues in 1941 estimated at a total of $640,000, we allowed some increases in personnel. The legislative reference asked 32 new positions and $78,420, and we allowed none of it.

In the binding fund we allowed an increase of $100,000. Many thousands of volumes are falling to pieces on the shelves for want of rebinding. There is a backlog of $1,350,000 in binding, and it is progressively getting worse. The committee felt that instead of buying new books and increasing the collections, we had better first preserve what we had, so we cut out the increase of $305,000 for book purchases and allowed this binding increase. There are 215,000 volumes that badly need rebinding. There are over 300,000 volumes that are ready to bind and cannot be touched for lack of funds. We feel that we can make a good start with this increase from $300,000 to $400,000.

The Librarian asked for a sizable increase in the reading room, 11 higher-priced places to add to the scholarly services of the Library, as he puts it, "mediate between the books and the reader." He also asked for a considerable of a research force in the legislative reference to act as expert advisers to Congress in matters of legislation. We did not allow any of this. We do not disparage the effort. It came from a desire to be serviceable and it has a place in Library service, but we felt that it was more important to handle, make available, and preserve what we have now in the Library, and what is coming in, than it is to add scholarly services and more books and go further in arrears with what we have.

Now I want to speak about the salary situation in the Library. Increases were urged by the Librarian in the sum of $108,720 for promotions for 901 out of the 1,200 employees. His program called for one step advance in the grade for all employees above $2,000 and enough steps for those below to bring them all to the average of the grade. We have followed the committee's rule with reference to departments and eliminated the entire amount.

In doing this, we have, however, made some leeway for the Library to make some promotions. We have indicated in the report that the lapse money that will be available can be used on the basis of the committee formula. Heretofore the Library has used lapse money to provide badly needed additional personnel to try to get ahead with this accumulated work. The new Librarian was very frank and honest about this. He thinks it is wrong to use lapse money to hire additional personnel and in making that statement he earned a warm approval from the committee. So we have put the personnel now paid from lapses on regular appropriations. This will free that amount, running in excess of $20,000, to be used for advances within grades in accord with the formula. The new positions we have placed in here, after eliminating the charwomen and the 10 now on the roll, amount to 107. There will be a byproduct in promotions as a result of the new positions in the shape of line promotions when they utilize their own people to fill the new jobs. The lapse money and the line promotions will help the salary situation very materially.

We have put a limitation in the bill on the amount that can be used by legislative reference for the digest of general public bills. They had about $25,000 in the estimates and we cut it to $20,000. I sent out a circular letter to all the Members of the House asking their opinion about this digest of bills. I got 134 responses out of 435 Members; 36 were either indifferent or opposed and 98 were favorable. Based on this cross section of 30 percent of the membership we concluded that the Members wanted it continued in some form. We have curtailed it and suggested that they eliminate the expensive printing of monthly editions and try to get along on mimeographed weekly copies.

We have also indicated in the report that the legislative reference should not renew the mimeographed daily edition of the digest of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The cost would run about $700 a session on the basis it was started but it would not be long before they would have more orders than they could handle. It was criticized on the floor by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and they stopped it temporarily. We indicate in the report that it should not be started again.

I want to say a word in general about the increase that is carried for the Library. It is substantial but it needs to be. This is a great National Library. It has the finest buildings and the largest collections of any library in the world. In point of its collections it is one of the two or three finest in the world. All Americans are proud of it. It is not up to date in dealing with the material that is constantly coming in. I think the committee has faith in Mr. MacLeish as an administrator and as a cultured and scholarly man who is taking a pride in endeavoring to get this institution up to a level that we want to see. We have gone only part way with him in his program. We have gone about one-third in money and about 40 percent in personnel. What we have done is directed toward getting up to date with what we have. We can talk in the future about expansion of service to the readers, research, scholarly direction, and other utilities of the Library. For the present we must be concerned with getting rid of arrearages and making the plant function on what we have. We have money limitations this year that are an important factor. The report on the bill dealing with the Library is pretty full. I hope you will read it and I hope you will read the hearings. We have gone fully into these matters and feel that we have acted fairly and constructively by the Library and fairly by the Treasury.

There are many minor matters in connection with the bill that I could call your attention to. They are fully set forth in the report and I shall be glad to answer any questions you may have about them.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a remark?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I would like to make public acknowledgement of an error of judgment. I opposed the confirmation of Mr. MacLeish as Librarian of the Library of Congress on the ground I thought we should have a man trained in library work. I wish now to acknowledge publicly, and as publicly as I protested his confirmation, that I made a mistake, for I think for the first time in the history of that Library or since I have known anything about it, and that is since 1909, it is now being made of some use, benefit, and service to the Members of Congress as a Library of the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. RABAUT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I will be glad to yield to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I wonder if every Member of the House is aware that we have a legislative service committee in the Congressional Library that serves the Members of Congress in research work?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. It is a very valuable committee and has been of service to me personally and to other Members who know about it.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. To ask about the estimates that were given to the committee by the predecessor of the present Librarian. They were refused, the gentleman says, because a new Librarian was coming in. Did the new Librarian recommend more or less than the amount recommended by the old Librarian?

Mr. RABAUT. He recommended more.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman speaks about the cooperation of others. I would like to have it of record that the present Librarian did have the hearty cooperation and assistance and even sympathy of the retiring Librarian.

Mr. RABAUT. Oh, very much so. The Librarian Emeritus is over there today. I did not mean to infer anything to the contrary, and I am very glad the gentleman has called it to my attention.

Mr. GIFFORD. The figures of Mr. Putnam were exceeded by those of the new Librarian?

Mr. RABAUT. Dr. Putnam's figures were less. His figure was $700,000, and those of the new man $1,070,000. The number of positions was less, but the number of positions that we allowed is less than those asked for by Dr. Putnam.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am in a position to hear a good deal about this, and I wanted the RECORD to show the splendid cooperation given to the present Librarian by the retiring Librarian.

Mr. RABAUT. There is no question about that. The committee feels very friendly to the Librarian Emeritus as well as to the present Librarian. At the time that the former Librarian asked for these increases we explained to him and he understood it very well and there was an agreement upon it. He thought also the positions should not be frozen for the new man. I thought also it was proper in defense of the people who are in the Library at the present time, who were all friends of the former Librarian, because he had been there for 40 years, and I thought those people ought to be secured in their positions there, as they were especially acquainted with the work, and that is the reason that we arrived at that point. But, if all positions were frozen—and there is no civil service in the Library as the gentleman knows—you could not tell what might happen there in the general shake-up of the Library. The money that we are allowing over there for the new positions is principally for the working processes of the Library proper. No allowance is being made at the present time toward what you might call the scholarly end of the Library; that is, for deeper study. The only thing being allowed is to try to get what we have up to date. There are books and other material spread all over the place at the present time, not cataloged or classified. We are running behind on new books to the tune of 40,000 volumes a year and that cannot keep going on forever.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, in these days of war and rumors of more war, and of treaties of peace, it is a long look back, but we should not forget that 165 years ago today, on March 13, 1775, the first blood was shed in the American Revolution at Westminster, Vt.

The affray at the courthouse in Westminster resulting in the shooting and killing of William French and Daniel Houghton, antedated and preceded Lexington and Concord by a month.

Those of you who have read the Green Mountain Boys, and The Rangers are familiar with the historical background. While from the standpoint of historical accuracy, perhaps, it may not properly be called the first battle or engagement in the Revolutionary War, it was nevertheless the first bloodshed, and important because of the temper it displayed and the resentment it aroused. It was an armed resistance to unlawful usurpation, regimentation, and domination, resented by every Green Mountain boy always and everywhere its head is shown.

It is also worthy of note and to be remembered that at a convention held at this same Westminster, on January 15, 1777, Vermont declared itself a free and independent State. Which, may I add, it has continued and always will continue to be, so long as a drop of the blood of those who fought at Westminster, Ticonderoga, Valley Forge, and elsewhere, and always, for freedom and liberty is traceable in the veins of those generations that have succeeded them.

Incidentally, some of you may not recall that for 14 years Vermont existed as an independent Republic, asking no odds of anyone and giving none.

From the Vermont of Today, With Its Historic Background, Attractions, and People, volume I, chapter VI, I quote the following statement with respect to the Westminster massacre:

> An event occurred in the early spring of 1775 that marked the climax of the trouble with New York, and was so near to the Revolutionary War that it is very properly considered the first blood to be shed in the struggle for independence. This was the Westminster massacre, "an occurrence which unified the sentiment of the grants, intensified their opposition to New York, and roused resentment against England, under the cover of whose authority New York was acting." Three conventions had been held at the Westminster Courthouse, in Cumberland County, where the King's court was held in the jurisdiction of what is now Windsor and Windham Counties. The officers were holding their appointments from the Governor of New York, but were really officers of the crown. A regular session of the court was scheduled for March 14, and the Vermonters proposed to show their hostility to the crown by preventing the opening of the court. Before the day arrived they met the presiding judge at Chester and urged him to call off the session. Judge Chandler seemed to feel this ought to be done, but told the delegation that a criminal case required that the court should hold its regular session. Finding all efforts unavailing, a party of Whigs armed themselves from Capt. Azariah Wright's woodpile and took possession of the courthouse. The sheriff and his posse demanded entrance, with the accompanied threat that if they were not admitted in 15 minutes "he would blow a lane through them." The clerk of the court backed up the sheriff and, exhibiting his pistol, swore that "only by it would he hold parley with such damned rascals." Here Judge Chandler intervened, and when the sheriff's party had gone for refreshments, told the Vermonters they could stay in the courthouse until morning, when court would be held and the officers would come in without arms. "With courage reinforced by quotations of flip and fiery rum," the sheriff and his posse returned to the building late in the evening, forced an entrance, and in the melee which followed William French was almost instantly killed, Daniel Houghton was fatally wounded, and several other Vermonters hurt. Court met in the morning, adjourned to the afternoon, and never met again. "The King had departed forever from Westminster," said the late Judge Frank L. Fish at the sesquicentennial celebration in that town January 15, 1927, and the first blood of the American Revolution had been shed.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I noticed that the gentleman had a sort of chuckle and a roguish eye when he looked at me. I merely wish to say to him that he is very welcome to all of the crumbs of history that he can take away from us, because we have so much of it in Massachusetts.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Oh, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, about a year ago a bill was put through the House of Representatives and the Senate at the request of Mr. Roosevelt establishing what is known as the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial Library at Hyde Park. We all know that that gentleman is always true to his instincts, and that he believes in operating the ward-politician principle to the limit. However, when it comes to the President of the United States getting down to the point he arrived on January 25, 1940, when he issued an Executive order which I am about to read to you, it is going pretty strong. Here it is:

> By virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in me by the provisions of paragraph 8 of subdivision 2 of section 2 of the Civil Service Act (22 Stat. 403–404), it is hereby ordered that the initial appointments to such professional and subprofessional positions in the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, established by public resolution of July 18, 1939 (53 Stat. 1062), as are necessary for the transaction of its affairs, may be effected by the Archivist of the United States without regard to the requirements of the Civil Service Act and rules.
> (Signed) FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.
> THE WHITE HOUSE, January 25, 1940.

Now, they are going to take care of the faithful up around Hyde Park, all the neighbors and the neighbors' boys and girls, so that, instead of a civil-service set-up, we will have a political set-up in that library. He is virtually doing a good job of catering to the ward politicians, but the gentleman does not stop there. Shortly after that there came out certain statements in the papers. I have before me the Washington Post of February 23, 1940, and right in the middle of the front page it reads:

ROOSEVELT FIRM INSURES LINE AIDED BY UNITED STATES

The insurance firm of Roosevelt & Sargent, Inc., in which James Roosevelt is a member and the President's wife a director, has taken over the insurance account of the American President Steamship Line, it was announced yesterday. The chairman of the line, which formerly was known as the Dollar Steamship Lines, is William Gibbs McAdoo, former Senator from California, and political ally of President Roosevelt. John A. Sargent, president and treasurer of the insurance firm, announced the new account, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Boston. McAdoo was named to the $25,000-a-year position with the President Line after his defeat in the Democratic primaries in 1938. The United States Government holds 90 percent of the common stock of this line. A $45,000,000 R. F. C. loan was granted the line in 1938, and the Maritime Commission agreed to give the company an annual operating subsidy of $3,000,000 for a 5-year period. The line's insurance account previously was held by a San Francisco firm. Mrs. Roosevelt became a director of Roosevelt & Sargent December 14, 1938, after her son resigned to accept a position in Hollywood as vice president of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc.

Now, we not only take care of the ward politicians of Hyde Park but we take care of the family. Oh, nicely. Almost from the very beginning there has been inaugurated by this administration a spending program. We start up in the northeastern corner of the country with Passamaquoddy and we go ahead with that until its failure has demonstrated that it should not be done.

We jump down to Florida, and we start the Florida Canal, and we go ahead and build bridges across imaginary canals and spend millions of dollars doing it. Then we jump up to the T. V. A., and we obligate ourselves to spend $500,000,000 in the southern and central part of the country, and we sell electricity there as low as 1.69 mills to householders, when it has been demonstrated by the Reclamation Service by experience that 2.25 mills is the lowest at wh'ch electricity can be sold at the spigot, and we call that a yardstick, obligating the taxpayers of the United States to pay for the electricity that is furnished to the people in the Tennessee Valley, and they tell us it is a yardstick, and they tax the people whom they ridicule, because they claim they are paying too much for electricity, for the difference between the cost of the electricity and what they sell it for. That is a grand yardstick as long as you can get away with it. But sometime the people of the United States are going to wake up to that racket.

Then we jump around all over the country, and we spend b'llions and billions of dollars upon projects which do not have any justification, designed to follow up the ward-politician idea that by handing the people something with borrowed money, you can subsidize them to the point where you can control their votes.

Personally, I think that the people of the United States are waking up to the idea of what has been done to them, the building up of their national debt from something like $22,500,000,000 to $42,395,000,000 of direct debt, and the prospect of a great deal more. The debt that is advertised in the daily Treasury statement does not include all the debt, because there are silver certificates secured by only 35 cents an ounce silver in the Treasury, and the deficiency between the value of that silver at the present time, the market price, and those silver certificates, is $1,300,000,000, which is a debt that must be added. Then there are $1,600,000,000 of guaranteed bonds under the United States housing operation.

Then there are four or five or six billion dollars net of liabilities for guaranteed bonds of different corporations.

Oh, we have had a great step forward in progress in the last 7 years, a step forward in the direction of bankruptcy, absolutely preventing economic recovery and the employment of our people; absolutely preventing the farmer of the United States and the workingman from getting enough out of their operations to make a decent living.

Is it not time that we stopped this ward-politician idea of handling the Government of the United States and establish a sound, businesslike principle in handling our fiscal affairs? Is it not time that we stopped fooling away the people's money on things that we do not have any justification for? Is it not time that we gave proper consideration to those things that are being done to us?

Let me say to you that when we come to the point where our people's elections can be controlled by the spending of money, the liberties of the American people are gone. It is a step toward the formation of a dictatorship that cannot be denied. It is a step toward the destruction of the American Constitution and a step toward the establishment in this country of a dictatorship that will completely upset and destroy the fundamental liberties of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Is it not time for us to wake up and get rid of this continual cry of "Emergency"; stop being deceived by measures which do not promote economic and business recovery? Look out for the liberties of the American people, and give the farmer and the workingman of America a chance; give the taxpayer a chance, and set our eyes forward and stop this reactionary, destructive method of handling the Government of the United States. Let not anybody be fooled into the idea that the kind of operation we have been through is progressive. That word has long been used as a cloak to cover up many sins, but never so notorious and so vicious as in the last 7 years. I am hoping that patriotism and a sense of responsibility will come again to the people of the United States, and that they will stop this raid upon their liberties. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman deals with problems of immigration, naturalization, and deportation. The committee has been working earnestly during these times of chaos and unrest in this country to determine something about the factors affecting immigration, naturalization, and deportation.

There seems to have been some discrimination against the committee for no reason whatsoever. I notice that the last few times whenever private bills were called on the Private Calendar most of the bills were objected to even though the committee had reported them out unanimously, Republicans and Democrats joining in the favorable report. I venture to say that if the objectors were asked to tell us the merits or demerits of a bill they objected to they could not have done so. It seems that most of the objections are based on the ground that somebody does not like somebody else, or does not like somebody's name, so objection is made.

Let me assure you that politics are not involved in the consideration of bills by this committee made up of 22 conscientious Members drawn from both sides of the aisle. We are trying to do an honest job and do it for the best interest of the country. About a year ago the committee felt there was entirely too much smuggling of aliens into this country and we desired to know something about it. We also wanted to know something about the rules and regulations with a view to seeing whether a uniform policy of administration of the law could not be worked out, and the committee at that time went on record unanimously, Republicans and Democrats joining, asking the Committee on Rules for a rule authorizing the Committee on Immigration to study the whole question of immigration and the problem of the border patrol. In this connection let me call attention to the fact that although we have more than 9,000 miles of border, only approximately 240 officers protect this vast extended area on the Mexican and Canadian sides. In other words, if we lined up our enforcement officers to cover the border they would be about 5 miles apart.

One of the problems which bothered us was the fact that within the last few years a considerable group of Chinamen came into the United States over the Mexican border. How they came across we did not know, but we had an idea we could find out who was operating this smuggling ring in this country. So we asked the Rules Committee for a rule to make this investigation because we knew of certain circumstances that we thought, if developed, could throw a great deal of light on the whole question. After presenting our evidence before the distinguished Rules Committee, they voted the rule out unanimously, but on that very day some question touching a milk investigation occupied the attention of the House and this rule could not be reached. The rule was not brought up again. About 2 weeks thereafter the Rules Committee took up further consideration of this resolution for which we had asked, and when we got before the committee they told us they did not like some of the language in the resolution and objected to certain powers the committee asked for. I went back to the committee and laid the situation before them. By a unanimous vote we corrected the resolution to make it conform with the suggestions of the Rules Committee. The resolution came before the committee again and they wanted other changes. We complied again. The resolution came before the committee again only a few weeks ago, but I am reliably informed they are not going to vote out a rule on it. Why? Because some people in this Capitol talk about enforcement but do not want enforcement, some people talk about the evils of immigration and make a lot of capital out of it, but they do not really want enforcement of the immigration laws. Why? I have in some way discovered that over a number of years bad practices have arisen; for instance, during seasonal employment of farm hands in the West they bring in a lot of peon cheap labor. Instead of giving this employment to people in this country at American wages, they bring in these peons from Mexico at 15 cents or 20 cents a day to go out in the fields and do this work. After the seasonal employment has ended we then have a difficult job on our hands to get these people out of the country again. Our committee would like to stop it. We would like to stop all abuses of our borders. We would like to see more men patroling the border, both the Canadian border and the Mexican border.

But apparently the Rules Committee does not agree with us. That committee does not seem to want to stop smuggling and all of these other things that we charged before it. I believe this statement applies to Members on both sides of the aisle, on the majority and minority sides, because the last time I appeared before the committee one of the minority members stated he did not think an investigation was needed. He stated further that we ought to enforce the existing laws. But you cannot enforce the laws with a group of racketeers practicing smuggling through what seems to be strongly organized syndicates. So to my great astonishment and surprise this resolution is not going to be reported out of that committee. I want to state here that the committee in charge of this kind of legislation should not be held responsible then for present conditions. The Committee on Immigration has done its duty in trying to determine just exactly what laws to present to the Congress, but we cannot pass any laws at this time without getting at the cause. The cost of the investigation would not be more than $10,000. I know other committees in this House have been given hundreds of thousands of dollars for more or less important considerations than the question before us now of cleaning our borders and cleaning our country of undesirable aliens.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I am unable to come to a conclusion at once with regard to some of the matters the gentleman has presented to the Members and I want to give it more thought; but may I add that there have been in recent years many aliens flocking across the international line into the State of Arizona, so I am reliably informed, which is creating a distinct problem? I have it from the civil officers and patriotic organizations along the border that this is occurring now. They are urging that we do not lessen our vigilance but rather increase it, to see that the border is properly protected, because it is our back door.

I recognize one thing that the gentleman mentioned. There have been times some years ago to my knowledge when we deliberately let down the bars to permit laborers from Mexico to come in, but I think that will never be done again. We had a rather sad experience with that sort of thing a dozen or so years ago. May I say now that we have plenty of unemployed in that part of the country today to do all the agricultural work which it is necessary to do. These new farm laborers have not come from a foreign land; they have come from another part of my own country into Arizona.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. May I add that we have the front door of our country closed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes,

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, we have closed the front door. We are careful with reference to who comes into this country. They have to establish that they will not become a public charge, they have to be persons not excluded under our immigration laws, they have to have some family ties; but the back door is open. Some people do not want to close the back door. These are the people who talk most about the immigration problem.

May I say in this connection also that I have before me about 70 or 80 so-called alien-baiting bills, bills covering the subject from soup to nuts. If you will read some of them and would use them, you could make up a good vaudeville show. Some want to tax the aliens who live here. Some want to fingerprint them. Some want to have them report to police stations in case they remove a tooth and advise the police all about the procedure. But there is not one bill before the committee to clear up the question of the border, and I submit that the Committee on Immigration is not responsible for the condition that exists today, as indicated by my colleague the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has indicated that the front door is closed but that the back door is open. If the front door is closed, it indicates that we have laws on the statute books today to deal with the immigrant situation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. At the front door.

Mr. KEEFE. At the front door?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. It is the gentleman's contention, however, that we have not sufficient inspectors and border patrol personnel to properly guard the back door?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is one of the many reasons.

Mr. KEEFE. Is there any other reason?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; many.

Mr. KEEFE. Is not that the principal reason?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is one of the big reasons.

Mr. KEEFE. Is the gentleman arguing for an increase in the border patrol?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am going to do that; yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. And an increase in the number of inspectors?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am going to do that, too.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Budget very drastically cut those items?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am going to go into that in a few moments. The two gentlemen have very kindly given me 5 additional minutes apiece, and I want to talk about that matter because it ought to be called to the attention of the House.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman believe, if there is a substantial increase in the border patrol and in the inspection service of the present Immigration Service that we have laws on the statute books now to effectively stop this so-called back-door entrance of illegal aliens?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman to the extent of about 75 percent. Our committee, however, that has charge of these matters would like to know who constitutes the smuggling ring and how it is operating, and we can find out if the Committee on Rules, that is dominating these questions, will give us an opportunity to make a study of this problem which has not been studied for 30 years. For the information of the House, I may say these so-called smuggling operations deal mostly with Chinese, Japanese, and such people whom we have excluded under our present immigration laws. I do not want to impugn the patriotic motives of the distinguished members of the important Rules Committee. I realize that all of them are outstanding Members of this House, whom I respect highly. However, I do think that, not being in close touch with this particular problem, they fail to realize its importance. I do not blame them for that. I know that they have enough problems of their own to deal with. The least I would expect of them, however, is to show more confidence and faith in the judgment of the full membership of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. KEEFE. Does not the gentleman understand that the present facilities of the Bureau of Immigration and its border patrol and inspector activities are fully aware of the sources of illegal entrance of aliens into this country, but that they are burdened because of a lack of personnel?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman to a certain extent. Let me add, however, that there is certain information that came to the attention of the committee which requires a subpena and testimony to develop. The Labor Department has no power of subpena, no power to investigate. They are law-enforcing officers. They cannot get the information we would like to get so that we can put teeth in our laws on this whole question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have before me the resolution to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is speaking of the Schulte resolution?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes. I am absolutely in favor of getting rid of any alien who is in this country illegally and of preventing the illegal entrance of any alien. However, the gentleman is the chairman of a committee of this House—the Immigration Committee—and it seems to me that under the rules of the House the gentleman has all the power right now that is necessary in order to make a study of all existing statutes, Executive orders, rules, regulations, instructions, and general orders which relate to the immigration, deportation, naturalization, and so forth, of aliens.

Does the gentleman mean to tell me that his committee does not have the power to call before it the officials of the Immigration and Naturalization Service? I know that the rules of the House of Representatives give him that power.

The gentleman speaks about an investigation. The immigration border patrol and the immigration officials have full power to investigate, to arrest, and to apply for deportation orders. The gentleman has the power right now to do practically what he desires to do under the resolution. If it then develops that further investigation is necessary, that might be the time to go after the Rules Committee. I do not believe the gentleman is justified in blaming this on the Rules Committee until his own committee, the committee of which he is chairman, does what this resolution in part provides.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is exactly the stage we have come to. We have gone into all the matters concerning which the gentleman says we have the power to act, and we have come to the conclusion by unanimous vote, after days and days of discussion by the committee, that the committee should direct and authorize our colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE], to go a step further by introducing this resolution. We found we had come to the end of our power. The end of our power is in paragraph 2, with reference to investigating unlawful entry and smuggling of aliens into the United States. There are certain persons in certain sections of the country that want exemption from criminal prosecution, when they will disclose a certain state of facts to the effect that an international group is bringing in Chinamen or Japanese or other orientals from Mexico. The Labor Department has no power to subpena anybody, and the committee certainly has no power to do it.

Mr. COCHRAN. But has not the Labor Department the power to arrest them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Labor Department often cannot get all the necessary evidence, although they have tried hard to do it and have arrested a great number of people. We have a great Labor Department and its personnel is beyond any reproach.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then why does not the gentleman's committee, the legislative committee, bring in a bill increasing the force so they can get the evidence?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We will come to that.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is the chairman of the legislative committee that can bring in such an authorization.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say that it seems that this argument is always presented to me but to no other chairman of a committee. They are always trying to find a way to say "No" to an investigation. That same argument was presented to me by dozens of Members on the floor when I stood up here asking for the adoption of the resolution creating the Dies committee, but no such argument was made after the resolution was adopted. You have given that committee $200,000 to do what? To investigate un-American activities. And here I am asking for probably $10,000 to stop the flood of bad aliens into this country. It will save appropriating millions of dollars later to deport them after they come into this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I will add 3 minutes to the gentleman's time so that I may ask him a few questions.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I agree with the gentleman that now is the time it is necessary to take preventative steps in this matter. A great world war is now going on. The gentleman recalls that at the close of the last World War almost half the people of Europe wished to come to America. The situation is developing in the same way today.

The people who have written from my border about this situation say it is Europeans who are being smuggled across the line, whereas the gentleman has mentioned orientals more particularly. I expect to see this evil develop by leaps and bounds, not only with respect to orientals but also Europeans trying to get away from the war-stricken countries to come here.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say to my good friend that I do not agree with him on that point. I have taken the trouble to make a very careful check-up on that, and I have found that there are involved only a very few persons, who have been living on the borders for some time, and they are not in a true sense of the word European refugees at all. The European refugees in these days cannot get out of their countries without a passport, and then need proper identification for every move they make.

May I add this to the whole discussion: Would it not be worth the price to give the committee that is in charge of the subject and responsible for the legislation an opportunity to go into all these matters? I call the attention of the Members to the fact that in the last few years 28 American border patrolmen have been killed in cold blood by smuggling rings. Do you believe the Labor Department can find out who is doing all this shooting? There seems to be a racket, and probably an international group. If a subcommittee can go down there and subpena certain persons, we can get information on this activity so we can bring in laws with teeth in them. I should like to see war veterans by the hundreds guard our borders.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Under the gentleman's proposal, will the committee be permitted to investigate all the illegal entrances along the borders?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; they would or anywhere else.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How much will that cost?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It would not cost more than $10,000.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I believe the gentleman's committee ought to have $25,000 or $50,000 in view of the unemployment in the country. It would be money well spent. I would like to make a suggestion that the gentleman introduce his bill providing for $50,000 or $100,000 to carry on this necessary work, and then wait 30 days and if action is not taken on it by the committee, he should then file a discharge petition and get the bill out on the floor of the House. With more than 11,000,000 people out of work in the United States today we should be able to put your bill across as it will materially help stop aliens from entering the country illegally and getting jobs which our unemployed need.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I appreciate that. The gentleman probably was not here when I stated that we have been unanimous in the committee about getting this resolution out of the Rules Committee. One day they voted it out and the next day they took it back and the next day they reported it back and later took it back and then they said they wanted some amendments and then someone said that it might trespass upon the integrity of the Dies committee by investigating aliens. I do not know that the Dies committee has anything to do with the investigation of aliens.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I sincerely hope the gentleman will file a discharge petition so that we will have an opportunity to provide for an adequate authorization and appropriation. Should we spend as much money for the investigation which the gentleman's committee desires as we spend for the Dies committee we would be rendering a great service to the country, because there are now more than 11,000,000 unemployed Americans in our country who want and need a job and should have one instead of aliens who illegally enter.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am fully in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCHULTE. Is it not a fact that had this resolution been adopted 5 or 6 years ago and had this committee been given the power to go to the various borders and find out for themselves just what legislation was necessary to correct this situation, there would not have been any necessity for the Dies committee working today, because 90 percent of those people they are picking up are the fellows who have come in illegally and that we have been trying for a long time to stop?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And how many times has my friend been before the Rules Committee?

Mr. SCHULTE. I have been before the Rules Committee any number of times, and each time we are passed over with some excuse or other. I cannot understand the action of the Rules Committee, I will say to my friend.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I believe the editorials in the newspapers in the State of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and in other States, have discussed the Schulte resolution and have stated that it would be a great help for the Congress if the committee were given the authority and enough money at this time, in view of the chaos and the general disturbance in the country, so as to be able to make a study of this problem and find out the true situation so that we may legislate intelligently.

Mr. SCHULTE. If the gentleman will yield further, I am going to make a statement to the House that I believe is going to be very illuminating, to the effect that sailors off of the ships that land on our shores testified before the committee and admitted that they were bringing over as many as 100 extra sailors on board their ships who are hired as sailors, or supposed to be sailors, but when they land here they are given the freedom of the port and immediately desert.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Coming from German ships, from the North German Lloyd, there may be a ship that needs only 750 men, but will have 850 or 900, and the other 200 are only spies sent over to do espionage work in the United States.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PATRICK. There is one thing I do not understand——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We will make the gentleman understand it if we can.

Mr. PATRICK. And that is, how anybody could present a proposition charging that the work the gentleman seeks to do would, in any wise, infringe on the work of the Dies committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman, but that was the inference drawn by distinguished Members on both sides of the Rules Committee, where we have been knocking at the door for almost 1 year pleading with them to do something not for the benefit of any individual, but for the benefit of the country in letting us find out what could be done about this problem. They have just given us the merry-go-round and I think the country ought to know it.

Mr. PATRICK. Did the gentleman say that this is a piece of work that has already been done, that it was already started once, but the last Rules Committee did not support the first rule?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. PATRICK. Did the gentleman get such a rule once?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We got a rule once unanimously. It was voted out and they called it back and said it was too much power. We had asked to go into the question of dual nationality and they objected to the words "dual nationality." Now, what is dual nationality? There are at least from 100,000 to 200,000 people in this country that are citizens of two countries. They are citizens of Germany or some other country, and they are citizens of the United States. It was the purpose of the committee to make a study of that and to cancel the certificates of those people that have two masters. They cannot be hyphenated Americans. They are either Americans or they are not, and if they want to pledge allegiance to Hitler and at the same time hold a certificate of citizenship of Uncle Sam, they should be forced to make up their minds and we ought to get at the bottom of that whole situation. The distinguished Rules Committee, however, and one or two other distinguished Members, said that it was giving the committee too much power to find out how many people of dual nationalities there are in the country.

Mr. PATRICK. Did any question come up as to the sum of money asked by the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; they were not interested in that. They thought it would be a big job. It is only in the last 2 weeks that a gentleman asked me how much it would take.

Mr. PATRICK. I do not see how they got by with the matter.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Because they had in their mind to give us what is known as a run-around. They were going to "pass the buck." Some Member would blame another Member, and another Member would blame the leadership, and so on. In the meantime, however, we are overlooking a very serious problem in this country, and I do not think there is a Member on this floor, if that resolution were reported out, who would vote against it, because he would be doing an injustice to his country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman is the chairman of the Committee on Immigration. Does he have any information about the character and number of illegal entries coming into the port of New York?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. None at all. The only illegal entrances are along the borders.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman has not any special information about the matter?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, I have. There is no illegal entrance in Boston or New York or any other regular immigration port. Our trouble is with the back door.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman does not think there is a lot of illegal entries of a lot of special groups?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; and I can give the gentleman proof.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has the gentleman any specific information in reference to illegal entries? If so, why not deport them? That is what should be done with them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, I have so much information, including information from Father Coughlin, that 50,000 Spaniards were smuggled across the border. But I have no means to check that. We have no appropriation to do it. I sent some of the information over to the Department of Justice and some of it to the Department of Labor, but the crux of the whole argument is, Why should not the committee of this Congress that is responsible for this legislation have the first power to go and make a study and check up as to who are the liars and who are not? But you will not give us that chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to get along as quickly as I can.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York, in round figures, the Congress increased the appropriation for F. B. I. $2,600,000 during the present session. This was to meet emergencies. Surely if aliens are entering this country illegally it is the duty of this organization to take those in custody who are violating our immigration laws. They do not have to have any specific authorization to do so. I am sure Mr. Hoover will welcome any information the gentleman from New York or any other Member has. The F. B. I. is charged with certain responsibilities. Surely a congressional committee could not do the job of apprehending those who violate our laws. All this committee would do would be to get information. Why not give the leads to Mr. Hoover and let him make an investigation?

The gentleman from Arizona will be welcomed by Mr. Hoover. If our laws are such as to allow farm labor to enter this country for seasonal work, then why not bring in a bill putting a stop to such a practice. I will vote for it, and it will pass with few, if any, dissenting votes. Nothing should be left undone to save all the available jobs for American labor.

It was said aliens from the countries at war will flood our borders after the war. We can stop that, and we should stop it. Further restriction of immigrants should be our goal rather than letting down the bars. Let the Committee on Immigration, of which the gentleman from New York is chairman, first bring in the necessary legislation to meet some of the evils complained of or conditions that might face us in the future and then speak of investigations after those laws are passed. I would also suggest to the gentleman from New York to start an investigation now under the rules, as his committee has the power. Get testimony from the Government departments, and then if it is developed he has a case, press the resolution for a general investigation. Above all, I say to the gentleman from New York, as well as any other Member who has information of violations of our immigration laws, give it to the F. B. I. and that organization will apprehend the guilty.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I say to my friend that I have the highest regard for the F. B. I., and particular for the Director of that Bureau, Mr. Hoover. They are a great body of men, they have been doing a good job. I was sorry to see them criticized last week in the press, and in other statements made in this Capitol, but what I want is action. I want to go down to the root of the matter. The Committee on Immigration knows where to go. I do not want them to assign the hundreds of matters and complaints to hundreds of agents, and then wait for a report for months and months. The committee can go right in and furthermore, the Department of Justice has no power to subpena and the gentleman has forgotten that. The gentleman raised the same question with me in the matter of the Dies committee. He must remember that.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Department of Justice agents have the power to arrest, and they will go any place, if the gentleman from New York will only tell them where to go, if he will give them the information he says he has. That is what the organization is for.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have given the gentleman my best judgment and my honest belief and he can take it or leave it.

Mr. Chairman, my attention has been directed to the proposal of the 1941 Budget to lower certain funds for field administration of the Immigration and Naturalization Service below the 1940 appropriation levels. The net decrease proposed is $281,310, arrived at by cutting $154,310 off the field-salary item for immigrant inspectors, border-patrol inspectors, and other personnel in the field, also decreasing general field expenses by $140,000, and adding $13,000 for repairing immigration stations.

I am particularly concerned at the proposal to reduce the field-salary item by some $154,000, because the breakdown in the Budget shows a consequent loss of 96 inspectional positions to the present total authorized strength of 1,736 immigrant inspectors and border-patrol inspectors; in other words, the Budget, 1941, proposes to cut the inspectional strength, the enforcement arm of the Service, between 5 and 6 percent below present authorization.

I have heard no reason advanced to justify the proposal to so impair immigration enforcement in the field service, and indeed I can conceive of none. My reaction to this particular Budget estimate is that instead of proposing a small saving, the proposition actually is that we take a substantial loss within a year or two or three, when the resulting impairment of immigration enforcement will become apparent and when we shall be afflicted with an aggravated deportation problem. We should regard any proposition to cut field immigration funds as meaning an increased number of illegally entered aliens, increased smuggling activities from nearby territories, increased burdens on our jails and almshouses, and, I hardly need say, on our taxpayers.

Those of us who are in touch with immigration control realize full well that with conditions in Europe as they now are and the consequent pressure on our immigration quotas, and with alien subversive groups already here but inspired from abroad in their un-American activities, the present would be about the worst time in our history to effect petty immediate savings by curtailing our immigration field inspectional force. I speak advisedly when I say to this House that we should hesitate to encourage immigration law violators, and I mean both the aliens themselves and their smugglers, by even suggesting that there is now being considered this proposal in the Budget to deplete our force of immigrant and border-patrol inspectors. In my committee work I have come to see a very close relation between vigorous field inspectional activities and suppressed immigration-law violations. I have come to see that in just about the measure we supply our field force with inspectors and funds we demonstrate our control of the so-called alien problem. And I realize, too, that there is no economy in weakening immigration inspectional personnel now, only to have to increase the force later and supply increased funds for expenses attendant upon disposing of an accumulation of aliens who have taken advantage of us and gained unlawful entry.

Any way you look at the proposal to cut immigration inspectional strength it is poor business. It may be pennies saved now, but you may be assured that we shall have to spend dollars later to get us back anywhere even with the game. And all this is simply a cold-blooded way of looking at a most dangerous proposition from the point of view of dollars and cents. It takes no account of the more serious aspects of applying a penny-wise policy to immigration field activities. A fact we often overlook is that it is the least desirable, and the criminal classes of aliens who seek illegal means of entry, because they cannot qualify through regular inspection channels. For that situation, therefore, we are compelled at all times to maintain a well-organized border patrol, to operate at points removed from regular designated ports of entry, and to apprehend and deflect into regular inspection channels those particularly undesirable aliens that seek to evade regular inspection.

It is axiomatic that laws will not enforce themselves. We have gone on passing more and more immigration statutes for the past half century, imposing greater and greater burdens of administration, with comparatively little increase in the official force that must be relied on to make these many statutes effective. The time has come for Congress to recognize that immigration control is an essential service of the Government, than which no law-enforcement activity of this Government is more important in its bearing on the moral and physical well-being of the American public. Regulation of aliens either entering the United States or already here is of the highest import to our employment conditions, our social conditions, and, I may add, to our political conditions. Any proposal to weaken the field arm of immigration enforcement is of the same order of merit as a proposal to withdraw police protection from a given community. It is one of those things that we cannot afford to do.

I have said that no reason has been advanced for proposing to curtail immigration field activities and I have indicated my opinion that the only explanation of this proposal is a sense of false economy in the minds of our budgetary authorities. There are, however, plenty of reasons aside from those I have stated why a cut in immigration inspection personnel is not justified. There is nothing to indicate any lessened need for immigration enforcement at this time. The opposite is true, as we find in the most recent annual report of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, for the year ending June 30, 1939, in which the Commissioner emphasizes "the immense volume of inspection work" required of the Service, added enforcement burdens, increased number of ports of entry requiring 24-hour inspection, "shortage of regular immigrant inspectors at ports of entry," an already inadequate border patrol force, the necessity constantly arising for detailing border-patrol inspectors away from their patrol duties to perform immigrant-inspector duties at ports of entry, the pressing need of strengthening the patrol force because of present European conditions, and greatly increased registry and naturalization work.

The Commissioner's annual report does not mention the increased number of immigrant inspectors and border-patrol inspectors that his Service requires to properly staff the ports of entry and international border points so that the Service may be able to cope with the very situations described in his annual report. Perhaps budgetary restrictions prevent setting forth needs of increased personnel, but however that may be, we know that a year ago when the 1940 Budget was in the course of preparation, the various field immigration district heads did make known their respective needs for approximately 500 additional officers, mostly immigrant inspectors and border-patrol inspectors. It is a rather sad commentary to note that the 1940 appropriation provided for exactly 11 additions to the inspection force. In the light of this experience, it is probable that immigration district heads have been discouraged from reporting their present needs for added inspectional personnel, but from various sources of information I learn that conditions are at least as bad as they were a year ago, and I am impelled to the conclusion that Congress should now determine for itself just what measure of immigration law enforcement it desires, and rather than entertain proposals to cut the existing Service activities, should consider how the Service may be restored to proper law-enforcement capabilities.

Further analysis of the 1941 Budget shows that the field salary item appropriated for 1940 is in the amount of $8,133,420, which figure includes $233,000 provided by the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act for the employment of temporary help to overcome an arrearage in naturalization activity. I note that the 1941 Budget estimates for the next fiscal year for the field-salary item the amount of $7,979,110 and continues in this figure the $233,000 for temporary employees to overcome naturalization arrearage. Most Members in this House are undoubtedly aware of the present attendant delay in naturalization process throughout the country and would like to see that process expedited so far as the law permits, but in spite of our very natural feelings on that subject we should not lose sight of the fact that delay in the naturalization process is at most an inconvenience to aliens already legally here, whereas weakened inspectional strength by any reduction of the force of immigrant inspectors and border-patrol inspectors will throw upon our hands an increased number of illegal alien entrants and open up a field of increased immigration law violations. I submit, too, that it is a most incongruous situation to continue an amount of $233,000 for the employment of temporary help in naturalization work in the Service field activities and at the same time propose to cut the permanent field establishment of the Service by a similar sum.

I am constantly being reminded of the country-wide interest in the subject of adequate, efficient immigration enforcement, and I am in receipt of resolutions and petitions of the following character:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
RAYMOND C. PAUL POST, No. 880,
Galveston, Tex., February 28, 1940.

The Honorable SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Representative from New York, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find a resolution as adopted by Post 880, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of Texas, at their regular meeting held here in Galveston Monday, February 26, 1940, and is self-explanatory.

We, as representative citizens and war veterans, are very much opposed to any and all reductions contemplated for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, in fact, it is our honest opinion that the appropriation for said service should be increased by the amount it is proposed to decrease same, in order to place more inspectors and guards along our borders and shore lines.

Respectfully yours,

M. H. GOSWICK,
Post Commander.

Whereas we have been reliably informed that there is a proposed reduction of appropriation by the House Subcommittee in Charge of Labor Department Appropriations for the Immigration and Naturalization Service; and

Whereas this decrease in appropriation will affect no less than 96 immigrant and patrol inspectors in the field and 27 junior-clerk positions; and

Whereas the proposed reductions in appropriation for salaries of immigrant inspectors and other employees in the field mean unemployment for many of them, unless absorbed by other departments;

Whereas the positions to be vacated are now held by many war veterans and other former service men; and

Whereas the recent passage of the deportation bill by the Senate increased the duties of an already overburdened Immigration and Naturalization Service; and

Whereas strict enforcement of such legislation is particularly important at this time, in view of the international situation created by the war abroad; and

Whereas with the conclusion of the war abroad, there will be a great exodus of aliens for our shores and borders, with many of them seeking their entry illegally: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Raymond C. Paul Post 880, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, in regular meeting at Galveston, Tex., this 26th day of February 1940, respectfully request that the subcommittee in charge of the Labor Department appropriations will make a careful study of the facts presented by the above resolution, before reducing the appropriation for this wonderful service, which is charged with one of the most important duties of our Government and which receives but little public acclaim.

That a copy of this resolution to be attached to and made part of the minutes of this meeting.

M. H. GOSWICK,
Post Commander.

Adjutant.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] 5 minutes.

A MAUSOLEUM FOR BOOKS OR A SERVICE STATION, WHICH?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I am especially interested in the appropriation contained in this bill for the Library of Congress. As a school superintendent for 30 years, I have had direct contact with school libraries, public libraries, and college libraries. I know, therefore, something about libraries at first hand.

From my contact with libraries I have learned that many are simply depositories for books, mausoleums for books, while others are service stations where a person may go to get necessary information. Some library staffs limit their activities to the proper checking in and checking out of books, while other library staffs are sources of information and helpfulness that assist people to discover and use the information that the library walls enclose.

During my time in Congress I have had occasion to gather data, information, statistics, on various subjects to be used as material for speeches. I am fortunate in having a young man in my office that has used libraries extensively, knows the technique of library use, and is also acquainted with the set-up and the staff of the Congressional Library. He has done my library work for me since I came to Washington.

Our Congressional Library is one of the best equipped libraries in the world, but it is not the best staffed. There is plenty of room for improving the personnel of the library staff.

The new library head has visions of making the library a real service station, and he is asking for the funds necessary to do this.

When some of you men first came to Congress you had neither an office nor a secretary. Then you were given an office and one secretary. Later on, because the people began to consider a Congressman's office a service station, you were allowed two secretaries. Now with so many Government bureaus and departments, and the constantly increasing demand for service from back home, you are allowed three secretaries to help you give the service that is expected and demanded of you.

In the same way if the Congressional Library is to be utilized completely, if it is to give the service expected of it, then we must provide the required staff to increase its usefulness, so that the enormous investment in that institution can pay the dividends that it should be paying to the public and to the people on the Hill. ur vote, as I see it, upon the request for increased funds for the operation of the Congressional Library will indicate whether we want the Congressional Library to be a mausoleum for books, or whether we want it to become a live up-to-date, well-staffed service station. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, it had been my purpose to offer an amendment to this bill on page 28, line 3, where you will find the item of $350,000 for the purpose of repairing the terrace of this building on the west. After consulting with the leaders of this committee, I have decided not to offer that amendment for the reason that I have been informed it would be impossible to stop the serious damage and leaks on that side of the Capitol without this expenditure. Years ago when leaks developed on that side of the building the Architect of the Capitol was able to stop those leaks with an expenditure of approximately $60,000. I am informed that so much damage has been done to that side of the building since that time that it is now absolutely necessary to make the entire repairs as explained to the committee by the Architect, and that it will require the full expenditure asked in this bill.

I also withhold that amendment because I am assured the Architect and those who are to do this work will not install windows on that side of the Capitol where there are no windows at this time, and that no other construction will be made there which in any way will erase any valuable architecture, or in any way deface the historic construction of the building. My original opposition to this item was because of my original opposition to the bill which is introduced in Congress every year, which has as its objective the changing of the front of the United States Capitol. I call your attention to the fact that this bill is before Congress nearly every year, and that there is a determined movement on foot to change the front of the Capitol by moving the center portion of the Capitol forward, eastward, to conform with the House and Senate wings. I opposed that because I fear that considerable historical architecture will be destroyed and eliminated, architecture which is valuable and which should be preserved for the present generation and generations to follow. For that reason I took some exception to some of the reconstruction work which was to be done on the west side of the Capitol, fearing that perhaps when they got to constructing and reconstructing this historic building on the west side, there might be some danger that they would destroy some valuable architecture, that they might in some way deface our Nation's Capitol; that they might eliminate something which you and I see today, something which was built by our forefathers, which is a part of the historical portions of this structure, which you and I should always be zealous in protecting for the present and future generations of our people.

For that reason I want my objection to be recorded here against anything which may in any way deface this historic building. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, we notice a great deal of discussion in the press, over the radio, and elsewhere with reference to a third term for the President of the United States. I shall therefore read a very pertinent editorial from the Wausau (Wis.) Record-Herald on this highly important question, as follows:

THE BOSSES TURN "THIRD-TERMITES"

Call the roll of the really important political machines in American politics and it will be seen that all the Democratic ones—so far as cursory observation goes—are on record for a third term for Roosevelt.

Strange! Boss Hague, Boss Kelly, Boss Maestri, Boss Crump—they never have had much reputation as reformers. They never were known to have a great urge to "make America over." They have always played the idea that American life was already plenty abundant to suit them. Why this sudden passion for reform, experiment, and the New Deal?

Maybe the example of Boss Pendergast has something to do with it. The Kansas City boss fell foul of the New Deal and he went to jail. His machine crumpled up at the recent election. Boss Pendergast is all washed up. And there have been Federal grand juries in towns here and there, such as New Orleans, where Maestri's dominion lies—but no indictments as yet. Maestri's organization is for a third term. Maybe there won't be any indictments after all.

Pinko New Dealers have been extremely unkind in their criticism of Jersey City's reactionary boss, Mayor Hague, which makes it all the stranger that he should be so strong for continuation of the New Deal. And Boss GUFFEY is positively tearful about a third term, seeing as Pennsylvania has elections this year and he's up for reelection.

The explanation of this curious congeries of political bedfellows is, of course, plain enough. Roosevelt believes in spending, and spending public money is the specialty of the bosses. If Mr. Roosevelt doesn't run again, or at least if the New Deal isn't continued, the bosses won't have a Federal trough to feed at.

Third termites, almost to a man, are the lads who are on the pay roll, directly or indirectly. A third term for Roosevelt means 4 years more in the money. If it doesn't happen, the boys have a reasonable expectation of getting the ax.

What's a 150-year-old tradition founded by Washington and Jefferson, and respected ever since, between such friends as the bosses and the pay roll?

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD].

Mr. MCLEOD. Mr. Chairman, a clear indication that the Government's business is of no concern of the people is pointed out in the reply I received from the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency in response to my inquiry for information, desired not by myself alone but by a committee of this Congress. Mr. Upham, in point of fact, says that the people are not entitled to information or an explanation as to what is being done with their money. This is just another example of insolence on the part of a branch of this dominant bureaucracy and maladministration of our Government.

The controversy in question is based first on a statement made by the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency before the Treasury Post Office Subcommittee during its hearings in December 1939. After I had sought for nearly a month to obtain a detailed statement of fees involved in the largest bank receivership in the country's history, the Comptroller of the Currency has refused to make known to a committee of Congress details of the cost of the receivership of the First National Bank, of Detroit, Michigan, on the grounds that to do so "might only confuse the public mind and hinder the work of the receivership."

I requested the information as a member of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee handling Treasury budgets. My original request, early in February, followed testimony before the committee that legal fees alone totaled $922,000 to September 30, 1939.

In order that the situation may be thoroughly understood by the Congress, let me state that on February 14 I wrote the following letter to the Comptroller of the Currency:

FEBRUARY 14, 1940.

Hon. PRESTON DELANO,
Comptroller of the Currency,
United States Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DELANO: It has come to my attention that statements recently made to the Treasury Appropriations Subcommittee, of which I am a member, regarding the receivership of the First National Bank, Detroit, were not in accordance with the facts.

Therefore, I will appreciate it if you will provide me, as a member of this subcommittee, with a detailed statement of the cost of this receivership for each of its 7 years; and that such statement list the names and amounts of payments made to attorneys for fees and all other legal costs incurred by this receivership.

Trusting that I may have an early reply, I remain.

Very sincerely yours,

CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
Member of Congress.

I want you to keep that letter in mind for just a few moments, because the question I asked is contained therein. The Comptroller's reply to this letter, dated February 23, reads as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, February 23, 1940.

Hon. CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCLEOD: Reference is made to your letter of February 14, 1940, wherein you advise that certain statements recently made to the Treasury Appropriations Subcommittee, of which you are a member, regarding the receivership of the First National Bank, Detroit, were not in accordance with the facts.

We have very carefully reviewed the report of the committee hearing and do not find that any statements made by us at the hearing were not in accordance with the facts, and feel that your informant, who called the statements in question to your attention, must have been mistaken concerning them. We are, of course, desirous of correcting any erroneous impression which may have been given as the result of any of the statements made, and, consequently, we will appreciate it very much if you will advise us more specifically concerning the particular statements to which your informant may have referred. If, as indicated by your letter, the statements had reference to expense of liquidation, we may advise that annual reports submitted to Congress by the Comptroller of the Currency disclose that the cost of liquidation of this receivership has been substantially less than the average cost of liquidation of all national-bank receiverships. In this connection it may be pointed out that the Comptroller's published annual report to Congress for the year ended October 31, 1938, indicates the average cost of liquidation of all national-bank receiverships to such date as 6.08 percent of total collections, whereas the comparable cost of liquidation of the First National Bank, Detroit, receivership is found to have been but 4.18 percent. Such percentage of total costs of liquidation of the First National Bank, Detroit, receivership will, however, be reduced to 2.54 percent if amounts of interest paid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are excluded from total liquidation costs. Total legal expense of this receivership, including court costs, services of attorneys, and other costs incident to litigation paid as of October 31, 1938, is found to have amounted to less than one-fifth of 1 percent of total collections, and only 7.3 percent of total costs of liquidation, exclusive of interest, paid the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We shall be glad to hear from you further concerning this matter.

Very truly yours,

C. B. UPHAM, Deputy Comptroller.

I read from my letter of February 28, my second identical request of the Comptroller:

FEBRUARY 28, 1940.

Mr. C. B. UPHAM,
Deputy Comptroller of the Currency,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. UPHAM: I have your letter of February 23 which is in reply to my letter of February 14 addressed to Mr. Delano, Comptroller of the Currency.

While your letter contains general information, if you will refer to the second paragraph of my letter of February 14, you will note that I asked for specific information. Therefore, I again request that you provide me with a detailed statement of cost of this receivership for each of its 7 years, and that such statement list the names and payments made to attorneys for this receivership and all other legal charges.

Assuring you that I will appreciate your cooperation, I remain

Very sincerely yours,

CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
Member of Congress.

You will note that I asked for "specific information" in both of these letters, that my second letter repeated the same request. The day before yesterday I finally received a reply to mine of February 28, excerpts of which I will quote in a moment.

Twice I asked the same question, for him to state the specific amount of the cost of the receivership, specifically to name the amount of fees paid attorneys and the names of the attorneys so paid. That was my only question, and now from his letter I quote:

In the present letter you drop that matter entirely and request new information which was not among the questions asked by the members of the subcommittee.

I must take a more serious view of the situation thus created. It was I who undertook to answer the queries of the subcommittee and the answers which you alleged to be false in a letter to the Comptroller were mine. While I do not say that an error might not have occurred. I do wish you and the other members of the subcommittee to know that I desire to correct any misstatement of facts contained in my answers. I repeat, as emphatically as I am able, that in justice to the office which I represent and in fairness to the Comptroller, who relied upon me in this matter, I am entitled to a more particular recital of the information then given which you believe to be wrong.

I ask you, gentlemen of the House, if the request I submitted in both these letters was not clear.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Has the gentleman a copy of the hearings wherein the questions were asked?

Mr. McLEOD. They are in the Treasury hearings, and the hearings are available to all Members.

Mr. RABAUT. Has the gentleman a copy with him?

Mr. McLEOD. They are here.

Mr. RABAUT. Are they not the questions that were asked in the hearings?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. Are not they the things in question?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. Why does not the gentleman present the questions asked in the hearings to substantiate the whole matter? Did the gentleman hear my question?

Mr. McLEOD. I am talking about the question I asked in my letters.

Mr. RABAUT. They are all set out in the hearings, I take it.

Mr. McLEOD. I asked a certain specific question in my letter, if the gentleman would only pay attention to what I am getting at.

Mr. RABAUT. I am paying attention.

Mr. McLEOD. I am going to cite the questions that were asked in the hearings; they will all come out. If the gentleman would just pay attention to what I am saying, it would all be clear.

The next paragraph of this letter states:

In this letter you renew your request for a detailed statement of the cost of the receivership of the First National Bank, Detroit, for each of its 7 years, which shall include the names of attorneys representing the receiver and the payments made to them.

He admits now that I am repeating my original request.

This is not the first time such a request has been made. We presume that the size of this receivership and the very large amounts involved have generated a great deal of curiosity in the minds of many people. In fact one prominent member of the Detroit bar recently brought an action in court to compel the Comptroller to furnish this and other similar information and to bring about a situation whereby he might acquire the privilege of review of future expenses before payment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 8 additional minutes.

Mr. McLEOD. The letter goes on to say:

Whether such procedure would promote efficient and impartial liquidation I must leave you to judge; but in attempting to furnish information piecemeal and without relating it to the whole receivership we might only confuse the public mind and hinder the work of the receiver, on whom scores of thousands are depending for the return of their deposits. What is meant can be easily made clear by a few examples.

The pay roll of the hundreds of employees runs into a sizeable figure. The figure, viewed alone, might be made to seem exorbitant; but you will realize, I am sure, that no responsible person would hazard an opinion upon it without a knowledge of the work to be done, the quality of the organization of the clerical staff, the amount of special knowledge or training necessary, and the level of wages in the community. The salary paid to the receiver, viewed by itself, will convey differing impressions to those who may hear of it, depending upon their own experience in such matters, but you will realize that intelligent comment must include a knowledge of the requirements of the position. The question of legal expense is peculiarly of this nature. A statement made on legal-fee bills during the course of a receivership must necessarily be inadequate, since the total is never known until the trust is finally closed.

That is the only answer the Comptroller makes regarding legal fees. Up to the present time, according to the receiver's figure, the legal fees are just under $1,000,000. The information I received stated there will be further legal fees due.

Moreover, the bald statement of fees paid over a period of time for widely diversified services, or for a single service, is meaningless in itself. A similar comment might be made upon any feature of the receivership viewed without relation to the entire problem.

The receivership of the First National Bank, Detroit, represents the greatest task of bank liquidation ever undertaken in this country.

We will concede that.

At this time over 175,000 persons are interested in its outcome. The liquidation of $468,000,000 of bank assets is a project reaching into every State and affecting persons in every walk of life.

That is why this is a matter of national concern.

Almost every type of property must be converted to cash; many thousands of unwilling debtors and shareholders must be forced to pay, and exact justice must be done among the creditors in making distribution. The efficient management of this liquidation is of major importance, not only to Detroit but to the entire State of Michigan, and this office has at all times endeavored to meet its responsibilities to Congress and to maintain a clear sense of trusteeship. The receivership, in its key positions, has been manned by trained and experienced men, and capable and impartial counsel has been employed. Our success or failure in performing our duties will be evident in the results, and we must presume that Congress intends that we have some freedom of action if the responsibility is upon our shoulders. The general information given you in our letter of February 23 will afford you some yardstick by which to measure the administrative expenses incurred at this receivership. A copy of the latest published statement of condition of the receivership is enclosed for your information.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot recall a time when a committee of Congress has been refused information of this kind or nature. Every depositor of this large bank must be asking the question today: If the bank is now solvent after $20,000,000 has been milked from its assets to run this receivership, why was it not allowed to reopen years ago?

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is chairman of this subcommittee, and I am going to ask him to direct a letter to the Comptroller or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is very much interested in this situation. Perhaps he, as chairman of this committee, can get the definite figures that I believe the people of Detroit and Michigan are entitled to, because it is their money that is paying for this receivership which seems to be ever-continuous. There are no signs of closing the receivership. As I understand, it is one of the few remaining important banks held in receivership since the bank holiday of more than 7 years ago.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. To refer to the Treasury Department hearings, it appears on page 274, that the total expenditure for attorneys' fees to September 30, 1939, was $922,373.13. On page 276 of the hearings it appears that the expenditures for attorneys' fees up to the end of the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1939, was $741,000—a difference of $181,000 which must have been spent in the 3 months from July 1, 1939, to September 30, 1939.

On page 273 of the hearings, it appears that the total annual salary rate of all attorneys as of June 30, 1939, was $18,120 and they were spending $181,000 in 3 months. These two stories do not go together. In other words, in accordance with their own testimony they appear to have spent 10 times as much in 3 months as they told us they were going to spend in a whole year.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman is correct. The specific liquidation charge, which is supposed to include attorneys' fees, was more than $11,728,121 as of December 31, 1939. If it is a fact, and the information is correct, that there are bills still to be rendered for attorneys' fees against this bank in question, I think specific information, when requested, should be given to a committee of Congress with reference to what is actually going on.

I know the people of Detroit are anxious to know how much of the $922,000 that was paid for attorneys' fees was paid to Robert S. Marx and Frank E. Wood, Cincinnati lawyers, to look after the liquidation of Detroit's biggest bank.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, rural electrification is a glowing example of humanized democracy. It is lifting the burden of toil off the backs of farmers and their wives. It is harnessed electricity made to serve man. It has banished gloom and despair and lighted up the halls of farm homes with joy and comfort. It has brought to rural life comforts, conveniences, and economies which were heretofore enjoyed only by city dwellers, and is rapidly causing the drift of people from cities to farms rather than from farms to cities. Rural electrification was in fact made possible through establishment of the Tennessee Valley Authority about 6 years ago. It was my happy privilege to preside over the House of Representatives the day the T. V. A. was created and also to vote for this measure.

Prior to the creation of the T. V. A. there were comparatively few farms in the country which had rural electrification. Occasionally a prosperous farmer had been able to install his own small Delco outfit, but electrical power was a high luxury and not to be even dreamed of by the average farmer. We will take, for instance, the charges made by the Mississippi Power Co., which is near the T. V. A., which charges were for 1,400 kilowatt-hours under the old rate, and compare them with the T. V. A. rate of 7½ mills a kilowatt-hour of today.

Residential rates

	Mississippi Power Co. rates, 1932	Present Tennessee Valley Authority rates
First 30 kilowatt-hours a month	$3.00	$0.90
Next 170 kilowatt-hours a month	13.60	3.60
Next 300 kilowatt-hours a month	21.00	2.40
Next 350 kilowatt-hours a month	21.00	1.40
Next 550 kilowatt-hours a month	27.50	2.20
Total (1,400 kilowatt-hours a month)	86.10	10.50

You will see that the old rate charged by the power company was 5 cents a kilowatt-hour, as compared to 7½ mills under the T. V. A. rate. The T. V. A. opened up to the American people the possibility and practicability of rural electrification and the feasibility of the Government participating in this great enterprise. During the last 5 years the Federal Government has made loans available for R. E. A. purposes in the amount of about $250,000,000. This fund has carried electrical current to some 2,000,000 farm families, or approximately 25 percent of all farms in our country. The R. E. A. has constructed about 200,000 miles of line and the number of patrons on these miles is rapidly increasing as the farm families understand and appreciate more the luxury and the comfort of having electrical current.

In Florida we have a cosmosplitan citizenship with diversified interests. On this account we have not realized as great benefits from R. E. A. as we should have. Our State has not taken advantage of rural electrification in the same proportion as some other States have. However, Florida has received from the R. E. A. $1,834,000, which has been used in the construction of 2,002 miles to serve 5,264 families. We have extension applications now pending and it is expected that they will receive allotments in due course of time. We also have additional new projects which are in the process of preparation and development.

One of the about twenty R. E. A. generating plants in the country is located in the Second Congressional District within 10 miles of Starke, my home town. It was necessary for the farmers to get money from the Government to build this plant because the local power companies did not cooperate for cheap wholesale prices for electric current. This plant stands out as a service monument to the present Democratic administration. The R. E. A. thought enough of this marvelous establishment to give special mention to it in the 1939 annual report. It is a modern, up-to-date Diesel-motor generating plant. From this plant service goes out to consumers in 6 to 8 counties. The rapid increase in patrons will in all probability in the near future require plant enlargement. Last fall this modern farm-owned electric plant was dedicated with a public barbecue and the gathering of thousands of people from many counties.

In the Suwannee River Valley, the Suwannee Valley Electric Association has recently opened up 151 miles and is serving 300 to 400 patrons. Of the 15 rural counties in my congressional district, 10 or 11 have rural electrification. I shall not cease my efforts until electrical current is offered to every farm desiring it within my district. No other agency of the Government is carrying real benefit to farmers comparable with rural electrification.

There are some 16,000 farmers' electrical cooperatives in the United States which with Federal funds have constructed enough power lines to reach around the earth 3 times. This service should and will continue as an economic measure until practically all farms in the United States have been given electrical current. The older countries of the world have long realized the economy and benefit of having electrical current on farms. In France and Germany 90 percent of the farm homes have electricity. Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, and other old nations of Europe, have electrical current supplied to more than 90 percent of the farms. Conservation and economy have taught these older nations that rural electrification is not only a comfort but is also a business asset to any farm.

In many homes—in fact, in the majority of them—in the Tennessee Valley area, where current can be produced cheaply, they are using electricity even for heating purposes. It has been found in these places that electricity for heating the entire house costs less than wood or coal. For instance, here is the story of one Mississippi home in the T. V. A. area: 37 lights in the house, together with electric iron, refrigerator, range cooking stove, grill, three fans, vacuum cleaner, waffle iron, and six electric heating units—heaters. During the month of January, which is the coldest month, this home used 1,036 kilowatt-hours of electricity, which cost $9.04. Another housewife in this same area, without home heating appliances, in the month of March used lights in her home and garage, a radio, electric refrigerator, electric iron, electric cooking stove, a vacuum cleaner, a hot-water heater—82 kilowatt-hours of electricity, which cost $2.14 for the month. March is a comparatively cold month in that area. Of course, the rate is cheaper in the T. V. A. area than we can immediately expect in areas with less production and less consumption. In other words, they have the hydroelectric dams constructed there and the 7½ mills per kilowatt-hour is quite reasonable; however, this 7½ mills per kilowatt-hour, it has been figured, takes into consideration and provides for the retirement of the cost of building lines and also the amortization of the cost of dam construction.

There are hundreds of watersheds throughout the United States which are capable of developing and producing enormous quantities of electrical current. The Congress now has under consideration legislation which would utilize, by and for the Government, the water-power possibilities of these various streams. The power possibilities of these streams is Nature's gift to the American people. It is a crying shame for this potential power to go to waste in the oceans adjacent to our country for the lack of dams and machinery to harness it. In my own district we have one or more streams capable of the development of considerable water power; of course, not the volume as generated on the Tennessee and Columbia Rivers, but of adequate possibilities to take care of every farm in the State of Florida. Among these rivers is the historic and majestic Suwannee River. The Army engineers, by act of Congress, are now making survey to determine the advisability of flood control and power development in the Suwannee River Valley. It is earnestly hoped by the citizens of their area that favorable findings will be recommended to the Congress for a hydroelectric dam on the Suwannee River to supply cheap hydroelectric current through R. E. A. to all of this adjoining area. This development would give power rates in comparison with those now enjoyed in the Tennessee Valley area. Until this is accomplished we may confidently expect expansion in all parts of the district of rural-electrification current from the existing Diesel-engine power plant at Keystone Heights and of power from power-company lines at wholesale rates.

I remember very well farm homes in my district before our farmers had rural electrification. I have seen the housewife go about the drudgery and duties of her home in all of its toil and physical pain. On washday, for instance, she must draw the water with a hand pole or long chain with a big bucket, carry it several yards to a big black pot and large tubs, or the big, long old-time washing trough, rub and scrub the family clothes for 2 or 3 hours, then place them on the end of the trough or on a block and take a stick weighing several pounds and beat them until the buttons fly off; then throw them in the old black pot with a tarry fire blazing up around it on a hot summer day, stir them, push them down until they are bleached; then, by hand, take the scalding garments from the pot, rinse and rinse and rinse them, and hang them up to dry, then from 12 until 1 o'clock, while she is resting, she must cook a big dinner on a red-hot stove for a large family, clean up the little children, and feed them; then, in a steaming-hot kitchen, wash up the dishes; then go to finish the washing, or scrub, by hand, the kitchen floor. The next day—practically all day—with her irons before a blazing fire, shut up in a hot house, she irons and irons until the garments are pressed and ready for the use of the family. In the kitchen an ice box unknown. Things left over from the meal, also milk and eggs, spoil because it is too hot in the kitchen. The supper is cooked by a small kerosene lamp. After supper has been served, the small school children study their lessons by a pine-knot fire or a small smoke-shaded kerosene lamp.

I will not go into the details of the drudgery of the farmer himself in watering his stock, shelling his corn by hand, blundering around in the barn with no light, and various other necessary endeavors on a dark farm.

The picture is quite different now. In two to three thousand homes in my congressional district the washing machine, the electric iron, the electric fan, the Frigidaire, the electric light, the electric pump, the vacuum cleaner, and other devices have taken the drudgery off their tired and honest backs, while the radio has given them joy and comfort in living. The trend now is not from the farm home to the city for these comforts and luxuries, but is from the city back to the farm to enjoy more of Nature's blessings and invention's comforts. The farmers of my district are living in the dawn of a new day of farm enjoyment and comfort.

On February 2, 1940, the Suwannee Democrat, edited by Hon. Charles Helfenstein, a Harvard man, which is one of the best weekly newspapers in the United States, had the following to say:

FARM HOMES GET ELECTRIC POWER AS R. E. A. ENERGIZES—FIRST SECTION COOPERATIVE COMPLETED—OTHER SECTIONS AS HOMES ARE WIRED

Electric lights burned in many Suwannee County farm homes last night as the local electric cooperative began energizing its lines in this and Lafayette Counties. Thursday afternoon shortly after 2 o'clock electric power coursed through the high-tensioned lines of the Suwannee Valley Electric Cooperative Association to serve farm homes in the McAlpin, Pinemount, O'Brien, Beulah, and Central communities of this county.

Engineers of the Rural Electrification Administration were here to assist in and witness the cutting in of the cooperative lines to the hight-power lines which will provide the current. Approximately 70 homes in the areas mentioned are being serviced at present.

Plans for a rural-electrification line in this county were started nearly 3 years ago. With the assistance of Congressman R. A. GREEN, who has secured two of the four R. E. A. projects in Florida for his district, an appropriation was secured to construct the lines here.

The project manager of the Suwannee Valley Electric Association also recently conveyed the expressions of this association, as follows:

SUWANNEE VALLEY ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION, INC.
March 12, 1940.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
Member of Congress,
Starke, Fla.

DEAR SIR: I wish to take this opportunity of expressing my high regard for your effort toward the advancement of rural electrification in Florida. I sincerely believe I express the thoughts of the majority of, if not all, our cooperative members.

Your continued efforts in behalf of the wonderful program of "electricity on the farm" cannot help but be appreciated by the thousands of farmers throughout the State.

Very respectfully yours,

GEORGE CARVER,
Project Manager.

And to give a further picture of the appreciation and approval of rural electrification in my district I quote from a news story recently released by Mrs. Grace Warren, home demonstration agent of Alachua County, Fla., as follows:

ELECTRIC POWER BRINGS THRILL TO RURAL HOME FOLKS, STORY REVEALS

The thrill that rural people experience when electricity is turned on in their homes for the first time is well brought out in a story from Mrs. Grace Warren, Alachua County home-demonstration agent.

Mrs. Warren was making her regular round of visits to Alachua County rural homes when she dropped in to have a chat with a woman whose house had received electric power only a short time ago. With a great deal of enthusiasm, the woman said to the agent:

"We had our home wired for some time. It was Saturday afternoon, and then night came. There were no lights, even though we had the switch turned on.

"While my husband and I ate our supper by lamplight suddenly the whole house was lit up like day. We jumped from the table so excited we couldn't finish our supper, and we were having fresh backbone and rice, too. With my new percolator, waffle iron, and hot plate on the table where I can fix a meal without getting up, I honestly feel like I am in a new world. With my electric mixer I beat up a cake in the time I ordinarily would have taken to cream the butter.

"Now my husband and I feel that we can take time to do some of the things we've planned to do but never had time before."

New River, Bradford County, Fla., is the scene of my childhood days. This community had R. E. A. line extended through and from the farm-owned plant at Keystone Heights but owing to congestion of duties the management had been unable to get current turned on in this community. Last December, as the Christmas holidays approached, my boyhood friends and neighbors became anxious to have light during the holiday season. Through the special cooperation of the R. E. A. Administrator in Washington we were able to get the line energized on December 19. I read the following from the county agent of Bradford County, indicating their appreciation and cooperativeness:

STARKE, FLA., December 21, 1939.

Hon. R. A. (LEX) GREEN,
Starke, Fla.

DEAR LEX: On behalf of the 68 farmers who are members of the Clay Electric Cooperative of the Rural Electrification Administration on the New River extension, I wish to express the deepest appreciation for the aid you gave us in getting our New River line energized. The line was energized at 11 o'clock, Tuesday, December 19.

I visited about a dozen of the homes that night, and it was indeed a pleasure to see the enjoyment they received from the energization of the line. They are overjoyed at the prospects of lights for Christmas. They are indeed grateful to you for your cooperation in helping to get the line energized.

With the very best of holiday wishes, I am

Very truly yours,

T. K. MCCLANE, Jr.,
County Agent.

During this Christmas holiday, my heart was made to rejoice in knowing that I had been helpful to the men and women with whom I had been reared, in making them happy and in making their Christmas bright and joyous. Of all times of the year, the Christmas season is the one most worthy of joy and happiness, and, although this accomplishment is small in a way, it gives me more happiness than practically any other accomplishment of my life.

Rural Electrification Administration officials cooperate thoroughly with farmers desiring to borrow money for the establishment of R. E. A. service. The following is a statement from one of the R. E. A. officials:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, February 28, 1940.

The Honorable LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR LEX: I am enclosing an interesting tabulation of information about the Florida R. E. A. projects. I cannot help noticing the large number of areas in your district that have been served already by our projects. If anyone accuses us of favoritism, we shall, of course, have to explain that your great activity and interest in this project made you first on the scene.

You are represented, in part, in five out of our eight existing projects, and the first cooperative project developed in Florida was in your district. I understand that another project is now brewing in Baker County.

You are one of those Congressmen working with and instructing their constituents in such a manner that the Federal agencies are able to serve the people.

Yours very sincerely,

BOYD FISHER,
Special Assistant to the Administrator, in Charge of State Relations.

Now, my friends, I think you will agree with me that no other branch of the Government is really carrying to the farmers of our Nation equal joy, contentment, and comfort as that carried by the Rural Electrification Administration. The farmers of our Nation deserve so much and receive so little. My effort will go forth until rural electrification is offered to every farm home in the country.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have within only a very few minutes glanced through the report of the committee having the bill in charge. My excuse for speaking a few words at this time is that I am a member of the Committee on the Library. I wish to commend the action of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in making the very thorough study they have of the Library of Congress.

The name, Committee on the Library, is somewhat of a misnomer. It is a very honorable and interesting committee to serve on, but as a matter of fact, as far as I have been able to discover after several years of service on it, we have practically nothing to do with the Library itself. Of course, the fact that a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has to do with the appropriations is probably the reason that all the affairs of the Library are in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations.

It seems to me there could well be a change in the rule or a change in the procedure. The Committee on Appropriations is an extremely busy committee. While it devotes attention to these various functions of government, nevertheless it does seem to me that such a committee as the one of which I speak as having the honor of being a member of ought to have rather more to do with the actual management and carrying on of such a great institution as the Library of Congress.

This happens to be a changing time in the Library in that for some forty-odd years we have been fortunate in having the distinguished services of Dr. Herbert Putnam as Librarian. I recall when he came to Washington from Massachusetts. It was a great loss to our State to have him called to this wonderful position here in Washington. Dr. Putnam was a great factor in building up the present Library, and he fortunately has had the cooperation of Congress. There has never been a time, as far as I have known in my service here, that the Congress and the Librarian have not acted in harmony.

The Library of Congress, it seems to me, is one of the institutions where civil service should not be a determining factor in employment. Library work requires special training. To be a competent aid in a library you must have had special training, and that should be determinative rather than the function of a civil-service examination.

I am very glad to say that there has not been at any period under Dr. Putnam, as far as I have known, any political influence or any political effort made with him. If it was made, of course, it was unsuccessful. The Library has been marvelously conducted under him.

As I have said, this is a changing period in the Library in that we have a new Librarian. There was a good deal of surprise last summer when the President appointed Mr. Archibald MacLeish as Librarian, because the friends of Mr. MacLeish, I believe, would not have claimed he had any experience along the line of an actual librarian's work. However, he did bring to the position a splendid background of education and literary training. He is a distinguished author and a graduate of Yale University and other educational institutions. In the brief period he has been Librarian the changes which he seems to want to inaugurate will certainly add to the efficiency of the service rendered by the Library.

I note that on page 10 of the hearings appears this statement about the services of Mr. MacLeish:

> It is proper that the committee should frankly state its pleasure at the industrious and intelligent manner in which Mr. MacLeish has entered upon his duties. In the short time he has acquired an amazing intimacy with the functions of the Library and the details of its operation.

Certainly, in view of the study the Subcommittee on Appropriations made, that is a very high compliment for them to pay to Mr. MacLeish, and one richly deserved by him.

It has not been my privilege to have studied the Library in as much detail as I should have done, perhaps, nor to have made use of it as much as I should, but I do believe that there is a purpose and an intention on the part of Mr. MacLeish and his subordinates to cooperate with the Members of the Congress in aiding us in our work and in the research we ourselves do not have the time to do. By inquiring of the Library, we can secure anything within the facilities of the Library. I do commend to the committee and to the House a more extended knowledge of what a marvelous institution we have in the Library of Congress. I am quite certain that a great many Members of the House are not familiar with the details that go to make up this great Library and the opportunities it affords Members of Congress to familiarize themselves with the work the Library is undertaking, and to secure the aid so necessary in carrying on our work. Not only is it the intention of Mr. MacLeish to have that service perfected for us but, as we cooperate with our constituents, an interview with Mr. MacLeish or some of his assistants will show that the libraries throughout the country can have the benefit of the services of the Library of Congress, under proper restrictions.

The other day I visited the new Library of Congress Annex and was very much interested in going through that building to find that nearly 200 rooms are set apart for students who wish to come there and consult references in the Library and be by themselves. These are air-conditioned rooms, where the students can carry on their studies in quiet and silence.

Not only do I commend the Library service and the opportunity that Congress has to use this service, but I commend most particularly to your consideration the Librarian himself and his desire to cooperate with you in the use of his services and the services of those under him as well as the facilities of this world-famous Library.

May I add this one word, Mr. Chairman. I note there is quite a large addition to the appropriation. I believe it is highly justified. I am one of those looking for economy in government, but I do not believe we should begin economizing on the Library of Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, we have of late been apprised of the fact that there has been a composed peace between Russia and Finland.

I hope the proposed treaty between Finland and Russia is not just another scrap of paper. I hope it is not another Munich. The democracies of the world, through their blind appeasement program and failure to extend the necessary aid to Finland in her hour of need, have lost considerable ground against the onrush of godless totalitarianism. No matter what territory Russia may gain from Finland, it will never Russianize her. Finland has remained Finland throughout the centuries. She will rise again with pride and in the end be victorious. She has carved a niche in the hall of nations that stamps her as a people of courage and integrity. In the eyes of the world Finland is still the symbol of honesty and integrity; a Christian democracy whose people will never bow to communism in fact.

Friends of Finland should realize that continued aid is necessary so that this brave people may carry on in the interest of freedom. In fact, we should double our efforts in extending aid to her. I hope that my bill for the return of the interest on Finland's debt will be brought to the House floor and passed immediately. Courage and valor cannot be crushed. The people of Finland cannot be crushed. Their love of freedom, progress, and culture will march on, and it is our duty to continue help that she may rehabilitate herself after her valiant stand against overwhelming odds. She has gained a prominent place in the family of nations, where she will remain with pride. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, we are today considering the bill making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941. There are two items in this bill that I desire to call to the attention of the House, one of which is for telegraph and telephone services for Members of the House, amounting to $130,000. I am informed that about $100,000 of this is for the payment of telegraph tolls. In the Senate section of the bill there is a somewhat similar provision, and I am informed that about $100,000 is spent annually by the Senators in telegraph tolls, making a total telegraph bill of approximately $200,000 annually.

On October 17 of last year I introduced a bill in the House providing for an amendment of the statute that authorizes franking by the President, the Vice President, and the Members of the Congress. My proposed amendment to that statute reads as follows:

> A bill granting to the Vice President and Members of Congress the privilege of franking official correspondence not exceeding 1 ounce in weight by air mail
> Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes," approved April 28, 1904, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "Where such official mail matter or correspondence does not exceed 1 ounce in weight, such franking privilege shall include the use of the air mail."

I believe this bill is in the interest of economy. We have a very splendid air service covering all sections of our country. Even between here and my home on the Pacific coast, I can air-mail a letter and get an air-mail letter in reply almost as quickly as I can send out a night letter by telegraph and get a night letter in reply. My point is, that by the enactment of my bill Members will be encouraged to use the air mail, there will be less use of the telegraph franking privilege, and there will be savings amounting to thousands and thousands of dollars annually to the Government.

My bill was referred to the Post Office Department, and under date of March 7 of this year, Mr. Ambrose O'Connell, Acting Postmaster General—and I understand Mr. O'Connell is Second Assistant Postmaster General—wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reporting adversely on the measure, on the ground that it would be an additional cost. However, Mr. O'Connell, I am sure, did not take into consideration the savings that would be made by reason of substituting the air mail for the telegraph. I was not privileged to discuss this bill with him before he made his report, but I am going to do so in the hope that he may amend this letter that he has written to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I am sure he will agree with me that this bill will save money for the Government.

I believe this is a meritorious bill, and while it is true it would entail some additional cost and burden on the Post Office Department, there would be a decided saving, so far as the Treasury of the United States is concerned. After all, the money comes out of the same purse, and if we can save far more than we are spending, we should not hesitate to enact this bill into law.

The letter received from the Post Office Department, in reference to my bill, is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1940.

Hon. MILTON A. ROMJUE,
Chairman, Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. ROMJUE: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 19, 1940, requesting a report upon H. R. 7588, a bill granting to the Vice President and Members of Congress the privilege of franking official correspondence not exceeding 1 ounce in weight by air mail. This bill proposes to grant to the Vice President and Members of Congress the privilege of franking official correspondence not exceeding 1 ounce in weight by air mail.

Section 327 of title 39, United States Code, provides that the Vice President, Members and Members-elect of, Delegates and Delegates-elect to Congress, and the Resident Commissioners from Puerto Rico and the Philippines shall have the privilege of sending free through the mails, and under this frank, any mail matter to any Government official or to any person, correspondence not exceeding 4 ounces in weight, upon official or departmental business.

By authority of section 321 of title 39, United States Code, as amended, the departments and independent agencies of the Government use the mails under the penalty privilege without the payment of postage where such use is exclusively on official business. If the present law were amended to grant the use of air mail without the payment of postage by the Vice President and Members of Congress, there would be, perhaps, quite a substantial number of requests at once for extending the penalty privilege to the departments and independent agencies of the Government in the use of the air mail. Many governmental departments have been urging the granting of this privilege for a considerable length of time.

When the air mail was originally established there was in mind the fostering of aviation, and it was recognized that to promote aviation through the establishment of air-mail service, a subsidy must be allowed. The postage on an ordinary letter for nonlocal delivery is 3 cents, while the postage for air mail is 6 cents. Authority for the use of air mail by Members of Congress and governmental departments would no doubt result immediately in applications for higher mail-carriage rates to carriers and agitate a demand for the reduction of the air-mail postage.

The Department does not feel that this privilege should be extended until such time as the revenues from the air-mail service approximate the cost for this service. No doubt, when that time comes, or when it can be shown that the air-mail service is operated at a profit, consideration can be given to what is proposed in this bill, as well as to a reduction in the rate for air mail.

Any appreciable increase in the volume of mail carried by the air lines would be likely to result in increased pay allowances to the carriers by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The revenues derived from the air-mail postage, the revenues derived by the carriers through express and passenger traffic, and the volume of mail all have a bearing upon the rates fixed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the carriers.

In view of the foregoing, the Department does not believe that favorable consideration should be given to a bill of this character at this time.

It has been ascertained from the Bureau of the Budget that this report is in accord with the program of the President.

Very truly yours,

AMBROSE O'CONNELL,
Acting Postmaster General, Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. First, I congratulate the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations for the work they have done on this bill. Every member worked hard and we also had one member of the Committee on Appropriations, not assigned to this committee, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN], who did valuable work. To the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], I offer congratulations. He displayed business judgment and ability in everything he did in handling the hearings, and I have not seen anything like it on any appropriation committee for several years.

Notwithstanding the fact that this appropriation has increased $626,301 over and above the appropriation of last year, the law creating additional secretaries had a great deal to do with that. We increased the clerk hire, and all but 12 Members of Congress took out the total amount allowed for clerk hire, with the exception of a number of Members who increased the clerks in their offices and still had something remaining, not using the whole sum total allowed by the Congress.

As to the item we have discussed here today of $350,000 for repair of the terrace, sometimes I have questioned whether we ought to go ahead at this time and spend that money. Yet there has been much speculation as to the fact that the Capitol ought to be kept in good shape because it is really the Capitol of the country, and for that reason I went along with the committee on that item. It certainly is a needed expense, if not now, some future time.

The expenses for the running of the Senate are included in this bill. There are 96 Senators. We have allowed them in the bill $3,866,464. We have 435 Members of the House, and the total sum allowed for the membership of the House and all of the expenses incurred by the membership of the House is $9,115,488. In other words, we have more than four times as many Members of the House as in the Senate, and yet the Senate appropriation is about 50 percent as large as that of the House, and we are supposed not to have anything to say with reference to the expenditures of the United States Senate. I call that to the attention of the Members as food for thought, and especially to the Senate itself.

We added to the amount for the Library of Congress $100,000 for binding new volumes. We have increased the size of the Library almost 100 percent. That increase in size is going to require permission to file a great number of volumes that are still uncharted, as we say. We have added $100,000 in this bill to get many books in shape so that when they put them in the new Library they will be preserved.

Next, there is the item of $135,000 which was left off from the congressional allotment of appropriations in 1939 but has been restored this year. The chairman of the committee in charge of this bill has not made any opposition to giving the Joint Committee on Printing an opportunity to go ahead, and make this saving, if they see fit, by adopting a new regulation so that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be printed in three columns instead of two, as now published, and as a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, I am sure we ought to take advantage of the present suggestion by the Public Printer, and as was stated by the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], that saving should have gone into effect a year ago. I am in hopes that the Joint Committee on Printing will take advantage of this proposed change in the style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Notwithstanding the fact that this bill carries $23,907,744, we cut the amount of the Budget $1,177,868. If I had the running of this myself, I think I could cut it down a whole lot more—no mistake about that. Lots of things go on on Capitol Hill where we could practice economy, but when we think of the total amount that the Senate and the House use, in an appropriation of almost $24,000,000, and that the Congress will appropriate for one battleship from $90,000,000 to $115,000,000, and when we think of the amount of the appropriations we have already made this year, I question whether the Appropriations Committee and the membership of the House should not economize more in the appropriations for the other departments of Government. The appropriations that have been made this year, including the amount that the Senate put on the agricultural appropriation bill of $208,968,584, amounts now to $5,480,146,435. That also includes the authorization that we made yesterday of $660,000,000 for the increase of the Navy. If the House appropriates that money, then we have not saved very much money up to this time this year, because the total appropriations for the same bills last year amounted to $5,835,049,962. We still have to get the Army appropriation bill. The bill which we are now considering for the legislative establishment increases the amount by $626,301 over the last year's appropriation. We have yet to come to the District of Columbia appropriation and the relief appropriation bill which I understand the President has sent to the Committee on Appropriations for study and which amounts now to about $1,100,000,000.

So you can see that with the total receipts last year, 1939, of the Federal Government, $5,667,823,625.59, where we are going to be in a year probably two billion more in the red. Again I ask you, where are you going to get the money? [Applause.]

Let me call your attention to the fact that on March 8, since July 1 of last year, we have gone in the red $2,710,948,685. It is terrible, men, it is awful—what do you say?

Let me call your attention to the fact that on March 10, 1933, the President of the United States made this statement to the House of Representatives and to the Senate:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

If that was his opinion then why does he not say more now after 10 years of the road to bankruptcy?

He also made this statement:

With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed. Our Government's house is not in order, and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.

Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rests the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects these fundamental human values. It therefore becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

It is too late for a leisurely approach to this problem. We must not wait to act several months hence. The emergency is accentuated by the necessity of meeting great refunding operations this spring.

We must move with a direct and resolute purpose now. The Members of Congress and I are pledged to immediate economy.

Now, that was 7 years ago. We have been traveling on this road that the President mentioned 3 years previous to that, but since that time the road has become rougher and more rocky and more blocks have been put in front of him every day. Yet he lets it go. He does nothing about it. Why?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

But instead of him trying to cut down on Government expenses and doing the things that he said when he came before the Congress, doing those things which he promised the American people before he took office he would do, please tell me under the name of heaven, where is the President of the United States with his Economy Committee that he had the Congress create in 1933? Where are those economies he is talking about? He has been the most extravagant President we ever had. He is the greatest spender of all history in all the world. There is nobody on the Democratic side of this House who can name one man who has ever approached him in his asking. No one can approach him in his spending. I say to the Congress of the United States when they gave the President of the United States the first $4,880,000,000 that he asked for, it was the worst thing you ever did to the President of the United States. It was the worst thing you ever did to this Nation of ours. Add to that the $17,000,000,000 you have given him for the purpose of what he called "relief," and it is worse yet. That money has been squandered and wasted in doing things that were most unsound, illogical, and unjust; building that great national debt up to a point where it is going to be left to our children and our children's children to pay. It could have been one-fourth as much and no one would have suffered.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I would like to yield, but the gentleman can get all the time he wants to defend the President of the United States. I defended him the first 3 months he was in office when he made those statements, but when he started to go on a spending spree and turning somersault after somersault to get money out of the Members of Congress and the public when they rubber stamped practically every bill he wanted and handed him all the money which he wasted in extravagance, I refuse to follow him further. I am glad of that. I would not be a rubber stamp for any man. Our national debt has been increased each year since Mr. Roosevelt took office. Never near a balance. Just look at the great number of buildings he has put up; the great number of expenditures for expansions in parks and nonessentials, things that will add to the annual national burden. Much of that money actually was squandered and wasted.

Now, gentlemen, I hope that when it comes to the relief money that they will ask for this year the Members will vote for relief to be sent back to the States in direct proportion to their needs, but let the people back home raise part of the money and help defray the cost of Government and not try to get it all out of the Federal Treasury, just because they think it is easy picking. The Treasury of the United States, from which they have been getting this money, is certainly empty now. You have about reached the national debt limit. So let us try to economize and try to be thrifty. "Have thrift" as our watchword, and not squander and spend, spend, spend.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Does not the gentleman know that the sponsors in the present program must contribute 25 percent now?

Mr. RICH. If you will get relief out of politics and put it on merit, instead of letting the Federal Government try to take care of the needs of all the people of this country, we will get somewhere. Let the Federal Government furnish its part of the money, and let the legislatures have some responsibility. Let the local communities have some responsibility. They think it is not costing them anything, and you are only fooling the people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDELSTEIN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. EDELSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, March 18 is the anniversary of the birthday of Dr. William I. Sirovich, who, until he passed away last December, so ably represented the Fourteenth District of New York in this House for 13 years. As his successor in office, it is my privilege and responsibility to carry on along the path Dr. Sirovich blazed. In honor of his memory and to commemorate his birth, it is only fitting to present to you the entire career of this gifted personality, who, only a brief few months ago, was in the land of the living, strenuously engaged in serving his God, his country, and his community. His untimely and unexpected death 2 weeks before the beginning of the present session deprived the people of that district of one who had distinguished himself by his self-sacrificing work for democracy and humanity.

The span of his 58 years is a chronicle of the opportunities offered by democracy. Dr. Sirovich accepted them, used them, and repaid them a hundredfold, by strengthening our democracy, by creating opportunities for the oppressed, the underprivileged, and the persecuted. His activities in behalf of the public welfare were confined to no one field. He was not a physician in the narrow sense only. His task was to apply himself, under the oath of Hippocrates, to the entire field of human endeavor. The practically unlimited scope of his interests did not mean that his numerous talents were spread too thinly, for he was no "jack of all trades and master of none." Unfortunately, the driving energy which underlay all his work wore out the physical structure too soon, while his mind was still in its full vigor. He warned his colleagues of this danger but failed to heed his own good advice.

Except for the first few years in the city of his birth, York, Pa., he spent his entire life on the East Side of New York City. There he was reared and educated, and there he began his efforts to improve the lot of the poor and the needy. His early education, including a bachelor of arts degree from the College of the City of New York in 1902, he obtained because of democracy's belief in public education. His subsequent formal education—for he never ceased his studies—he obtained through his own endeavors. He taught in the city's public schools, and with this money he attended Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons. In 1906, he received his degrees both as a doctor of medicine and as a master of arts.

For two decades, until he was elected a Member of the Seventieth Congress, he devoted himself to public service, rewarded only by the high esteem of his entire community, and often furthering such work with his own funds. Three Governors and three mayors appointed Dr. Sirovich to public posts. For 20 years he was a member and chairman of his local school board. He successfully appeared before the legislature to urge improved salary laws for teachers.

As a member of the State Commission on Widows' Pensions, he toured the United States at his own expense to study the methods of other States in handling this problem. He used his studies in writing the State's present Child-Welfare Law. As vice president of the Board of Child Welfare, he inaugurated a complete health service for orphans under its jurisdiction. He also was a member of the State charities committee, State Hospital Commission, and the State Prison Commission. It was he who fostered the establishment of vocational education in the State's prison system.

Even then, Dr. Sirovich knew the need of a fair deal between capital and labor. In those days he realized that the balance against labor needed redressing. He appeared before the State legislature to urge the adoption of an adequate employers' liability law, and again in support of workmen's compensation. His judicial temperament, which could decide on the facts and not on his acknowledged sympathy for labor, as well as his acquaintance with the industry's technique made him invaluable as impartial arbitrator between the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, and the Manufacturers' Association. He served in that arduous post for 2 years before the press of duties called him elsewhere. In that time he handed down many decisions on the controversies which still vex that industry. His calm and soothing manner, his willingness to listen patiently until each side had fully presented its case, his suggestions of reasonable compromises, his fair decision where both sides could not agree, earned him the approbation of all in the industry.

Dr. Sirovich's father was a Rabbi, and his son was reared in the Hebraic faith. In his manhood, he did not desert that creed, and he gave of his strength to it. When the civilized world was horrified by the government-instigated pogroms of Russia's "Black Hundreds," he was one of the four leading spirits who organized the American Citizens Committee to abrogate the Russo-American Treaty. He persevered in that task until that treaty was denounced by our Government. His faith was not based on a rigid sectarianism, however. He freely gave of his goodness and energy to all individuals who called to him for succor, irrespective of their race, creed, or color.

As an educator, Dr. Sirovich firmly believed in adult education. Throughout his life, he did not cease to educate himself, although he held three degrees from institutions of higher learning. To aid others he wrote for newspapers and periodicals and he lectured for the Board of Education at Cooper Union, Carnegie Hall, and the Metropolitan Opera House.

All this time Dr. Sirovich practiced medicine among those in need and distress in the community in which he had been raised. A great deal of his service was rendered without remuneration. Conditions among the immigrants strongly impressed him with the need of medical welfare and Americanization work in their behalf. To see the need was to fulfill it. He intervened in many cases to prevent unjust deportations in cases of hardship.

His recognized talent as a diagnostician and surgeon led to his election to the American College of Physicians and Surgeons. For 20 years he served, again without compensation, except the reward of a job well done, as Superintendent of Peoples' Hospital. His forceful administration and keen executive ability revitalized the hospital.

For 20 years, with courage, vision, ability, and energy, Dr. Sirovich had served his community in many ways, all without thought of compensation. In 1926 the Fourteenth New York Congressional District chose him as its Representative in the Seventieth Congress. So well did he do his work that it reelected him to each succeeding Congress, including this one, with ever-increasing majorities.

As a Member of this honorable body, he regarded himself as the guardian of a public trust, requiring ever new and greater effort on his part. He brought to bear on his congressional duties those same qualities which had made him a faithful public servant before. As always, he represented the underprivileged and the oppressed, "those who were not able to help themselves."

The first bill he introduced as a Congressman was one to provide for old-age pensions. He also fought for unemployment insurance and child welfare. These bills were in advance of their time, and then, unlike now, lacked popular support. In a Republican-controlled House they were foredoomed to a silent death in committee. However, the indomitable heart and mind of Dr. Sirovich did not surrender to defeat so easily. Today the measures for which he fought so valiantly are part of the New Deal embodied in the various titles of the Social Security Act.

The major part of Dr. Sirovich's district consisted, and, much to his regret and mine, still contains inadequate housing facilities. The Wagner Housing Act of 1937 was considered by him to be a brave start along the right road. He took an active part to secure consideration, at the first session of this Congress, of amendments intended to increase the lending limits of the Housing Authority.

His statesmanship was not limited by the territorial boundaries of his district. When the Morro Castle disaster shocked the Nation, Dr. Sirovich, like other leaders in Congress, could not tolerate such wanton waste of lives. As ranking member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, he took an active part in the ensuing hearings. His vigorous tenacity obtained the enactment of a modernized safety-at-sea code to make repetition of such a sea disaster impossible. Although none of his constituents "went down to the sea in ships," he took an active interest in the working conditions of seamen. One of the last measures he introduced was to provide an unemployment insurance system for them. To him it mattered not whether the problem affected his district or the Nation as a whole. His breadth of vision enlisted his aid for all causes of benefit to the Nation.

As a writer, he early became aware of the problems of those who lived on their literary and musical creations. As chairman of the Committee on Patents and Copyrights, he did much to aid them. He believed that the Government could and should aid artists. He introduced, at each session, a bill to establish a Department of Fine Arts, so that this country might approach, as well as it could "the glory that was Greece." The various arts projects of the W. P. A. were in no small measure derived from his efforts, and he strongly opposed their hamstringing in the last relief bill.

Dr. Sirovich was a firm believer in a strong civil-service system as the best means of dispatching public business efficiently, and promoting democracy. He understood the problems of Federal employees, and he fought for the recognition of their just claims.

His circle of friends was a symbol of his personality. His talent for friendship won him admirers in all walks of life. "Friend" was no empty word to him. To those to whom he gave that meaningful title he gave unswerving loyalty. His last words on the floor of this House just before the adjournment of the special session were in defense of a friend. Typically, he charged to the attack by saying:

> It takes a lifetime for a man to build up an honorable character. It takes but a moment to destroy it.

He was an ardent admirer and close friend of President Roosevelt. As such he was a true Democrat and a stanch new dealer. He abhorred pretense and sham and outspokenly opposed dictatorship and religious and racial oppression. His knowledge of these hateful symptoms of a world in turmoil was gained at first hand from his travels in Europe and Asia.

I know this to be but a brief and inadequate summary of the career of a great man whose entire life was devoted to public service without thought of personal aggrandizement. He was a bachelor and, although he bestowed a full measure of love on his sisters and their children, he was the devoted "stepfather of 40,000 orphans." Democracy's advantages had made him a man. His use of those opportunities more than repaid that democracy. His distinguished public services, long recognized, were rewarded by the receipt of an alumni public-service medal from his alma mater.

The Lord has called Dr. Sirovich from our midst. His unflagging zeal, his determination to finish the tasks ahead, his untiring mental energy no longer aid us in realizing the objectives we seek to accomplish. Although there are others to carry on, his passing will long be mourned. Of him it can well be said:

To live in hearts we leave behind
Is not to die.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, there are no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as read through line 20, on page 11, the first portion dealing with the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think we should read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territories and Insular Affairs—clerk, $3,900; assistant clerk, $2,580; two assistant clerks at $2,220 each; assistant clerk, $2,000; additional clerk, $1,800; in all, $505,960.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take the floor at this time to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. I notice certain language in various places throughout the bill, on page 2, referring to the Senate, for instance, appears the following:

Chief Clerk, who shall perform the duties of reading clerk, $5,500, and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; financial clerk, $5,000, and $2,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; Parliamentarian, $5,000, and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

And again, on page 12, referring to the House of Representatives, we find the language:

Parliamentarian, $5,000, and $2,500 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

Also $1,000 for compiling digest of rules, making a total of $8,500.

I am not criticizing the present incumbent, but in my opinion I think this is a poor way to legislate and would like to know from the chairman of the subcommittee the purpose of this language.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to answer my colleague from Michigan.

The original sum sets forth the base pay for the office. The additional amount carried is an increase given to the present incumbent of the particular office so long as he holds the office. If language of that sort were not in the bill and the base rate went up, for instance, from $4,000 to $5,000, the next incumbent would take the position at $5,000. The reason for handling it in this manner is to protect the base rates for these positions and to reward people who have served long periods of time or who have performed extraordinary service. It has been done in this way for years and years, long before either of us came to Congress.

Mr. HOOK. Yes; but this is not a question of longevity; it just provides for the position of the present incumbent, does it not?

Mr. RABAUT. To the extent of the additional amount.

Mr. HOOK. All right. It does not pro rate as to number of years; it does not pro rate as to ability; it is based only on the present incumbent.

Mr. RABAUT. It lies within the power and discretion of those who appear to recommend and of the committee to grant these advances, and they are limited just as the language expresses it, to the present incumbents; they get a certain increase. It is a custom that has prevailed for years. I had no indication that the gentleman even had this in contemplation, although he has been sitting next to me all day.

Mr. HOOK. Just a minute. It would apply not only to "the present incumbent" while he continuously holds the office, but also if he came back after a lapse of service.

Mr. RABAUT. If the gentleman refers to the item which in total gives the present incumbent $7,500, how much is the base?

Mr. HOOK. I am referring to the language "$1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. RABAUT. All right. The base rate for that particular position is $5,500. This additional amount raises the salary to $6,500. If he has been here over a period of 5 years, 10 years, or 15 years, in many instances because of additional work heaped upon him or because of some particular qualifications, he may well deserve an increase or promotion, and this is the only way in which it can be done without disturbing the base pay of the position. As I say, this is a custom that has prevailed for many years, and these recommendations are concurred in by both the majority and minority leaders of the House.

Mr. HOOK. That does not apply to every present incumbent now employed in the legislative establishment, but just to certain present incumbents?

Mr. RABAUT. No, it does not; for if the increase were to be given to everybody, there would be no necessity for this specific language.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me say this to the gentleman: Those who have been here a long time know that there are certain specialized positions around the Capitol. When a new man comes to those places it takes him a long time to learn the work. Sometimes he is never worth any more than the base salary. Sometimes he does not prove capable enough. Sometimes after 2 or 3 years someone may want to take him out of this employment when he learns it and give him private employment. That is the reason why this provision is in here. In order to hold these very capable, these very highly specialized employees, it is necessary many times to add these additional amounts. It has been done many, many years, and it should be done for the simple reason, let me repeat to the gentleman, that the work of many of these employees is of such a highly technical nature that the House would really be crippled in its operations if their services were lost.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will go back into history he will find that, regardless of what political party is in power, those employees who have received this recognition are held in their same positions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is to be congratulated on inserting this provision in the bill and making it apply to the present incumbents in this case. I know of instances where it has been done in reference to Federal judges sitting in this country; and, as has been stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], chairman of the subcommittee, if this provision were not put in there, then the base pay is increased and the successor of the present incumbent would start at a higher salary. I believe this is a very commendable provision.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the minority employees authorized and named in the House Resolutions numbered 51 and 53 of December 11, 1931, and numbered 281 of July 21, 1937: Two, at $5,000 each; one, at $3,000; two, at $2,820 each; one, at $3,600; and $300 additional while the position is held by the present incumbent (minority pair clerk, House Resolution numbered 313 of August 7, 1935); in all, $22,540.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill a question. Who is this $3,000 for?

Mr. RABAUT. That is for a minority employee, Mr. Griffin.

Mr. SEGER. I thank the gentleman.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Attending physician's office: For medical supplies, equipment, and contingent expenses of the emergency room and for the attending physician and his assistants, including an allowance of not to exceed $30 per month each to three assistants as provided by the House resolutions adopted July 1, 1930, and January 20, 1932, $4,000, of which sum $500 shall be available immediately.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph beginning on page 22, line 22, and ending on page 23, line 3, on the ground this is not authorized by law. I see by the paragraph that a House resolution adopted on July 1, 1930, and a House resolution of January 20, 1932, are referred to. I have been unable to obtain copies of these resolutions although I have sent to the folding room. I am informed they are not available. I therefore make the point of order that the activities and the things provided for in that paragraph are not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, on page 25 of the Journal of the House of Representatives of December 5, 1928, under the caption, "Medical officer for the House," appears a resolution, adopted by unanimous consent:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to detail a medical officer of the Navy to be in attendance at the Hall of the House of Representatives during the sessions of such House.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. What is the date of that resolution, and is that one of the resolutions referred to in the bill now before us?

Mr. RABAUT. This is dated December 5, 1928, and is the original resolution of authorization for this office. It was presented by Mr. Britten and, as I remember it, Mr. Britten was an outstanding Republican, and chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee at that time. This resolution provides for the detail of a doctor from the Navy to the Hall of the House of Representatives. It is House Resolution 253, of the Seventieth Congress.

Mr. CARTER. What do the resolutions referred to in this bill provide?

Mr. RABAUT. In the Legislative Appropriation Act, approved on June 30, 1932, there is a provision, title I, section 4, listed on page 399 of the Statutes, Seventy-second Congress, side caption "Capitol physician," reading as follows:

The detail of the present incumbent as attending physician at the Capitol shall be continued until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman be so kind as to read the original resolution again—the one of 1928?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes. On page 25 of the Journal of the House of Representatives of December 5, 1928:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to detail a medical officer of the Navy to be in attendance at the Hall of the House of Representatives during the sessions of such House.

That is House Resolution No. 253.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard further on the point of order.

Mr. RABAUT. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] want any further resolutions?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I would like to have the ones referred to here.

Mr. RABAUT. Here is one dated July 1, 1930, being House Resolution 271, Seventy-first Congress:

Resolved, That until otherwise provided by law, there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House an allowance of not to exceed $30 per month each to the two assistants in the office of the attending physician.

Further substantiating the fact that there is a physician to the House of Representatives.

Here is another resolution, dated January 20, 1932, being House Resolution 111, Seventy-second Congress:

ADDITIONAL PHYSICIAN OFFICE ASSISTANTS

Resolved, That the number of assistants in the attending physician's office of the House of Representatives shall be increased from two to three and the allowance of $30 per month for the one additional man shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

This all proves that there is a physician in attendance at the House of Representatives. Therefore, if we have a physician to the House of Representatives, it is in order to provide for the equipment of the office of the physician and the necessary supplies which are incident to the continuation of that office.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, my contention is that the detailing of a medical officer for the House of Representatives by the Navy Department does not carry with it an authorization to purchase drugs and medicines for the entire membership of the House.

It does not carry with it an authorization for equipment, and it does not carry with it an authorization for contingent expenses or for expenses of the establishment of an emergency room.

I have read the hearings recently held before the subcommittee in reference to the office of the medical officer. The only testimony given there, and it is very brief, covering about one-half of one page, is to the effect that they needed some additional money for the purchase of drugs. The purchase of drugs is a separate and distinct matter from that of rendering medical service and attention. Therefore, I say it was not the intent of the Congress to saddle upon the taxpayers of this country the burden of buying drugs for Members of Congress when the Congress permitted the detailing of a medical officer from the Navy Department.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COSTELLO). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from California makes a point of order against the language contained in the bill, starting at line 22 on page 22 and going down to and including line 3 on page 23. The language of this paragraph provides for the office of the attending physician at the Capitol.

The Chair believes that the gentleman from Michigan has very clearly shown from the citations he has read that the position of attending physician has been definitely established by law. Likewise, the two resolutions referred to in the language in lines 1 and 2 on page 23 definitely authorize the creation of the positions of the three assistants to the attending physician.

The gentleman from California raises a further question regarding the sum of money that many be available for the use of medicines and other equipment in the office of the attending physician. The Chair does not believe there is any question but that whenever the Congress has created an office such act carries with it the right of such office to have the equipment necessary to carry out its work. The organic law that creates a department necessarily implies the authority for the contingent expenses that are incident to the maintenance of that office.

A similar incident occurred on February 13, 1919, and reference to it may be found in section 1273 of volume 7, Cannon's Precedents:

On February 13, 1919, the Army appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the Clerk read the following paragraph:

"For contingent expenses of the Military Intelligence Division, General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books, professional books of reference; subscription to newspapers and periodicals; drafting and messenger service; and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; the cost of special instruction at home and abroad, and in maintenance of students and attachés; and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $200,000."

A question was raised as to the propriety of the expenditures, and the Chairman rules:

If a particular Army officer, drawing an Army salary, is assigned to do a particular work, and in connection with that work incurs certain expenses, the Chair cannot see why that is not an appropriate Army expense, to be paid out of the contingent allowance for Army expenses. So far as the Chair has been furnished with any information, it has been of an argumentative character; and, dealing with that, the Chair thinks this is clearly an Army expense, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

In that particular case, when the War Department was authorized to carry on certain functions in connection with military intelligence, it also was proper for the Department to carry on other activities such as educating and training military personnel for such work.

The Chair feel that in this particular instance, where the office of attending physician has been established, the supplying of medicine for the use of the persons calling upon the attending physician for his assistance is a proper expenditure. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order of the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: On page 22, beginning in line 22, strike out all down to and including line 3 on page 23.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I propose to strike out the paragraph relating to the attending physician's office. This amendment does not abolish the office of the attending physician but it does prevent the expenditure of this $4,000 for medical supplies, equipment, and contingent expenses, and also takes $30 per month off the salary of certain attendants there. These persons are already Government employees and are drawing a salary from some other branch of the Government. There is no way, may I say in passing, of telling from this appropriation item how much the office of the attending physician costs, because the attending physician is paid from a different source, his automobile is supplied by funds from a different source, and his assistants are paid from funds from a different source.

Under the ruling the Chair has just made, the taxpayers of this country are required not only to furnish medical attention but anything else the physician may believe necessary and essential in carrying out the duties of his office. This physician would be required to furnish canes, crutches, and wheel chairs, and anything else of that nature.

I for one believe that I should buy my own medicines and pay for them. I do not believe this Congress should shift that burden to the taxpayers of this country. Personally, I believe it is very questionable whether we should have an attending physician here at the expense of the taxpayers. If we want to get a physician at our own expense—and we could do it at a small fraction of the cost of this office if we desired to do it—that is our business, but when we load this cost on the taxpayers of the country I believe we are burdening them unduly.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I would suggest that if the gentleman has such qualms of conscience whenever he sees the House physician in an emergency, he ought to leave $2 on the desk for him.

Mr. CARTER. I thank the gentleman for his great contribution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman has attacked, as I understand, the appropriation for the three enlisted men who are assigned here to this office.

Mr. CARTER. I want to say to the gentleman that I do not know who the men are or anything about that and I have not attacked them. I said that they are drawing a salary from another source.

Mr. WARREN. I did not say the gentleman attacked them, I said he is attacking the appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. There are three enlisted men who are, of course, paid by the Navy and under two House resolutions it was provided that they should receive $30 a month so long as they were assigned up here. Of course, the gentleman's party established this office and the gentleman's party also assigned two of these three men to this office. The reason that they are paid this $30 as an allowance is for the meals that they must eat while they are assigned here and for certain civilian clothes that they must purchase during the year or during their assignment here.

Mr. CARTER. I say that if we need assistants there, we should not draft them from the Navy, but we should establish a budget for the physician's office and be frank and fair about it and lay all of the cards on the table right here before the House.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Commenting further on the three enlisted men who are assigned to the physician's office, the base pay of these chief pharmacist mates is $125 a month. It is true that the Navy allows them subsistence, meals, and quarters, but you will find what they pay the enlisted man for his eats and for his quarters is not adequate to meet the present-day costs, so that $30 added to the $125 does not fully compensate the chief pharmacist mates who are assigned to the office of the physician.

Mr. CARTER. I am not saying that this amount is too much, I am saying that whatever it is, the Members of this House should not burden the taxpayers of the country with it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a distinguished Member of this body, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the late Honorable Martin Madden, was stricken in his office just to our left. I remember the day. There was no physician available, although at the time there were several physicians who were Members of this House. Martin Madden passed away. He was my personal friend, and I admired him. It was stated by several physicians if medical attention could have been secured without delay, Mr. Madden might have been saved. After his death, Hon. Fred Britten, of Illinois, who, I think, up to the time he left this body had served longer on the Republican side than any Member, was responsible for the assignment of a physician to the Capitol. When that physician came here, two enlisted men, classified as pharmacist mates, came with him. One is a chemist; the other had served abroad during the World War, performing duties of a medical officer with a company of marines. He was in several engagements. He has been in the service nearly 30 years, starting at an early age. I would say that he is qualified to act as a physician himself, although, of course, he has never received such a diploma. He has had the practical experience during his long service.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a minute I will yield.

I have a personal interest in this office. It so happens that I was stricken myself 5 years ago, and I went to the office of the physician at half past eleven. I was placed on one of the cots by Dr. Calver. At about quarter after twelve the bells rang for a vote, and I came up here to answer to my name. For nearly 10 years I had never missed a roll call in this House, and I did not want to break that record. The doctor followed me to the floor, and in 10 minutes I was taken to the hospital. I remained on my back for several months and was away from the Capitol for nearly 9 months. Had Dr. Calver not been downstairs, I would not be here today. Immediate attention saved me. Such attention might have saved Martin Madden. I know of a number of Members who have been stricken on the floor who have been given emergency treatment, rushed to the hospital, who are with us today.
